The famous Brooklyn preacher, at whom these shafts have been levelled with more or less directness, and who is held largely responsible for the shock inflicted upon the feelings of pious people, finds he has but escaped one sea of troubles to flounder in another. Indeed, though not a special ally of the pulpit star whose light has been so suddenly and sadly obscured, we cannot but feel that justice has scarcely been done to him in this instance.

Of course if it is proper for Mr. Beecher to preach in Brooklyn, it is equally so to preach at the White Mountains; nor is he more to blame because he draws a large congregation in the one case than the other. He is not necessarily responsible for the character or motives of those who hear him; nor is it his fault if hotels or railroads turn the occasion to their advantage.

Indeed, if the preaching of the gospel is so potent to save the world as is represented, and if the fashionable, the pleasure-seekers, the thoughtless, idle, and vicious are those it is particularly desirable to reach, one would suppose any attraction that would draw them towards such an influence would be hailed with gladness.

The objections urged in regard to Mr. Beecher's preaching at the White Mountains hold with equal force to camp-meetings. I am at a loss to understand how any one can consistently disapprove of the former and approve of the latter. Yet such appears to be the case with respect to some of these critics. There is good reason to attribute this fresh assault upon Mr. Beecher, we suspect, to other motives than those at first apparent. It affords very clear evidence that he has lost greatly in the deference he has been wont to receive from his brethren, accompanied, it may be, with some symptoms of long pent-up but now liberated feelings of jealousy.

There is also to be noted, we think, the indication of a disposition to turn the circumstances to account in an effort to secure the restoration of the Puritan Sabbath. That this last has been the real source of no small share of the adverse comments, we have little doubt. The immense crowds which have flocked to hear Mr. Beecher this summer, and which still flock, should not be wholly regarded as evidence of popular confidence and respect, nor altogether attributed to the attractive power of his oratory. There is a truer explanation found in the single word sensationalism.

It is quite probable that of the thousands who thronged to his speaking there was but an insignificant fraction who had any real interest in him personally, or regard for what he uttered. They contributed to swell the multitude because his preaching and presence had been assiduously heralded in the regions round about,—because it had created a great noise and caused much talking; and, when we say this, we have sounded the depth of a very large measure of the popular enthusiasm in respect to one thing or another which we witness in society. We have discovered the secret of much of the apparent success of life, one of the most potent influences that sway the average mind of man. It is a characteristic of the lower orders of the animal kingdom that when one leads the others follow. This is true, also, of the human species. We are naturally disposed to follow in the wake of others, to fall into their ways of action. Our social sympathies, distrust of ourselves, and tendency to confide in the judgment of our fellows, incline us to be borne along in the current of the throng. We are like the little child who trustingly lends his hand to an elder companion, and is led from sight to sight as he drinks in with innocent and unquestioning delight the stores of superior wisdom. Most men are particularly like children in being captivated and allured by what is startling or productive of clamor and show. This is especially true of the more uncultured and thoughtless, but of all in a larger degree than they are aware. Nothing thrives like humbug. The fondness for novelty and excitement, the disposition to be led by imagination and fancy rather than sober, common sense, that distinguishes a large portion of mankind, make the success of imposture and charlatanism, when practised with adroitness and skill, comparatively easy. The tendency to play upon this characteristic of human nature, in other words, the power of sensationalism, is witnessed in all departments of life. Even the pulpit and the church are no exception. A very large amount of the popular church-going, or what passes for worship on Sunday, is of this type. The simple fact that the service attracts a large concourse; that it is in a big place; that its ideas are startling, marvellous, and mysterious; that they are spun out of the imagination and founded for the most part on fiction; that they pertain to the supernatural and deal with things foreign to this life far more than with common daily duties and interests,—have much to do in kindling and sustaining the devotion exhibited.

The preacher who introduces the most dramatic effect into the pulpit, whose voice is most sonorous, whose declamation is the most impassioned, whose metaphors and language are the most extravagant, whose themes are most quaint or curious, who secures the fullest reports in the newspapers (sometimes by bribing the reporter), is not unfrequently the bright, particular star of his profession. Passing by numerous illustrations in point, we find a conspicuous one, though not strictly analogous to those just described, in the career of the distinguished revivalists who have of late so remarkably quickened the smouldering embers of the church.

Much has been said in regard to the labors of these apostles of the perishing creeds. They have been elaborately written up and decanted upon by eminent divines, and pronounced "the Lord's work." If we credit the newspapers, we might suppose that Messrs. Moody and Sankey were, in almost every particular, unlike those of their class who have preceded them.

I have taken some pains to inform myself in regard to this. That there are some features of attractive novelty in their methods; that they are partially relieved of the coarser and harsher distinctions of the old-time revivalists; that they appeal more directly to the sympathetic and affectional side of human nature, and lay a greater stress upon fine music and singing, is no doubt true; but that their preaching is other than the common stock-in-trade of ultra-orthodoxy, or their movement other than purely sensational, I have failed to discover.

The fallen nature of man, the atonement, man's need of regeneration, the perils of an unconverted life, and a future hell, appear among the most prominent doctrines of their discourses. The reporters who have interviewed them pronounce them men of moderate intelligence and culture. There has been a theory in the Church that the less a person knows, the more competent he is to preach the gospel; and, as a general rule, revivalists seem to adopt this principle.

One thing must be confessed, to the praise of Messrs. Moody and Sankey: they appear to be in downright earnest, and this is good in itself. It would be well if radicals were more largely affected in the same way; although it must be admitted that, in the words of Paul, "zeal is not always according to knowledge."

In estimating the labors of these men, it is evident that the coöperation and assistance (pecuniary and other) they have received from zealous church-people have not been sufficiently taken into account; or the wholesale advertising and puffing, through pulpit and press, in their behalf (in many instances, all the churches and clergy of the places they visited becoming their allies), except when deterred by sectarian arrogance, jealousy, or selfishness. That "the work of God" was very largely one of man's, is evidenced by the announcement that its expenses, during the few months of the campaign in England, amounted to nearly $150,000. Even radicalism, we have faith to believe, might boast of a revival, could it devote a similar sum to the purpose. That the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey bids fair to be conducted under similar auspices in this country, we may infer when we see it stated that at Northfield the other day, where they were stopping, the hotels were crowded with persons they had drawn thither, and that there were several delegations in the town, including one of the merchant-princes of New York, with invitations to them from different cities.

It is not surprising that those identified with the theological conceptions in the interest of which these men are laboring, should extol their work, and pronounce it "the Lord's doings and marvellous in their eyes," since they are accustomed thus to view whatever serves the theories to which they are wedded, no matter how; but that a clergyman of the so-called "liberal" school should join in the same strain is somewhat unaccountable. The Rev. Mr. Mayo, of the Unitarian church of Springfield, nevertheless, presents such an example, according to the report of his sermon a few weeks ago. "God does seem, just now," he says, "to be raising up a set of lay-preachers, prophets, and singers, who arrest the attention of all classes of people." He recommends "all who claim to be churchmen and Christian believers to fall into line at once, ready at the call of God to go forward in a new crusade for the coming of his kingdom in the United States." When we recall the fact that Mr. Mayo, though a Unitarian preacher, endorses the movement for a theological amendment to the Constitution, we are better enabled to reconcile these words with the occurrences to which they refer. No, Mr. Mayo. The revival we need in these United States to-day is not the one to which you pay the tribute of commendation. It is not one of the type exemplified by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. We can afford to be indifferent to that without much loss. The one we need will be but poorly effected through sensational efforts, the tendency of which is to leave those they subject to their influence at last worse than at first. The revival we need is one that shall quicken national thought and intelligence, that shall tend to break the bonds of bigotry and superstition, rather than commit men anew to them. What is really needed is a revival of genuine, higher life and character, of social and political purification; a revival that shall put a check upon reckless speculation, loose and unprincipled modes of business, ostentatious and extravagant living in the Church, no less than outside of it; a revival that shall show there are nobler ends to strive for than mere material possessions, and impart a higher appreciation of personal integrity, simple worth, and virtue.

Sensationalism is not confined to religion. It is manifested in all departments of life—in politics, literature, art, trade, society. But we have already extended this article beyond its intended and proper limit, and must postpone the further consideration of the theme, at least for the present. D. H. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir, — The Christian Missionary Societies in Europe and in America are receiving a challenge from an unexpected source, and so formidable that it is very likely to lie on the ground forever.

It would seem as if the far East were ever to be the fons et origo of light. Japan is now rising above the horizon, and making day with wonderful rapidity.

I have before me a copy of the Japan Mail, dated June 10, 1875; and I cannot refrain from an expression of amazement and delight at the production of such a paper in a country not so long ago regarded as barbarian. The paper is now in its sixth volume, and would be a credit to any English or American editor.

The contents of the number before me are as follows: Summary; Arrival and Departure of the Mails, etc. Leading articles: The Financial Statement; The Missionary Ideal; Mr. Consul Robertson's Report; Explanatory Statement of the Estimate of Receipts and Expenditure; British Consular Trade Report; Spirit of the Native Press; Correspondence; Notes of the Fortnight; Shipping Intelligence; Market Report.

The two subjects to which I call special attention are the leading article on "The Missionary Ideal," and the ten pages occupied by "Spirit of the Native Press."

The leading article purports to be a reply to a letter from a Protestant missionary, on page 345 of this Japan Mail, remonstrating with the editor for decrying the Protestant and advocating the Catholic system of discipline.

The editor now defends his position by pointing out the easy, contented, unheroic aspect of the Protestant missionary, and contrasting it with that of the Roman Catholic. He contends that the former system discourages that fervor and enthusiasm which the latter cherishes. But, in doing this, he also unmistakably avows his preference for the Protestant over the Catholic religion in these terms:—

"We should unhesitatingly declare for Protestant missionary exertion, even under what we consider an inferior system, rather than for Roman Catholic missionary exertion under a higher system."

The rest of the article is a trenchant attack upon the inconsistency between the lives led by missionaries and the direct and explicit rules laid down by Christ for the guidance of his disciples. Here and there the editor gently insinuates, as inoffensively as he can, his own alienation of heart from both forms of Christianity.

But it is to the "Spirit of the Native Press" that the greatest attention should be paid. Here we have ten pages of small type covered with extracts from about fifteen native papers, the majority treating entirely of the subjects of missionaries and Christian dogmas. In spite of occasional slips which betray a foreign hand, they exhibit a marvellous acquaintance with the Christian religion, with the New Testament, and (mirabile dictu!) with the weak points in the so-called "evidences."

One writer raises his voice against the foolish credulity with which some nations listen to the missionaries. The key-note of this extract is "Think for yourselves." Then we have remarks on "The Tactics of the Priests," illustrating and condemning the mutual vilification for which rival priesthoods are famous.

The "Introduction of Christianity," "Speculations on Progress," "Inquiry in regard to Foreign Religious Teachings," abound in wise and pithy sayings, betraying the hopelessness of the Christian cause in Japan, and yet manifesting such a desire to get at the truth, and to inculcate right conduct, that we cannot withhold our applause. The question of the possible influence of Christianity in disturbing domestic harmony, and in sowing sedition, is also carefully and impartially discussed.

We next come upon a paper on "Cremation," from which we gather that the government of Japan had at first prohibited cremation, and subsequently withdrew their prohibition.

Perhaps the most interesting of all the papers are those which deal with the Christian dogma of the Resurrection, both as to its mythical origin in gospel history and its application to mankind at large. The writer attributes the myth entirely to the enthusiasm of Mary, which she suddenly communicated to the disciples. Though the view of the subject is one very different to my own, the Japanese analyst has treated it with some originality, and displays careful study of the narratives.

His subsequent chapter on "Rewards and Punishments" and the theory of the "Judgment Day" is extremely able, and well argued throughout. I must give you his closing paragraph:—

"If people are to come forward to be finally judged with their bodies and souls, why not send them to heaven or hell as they are, without dying at all? I asked a foreign clergyman whether it would not be difficult to reconstruct these bodies once more after they were dead; but he replied, 'No! not at all; the power of God is so great that he could turn a piece of grass or wood into a body in an instant.'"

But certainly, with such power as that, he could make people ascend to heaven or descend to hell without dying. Why should he wait until the last day to cast the devil into hell, instead of doing so before, so that his loving children should not be turned away from the right path? To this I do not think there can be any answer."

Nor do we.

One characteristic runs through the whole of these native writings. The Japanese are dearly fond of argument, and are very fair logicians. In this feature there lies as much promise for the enlightenment of their people and the spread of their settled convictions about religion, as there is ground for anxiety and even despair on the part of Christian missionaries to plant their precious gospel successfully in Japan.

We, too, in the Western civilization of which we boast, may have much to learn from this gifted and thoughtful people.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., Sept. 25, 1875.

Communications.

THE INDIAN POLICY.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 5, 1875.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

My dear Sir, — In THE INDEX of August 12, under the head of "Glimpses," you refer to Mr. Marsh and the Indian Commissioner in a manner favorable to Mr. Marsh. Now I have nothing to say for or against the Indian officers referred to. The present Indian system is bad enough, every one knows; and the fraud and corruption connected with it are the natural consequences of such a system. General Grant's attempt to improve it, by placing it under the control of the different sectarian organizations, I believe to have resulted in the worst possible failure; it is becoming more and more clear that such is the case, and I fear the result will be next to throw the Indian Department under the control of the War Department. There could be no greater mistake than such a move. The Indians about all the frontier posts are the most degraded of all, not excepting those crowded together on the Reservations; and I hope, if THE INDEX can say anything on the subject, it will be directed earnestly against such a change. The whole country is aroused to the fact that there must be a change, and a move will be made doubtless in the next Congress to that end, as the argument will be that anything will be an improvement. The Indian Department runs the government now, and the Indian money is the great corrupting fund of the nation. Let the military have that in addition to its present power, and who can divine the consequences, not only to the Indians, but to the nation,—especially if the present administration be continued! For one, I should lose all hope of the republic.

But I did not start to criticize the head of the present administration, or his policy. It would take more pages than you would care to read to mention one half of his acts for the subserving of his selfish ends, one of the most prominent of which is the appointment of his brother-in-law to the control of the sutler-ships of all the posts in the North-west. But of all this you are doubtless better advised than myself. What I wanted to do at the outset was to put you on your guard about placing too much confidence in Mr. Marsh, which might lead you to take up as his defender. I send you a few newspaper articles which, if you will have the patience to read, will give you an idea of the man much better than I can.

We have another man in this State, in the person of the Right Rev. Bishop Whipple, who has exercised almost irresistible power in placing the Indians under the control of "the Church." His long sentimental articles and sermons are just the thing to dupe Eastern people into donating funds to build large and costly churches on the different Reservations. One of his tools, the Rev. Mr. Hindman, who is one of the chief persons selected to treat with the Black Hills Indians at the present time, has been and is in charge of a one-hundred-thousand-dollar church at the Santee Sioux Agency, away up the Missouri River in Nebraska, built with a contribution from some lady in Philadelphia. It is so ridiculous that the Indians themselves make fun of it. Two years ago last spring, I happened to be at this Agency, and called on Mr. Hindman. Asking for a glass of water, it was ordered, and a black servant with white gloves entered, bearing it on a salver! This little circumstance will express to you, doubtless, as it did to me, more than pages of written matter.

On the other corner of the Reservation I found a plain little chapel, with a school conducted by a son of the Rev. Mr. Riggs, who has labored for over thirty years, in a plain, common-sense manner, to instruct and improve that particular tribe. He being forced now to retire on account of old age, his sons are filling his place at different points along the Missouri, away up in the heart of the Indian country. I must not forget in this connection the labors of the Rev. Dr. Williamson and the Rev. Mr. Pond, who labored in the same field. The son of the former, the Rev. John Williamson, is now at the Yankton Sioux Agency. I refer to these men, not because of their particular religious teaching, but because, outside of that, they are plain, honest, earnest men. They have written and systemized the language, so that a large portion of the Dakotas read and write their own language, generally well, which enables them to keep up a large correspondence between the different bands; and it is from their labor, of many years' duration, that the Messrs. Marsh, Hindman, and Whipple are enabled to communicate with the Indians at all.

These new comers are now usurping the field cultivated many years before by those old, quiet, earnest men, under the Grant religious policy. But still the descendants of the faithful pioneers labor on as faithfully, quietly, and unobserved. You hear nothing of them. They seek no public position. None of them is found in the Indian Commissions to treat with the Indians. Yet they are laboring on, in season and out of season; and the result of their labors seems to be, not so much to make sectarians, as to increase the general culture of those under their instruction. So much so, that in the year 1860 (thirty years after the labors of the Messrs. Riggs, Williamson, and Pond commenced), Bishop Whipple visited these Indians, and held a service which he claimed was the first Christian service performed among the Dakotas. The meanness of this claim will the better be appreciated, when it is stated that, in that same service, the Lord's Prayer and a portion of the Scriptures were read, and hymns were sung, all of which had been translated by these old faithful workers years before, from whom they were obtained. It was at this meeting that the bishop proposed to establish a mission among the Dakotas. This was commenced in the autumn of that year by placing in charge of it the Rev. Mr. Hindman, before referred to, then a mere boy.

But into all this I had no idea of entering when I began. I only now ask a little further indulgence, while I give my idea as to what should be the Indian policy for the future; which has not changed since my letter to you over a year ago. There should be no more Indian treaties; no more Reservations should be established; and those already established should be sectionized (surveyed), and every alternate section be subject to settlement by a white family. The remaining Indians should be left in their small bands or families where they are found, and made at once subjects of the government. What the Indian wants is protection, the same as any other citizen; he wants to be a man, not a babe as he is under the present system. Give the Indian the same laws in every respect that any citizen has, and the Indian problem is settled at once. The large Territories should be divided up into smaller ones, and placed under the government of civil authorities. The United States laws should be strict as to the right of each and all, and the courts should have the power to redress all wrongs, and keep the peace. The military should be kept as far from the Indian country as possible. The United States Marshal, under the direction of the court, should be strong enough to protect every section, and his deputies should be composed largely of the most trusty Indians themselves. Let the Indians understand this, and you will hear of no more Indian troubles. All would be interested in keeping the peace, and all would understand how their wrongs could be redressed without resorting to revenge, as the Indians are now forced to do if they get any justice at all. Those Indian families who are disposed to adopt the habits and customs of the whites should be assisted by the government, under the direction of the courts in the Territories in which they belong; but in no instance should the Indian be assisted except for actual labor performed, even if it be on his own house or farm. Of course the old, infirm, and the destitute should be provided for without this requirement; but this could all be done under the direction of the court, without the expense of Agencies and the military. The Indian Territory should at once be thrown open to settlement under the same rules and regulations. I can't conceive of any more short-sighted policy than trying to concentrate all the Indians within that, the fairest portion of the West, to make it the resort of desperadoes, with no laws to restrain them. I suspect, Mr. Abbot, that you will say this subject is not within your province; but I do feel that THE INDEX is more generally read by the thinking minds of the country than any other paper; that its power, if directed a little in this channel, would be almost irresistible; and that the Indians, to whom we are so much indebted, need not be lost to our body politic, in which they ought to be absorbed, and would be in a very few years.

Yours very respectfully, B. M. SMITH.

DO WOMEN DESIRE THE BALLOT?

MY FRIEND ABBOT:—

In THE INDEX of May 6, I find an article by "F. H. G.," claiming to invalidate my preceding remarks, inserted in THE INDEX of March 25. He tells us that men are almost universally qualified to vote understandingly, and would speak, if at all, for good government and good morals. Now if women were voters, this class would be very much larger among them than among men. Thus the aggregate effect would be very bad! This, he says, is a misstatement of his "position" on the subject; which, it seems, I have made by not noticing what he says, that good men and women staying away from the polls, where they should be found, the aggregate effect would, of course, "be bad."

This conceded, let us now look at some of his further remarks. In my former article I attempted to show that the only construction that can be put upon his words is that women are not capable of exercising the wisdom and discretion he ascribes to men. I am called upon to indicate the exact place where that principle of the Constitution of our country—"taxation without representation is tyranny"—can be found. I am aware that the exact words of this important principle are not found in the Constitution; but the substance of it exists there as a necessary implication.

Article I., section two, declares that "taxes shall be apportioned among . . . the whole number of free persons, . . . including those bound to service for a term of years, . . . and all other persons."

Article IV., section two, declares that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States"; and section four: "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government."

How clearly is taxation without representation contradictory of these clauses of the Constitution! Are not women, equally with men, both persons and citizens? To this question there can be but one answer.

I will here cite a few passages from an article on "Female Suffrage" in THE INDEX of May 13, from Haverhill, Mass., and I do it the more willingly because the writer is a woman. In reply to F. H. G., she says: "Because nine of your correspondent's female friends do not want the ballot, is that a reason why the tenth should not have it if she wishes it, and equal justice demands it? I never heard that any woman in asking for the ballot, did it on the ground that all women must vote. I supposed we should have the same privilege the men have to vote or not, just as we pleased. Now no one will deny that the best men in city and town rarely vote, or touch politics at all; the consequence of this is, the men who are least fitted to vote always vote. On the other hand, the ablest women in the land ask for the right; that granted, they will go to the polls, and vote conscientiously, leaving F. H. G.'s nine-tenths of all grades and conditions at home, until they feel the need of being something more than nonentities in regard to the laws that govern them. Again, our friend says, we are subject to the same laws as men, and our property is equally taxed. Is the law just the same for women that it is for men? You can vote away your money and ours, and we can pay whatever you see fit to tax us. If you think we are subject to the same laws put yourself in our place, and see if you would like a man, without a dollar to his name, voting away your money. Would you think you had all the rights you wanted?"

There is also an excellent article in THE INDEX of May 20, likewise by a woman, Sara A. Underwood, which I would like to give at length; but the space occupied by this communication warns me that I must confine myself to the last paragraph: "So long as the elective franchise is allowed to remain the prerogative of the male sex, just so long is there a virtual admission that woman is the inferior and creature of man; and just so far is true progress hampered and hindered. And just so long as this invidious aristocracy of the sex is kept up and believed in, just so long must there remain in the midst of our vaunted civilization an undoubted 'relic of barbarism.'"

That the right of woman suffrage is attracting the close attention of the best and most advanced minds, may be illustrated by a fact of late occurrence in this city. By invitation of the committee selected to revise the Constitution of Pennsylvania, our citizens and others were requested to meet with them one evening, and give their views of the subject embraced in their appointment. Several citizens and others accordingly gave their views. Among them was an intelligent and amiable bishop of one of our churches, who declared emphatically that, if in the instrument they were appointed to prepare they did not confer the right of suffrage on the female part of the community, jointly with the male, then they might rest assured he had cast his last vote.

T. M. C.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 1, 1875.

CHRISTIANITY AND LIBERALITY.

Is it possible for a true believer in the Christian doctrine to be as liberal as the thoroughly developed radical must be? It is just as impossible for a consistent Christian to concede to the Jew, the Mohammedan, or the sceptic the same degree of goodness and happiness which he claims for himself and his fellow-believers, as it would be for a child to be a man. It is chiefly the bias of education, or peculiar mental development, which makes the Jew, the Christian, the Radical, what they are. If a man concedes the same share of goodness and happiness which he enjoys himself to those who differ from him in belief, his mind is developed to the condition of genuine liberality. "We respect the rights of all men," it is said and written alike; but it is carried out in accordance with the various degrees of development of the minds of men. When Francis E. Abbot took, consistently with the development of his own mind, the anti-Christian position, only those could fully agree with him who had congenial minds, and could comprehend the absolute necessity of opposing Christianity because it clashes with universal liberty, which we are compelled to love more than all special forms of religion. The true liberal must strive in order to develop the religion of humanity, and therefore he must be anti-Christian; but he should not cherish the least personal ill-will to Christians, or wish to throw aside all that is covered by the word "Christianity," as even some of our liberal writers seem to imply. My fellow-men, Christians and radicals alike, who have not yet been able to comprehend our stand-point, an all-just God is our witness that we have no desire to be destructive or to do you any harm. No; our only endeavor is to act up to that sense of justice which our Creator has impressed upon our mind, or, as our brother materialist or atheist would say, that which the mind has developed within itself. CARL H. HOESCH.

DOVER, N. H., Oct. 11, 1875.

THE CATHEDRAL OF COLOGNE.

In a letter describing the celebrated Cologne Cathedral, Grace Greenwood says: "Though restored from comparative ruin by Protestant power, it is yet a wonderful emblem, of the inexorable, intolerant, obdurate old Papal faith. Aspiring, outstretching, it is Rome's mediæval dream of ascendancy and supremacy in stone. It is yet one of her dim sanctuaries from the searching light of human reason and knowledge,—one of her strong bulwarks against the rising floods of liberty and humanity. I went into the cathedral for matins. I listened to the chanting, a few sad voices, wandering in a lonely, lost way through the mighty aisles and arches, and then to the organ rolling down its thunders and packing the whole vast nave with heavy harmonies. I came upon a hideous representation of the dead Christ—a carved, life-sized, wooden image, surrounded by emaciated saints and very much dilapidated angels, all figures that would shame a New England idol-maker, and yet all crowned with votive wreaths; and as I stood there, men and women came and knelt in prayer by the central effigy, and devoutly kissed its ghastly feet. More and more these Old World cathedrals seem to me like mighty architectural caves—cavernes de l'homme mort,—in which we find records of the childhood of the world—fossil remains of dead idolatries. We paid our respects at the shrine of the Three Kings of Cologne, whose skulls, crowned with jewels, are shown among the precious relics, many-gems, and much gold of the sacristy. It is a wonderfully brilliant show, that little room under ground, and the church makes a very good thing out of it. She well knows how to utilize her saints. She has not only a life, but a death interest in them. She thrives well on their remains, and works mighty works with their bones, which fact is triumphantly demonstrated by the Church of the Eleven Thousand Virgins, which derives its chief income from the exhibition of the osseous structure of St. Ursula and her great train of maiden martyrs. The sacristy, or 'Golden Chamber,' is the place where they are mostly employed in the decorative way. It is wonderful how much priests and monks can do with the bones of young women, when they really set themselves to work. The Princess Ursula lies in a sarcophagus by herself, behind the church altar; but the skulls of several of her maids of honor are here enclosed in silver cases, like casques; and on shelves are ranged several hundred virgin heads, covered with skull caps, made by the nuns of the monastery once attached to the church. It was ghastly work for rosy fingers and bright eyes. Better embroider smoking caps, or, better still, baby caps. A young priest showed us about, and told us the story of the discovery of the remains of St. Ursula and her companions. They exhumed, he declared, three thousand skeletons the first day, and I half expected him to say, 'It wasn't a good morning for bones either.' Not being a 'bone sharp,' as a Nevada miner called Professor Marsh, I, with a cursory glance, like Charles Lamb on one occasion, 'took them for girls.'"

A BIRD SINGS, a child prattles, but it is the same hymn; hymn indistinct, inarticulate, but full of profound meaning. The child, unlike the bird, has the sombre destiny of humanity before it. . . . The most sublime psalm that can be heard on earth is the lisping of a human soul from the lips of childhood. The confused murmur of thought, which is as yet only instinct, holds a strange, unreasoning appeal to eternal justice; perchance it is a protest against life while standing on its threshold; a protest unconscious, yet heart-rending; this ignorance, smiling at infinity, lays upon all creation the burden of the destiny which shall be offered to this feeble, unarmed creature. If unhappiness comes, it seems like a betrayal of confidence. The babble of an infant is more and less than speech.—Victor Hugo.

WE HAVE heard from time to time of cases of mental derangement of a religious kind arising from the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to this country; but never until last week had we any reason for believing that the malady would reach as far as Southport. Nevertheless, it is a fact, for during the past week the magistrates have been engaged, morning after morning, in hearing informations for the committal of individuals to Lancaster Asylum, all of whom were affected with what is well-known as "a religious mania." From Monday, July 19, up to Saturday, 24, there were no less than five cases of this nature brought before the notice of the magistrates, and were principally males.—Southport (Eng.) News.

EXAMINER (divine of the old school): "Name an instance of benevolence and design united in the native productions of a specified soil." Candidate: "The growth in Spain and Portugal of the cork tree, coincident with that of the vines yielding port and sherry." Examiner: "Very good, indeed, sir. I trust you will live to be a bishop." (Candidate passes with flying colors.)—Independent.

A GRAND international exhibition of electricity, as applied to arts, science, and industry, is to be opened in the Palais de l'Industrie, Paris, on the 1st of July 1877. It is expected that all countries will be largely represented.

GAIL HAMILTON thinks she has found a clear case of genius in a little Cambridge boy who the other day closed his list of the exports of Massachusetts with "many learned men from Harvard College."—Woman's Journal.

THE WORLD is a comedy to those who think, and a tragedy to those who feel.—Sir Horace Walpole.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 "	" 25 "	" 8 "	" 6 "	" 4 "	" 2 "
" 26 "	" 51 "	" 8 "	" 6 "	" 4 "	" 2 "
" 52 "	" 101 "	" 8 "	" 6 "	" 4 "	" 2 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1863 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest. Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE
INDEX ASSOCIATION,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOLD (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 3l vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Living Games for the Fireside. Home Society Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: A Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.....	1.50
Romola.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.50
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
My-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	2.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.00
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
Sister's By the Tapers.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Reier.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart.....	1.50
IX. The Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions. By B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 4 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols. each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.30
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
SOCIOLOGY.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.00
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Italy.....	1.50
Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS.

IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $4.00.

Two Pupils, $4.00; per Pupil, $2.00.

Three " 48.00: " " 16.00.

Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.

Five " 55.00: " " 11.00.

Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.

Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION OF MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

TWO NEW BOOKS.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dame Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LECTURES AND CONVERSATIONS.

FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY

Is prepared to lecture or conduct conversational meetings on the following subjects:—Essential Religion.

Education and Educators in a Republic.

The Ballot for Woman.

Woman: Her Rights and Duties. Marriage.

The Philosophy of the Labor Movement.

The Relation of the Labor Movement to Intemperance, Prostitution, and Crime.

TERMS MODERATE.

Address Box 916, Boston Post-office.

GIVES PERFECT SATISFACTION.

For Sabbath Schools.

THE SHINING RIVER.

For High and Grammar Schools.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR.

The former is by H. S. and W. O. Perkins, and sells for 85 cents per copy in Boards, and $30 per 100. Issued only a few weeks since, but the publishers are showered with commendatory letters, and its praises are sounded everywhere. It will prove a "Shining River" of beauty and melody in hundreds of homes and Sabbath-schools.

The High School Choir is just out, and is a book which no Teacher can fail to admire and introduce. It will be a decided element in the musical advance of the time. Sells for $1.00, or $9.00 per dozen.

NOW READY.

A new collection of most beautiful Hymns and Tunes for Praise Meetings, Prayer Meetings, Camp Meetings, etc., etc., entitled LIVING WATERS.

For Praise Meetings, . . . For Prayer Meetings.

LIVING WATERS.

By D. F. HODGES. Price 30 cents.

Now give new life to the singing in your congregation by introducing a few hundred copies of this delightful work.

Specimen copies of Living Waters, Shining River, or High School Choir, sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN, WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WALTHAM, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1875.

WHOLE No. 305.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

THE JEWS are said to own nearly half of Berlin.

ST. LOUIS has 144 churches, of which the total valuation is $2,939,770. Only $275,640 of this large amount is taxable by local regulations, leaving $2,664,130 wholly exempted from taxation.

BISHOP BOURGET has warned his Montreal flock in a pastoral letter not to interfere riotously with the burial of Guibord's remains, but declares that the grave will be cursed from the moment it is occupied.

THE BANKS of Great Britain hold in coin somewhat over eighty per cent. of their outstanding issues; and the Bank of England has never suspended gold payments for a single day during fifty-four years.

COUNT D'ALVIELLA, the author of the article which occupies the leading place in this week's INDEX, holds an important post in the Belgian government, and has just left for India in company with the Prince of Wales.

A "CENTENNIAL FUND" of $500,000 was voted at Louisville, October 20, by the Christian Missionary Society, to be raised for the Christianization of the negroes of America. Catholics and Protestants alike cast longing looks in that direction.

AN EXTREMELY interesting and valuable essay on the "Rationalistic Churches of London," translated for this journal from the Revue des Deux Mondes, will be found in our present issue, and deserves to be read very carefully by all who can appreciate a thoughtful study of modern religious tendencies.

REV. REUEN THOMAS recently lectured in Brookline, Massachusetts, on "Gladstone and the Pope," and said truly: "The Vatican decrees, if Romanists were faithful to them (and they would repudiate them at their peril), would establish a new form of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope, far more dangerous than the old form, for it extended not only to Italy but to all countries where Romanists were found."

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. This does not apply to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as the reduction is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

BISHOP FERRETTE issues a bright little "Monthly Circular" called New and Old, in which he discusses almost everything of interest. The October number says that "Jesus secured no copyright on his Gospel"; that, "on examination, almost every American error turns out to be a European error attenuated by American common sense"; and that "New and Old has no space for amplification, but expects its readers to think." This piquant little half-sheet is twenty-five cents a year; address Bishop Julius Ferrette, Cambridge, Mass. The Bishop is a man of wide and varied knowledge, and of large experience in many countries; and these are quite evident in his writings, as our readers already know.

THE REPORT of President Grant's memorable speech at Des Moines from which the above quoted extract was originally printed was contained in the Boston Advertiser of September 30. It was clearly inaccurate in some respects; but even in its imperfect form it constituted so noble a text for the Liberal League movement that we printed it at once, writing meanwhile to the New York Tribune for its probably accurate report. After much delay this was received, and the extract as now printed follows it, with the simple correction of the word "aid" to "add"—an evident typographical error. The Liberal League movement proposes simply to "add all needful guarantees" for religious freedom; and, presumably without knowing anything of this nascent movement, President Grant has struck its key-note with a power and clearness beyond all praise.

PROFESSOR SWING alluded in a recent sermon to the action of the Chicago School Board in excluding the Bible from the schools, and planted himself squarely on the only defensible principle: "The government has no more right to teach the Bible than it has to teach the Koran. My idea is that the government did, in its earlier life, run according to a sort of Christian common law; but now the number of Jews, Catholics and infidels has become so greatly increased, the government has to base itself squarely upon its constitutional idea, that all men are religiously equal. Even if the genius of the country permitted the teaching of the Bible, I should doubt the propriety of continuing the custom, because no valuable moral results can ever come from reading a few verses hurriedly in a school-house, and social strifes will be continually springing up out of the practice."

SUCH A statement as the one below, copied from Zion's Herald, a Methodist paper of Boston, should be hailed with the greatest satisfaction. If the Protestant religious press would only take universally this honest, honorable and sensible ground, the objects of the Liberal League movement could be attained without difficulty, and untold disaster might be avoided. No other ground is possible, if our magnificent and indispensable system of public instruction is to be sustained; and every indication that Evangelical Protestants are inclined to stand loyally by it on a thoroughly secular basis should be most cordially and fraternally welcomed by all radicals. The Herald says: "The State deals only with temporal affairs, and does not attempt to usurp spiritual functions. Therefore the objects and methods of public education are wholly secular, but by no means necessarily, or at all, immoral or irreligious. On the contrary, they are decidedly favorable to piety and morality. But, composed denominationally as the American people is, the State ought not to impart religious education. The moment such an attempt should be made, the community would be in conflict as to what form it should take. It may be conceded, without danger perhaps, that the State should not teach ethics, except so far as the great fundamental principles of morals and politics as to which all Americans are agreed are concerned. The religious education of children may and should be remitted to the family, the Sabbath-school, and the Church—the natural and divinely appointed guardians of religion and ethics."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

A Visit to the Rationalistic Churches of London.

TRANSLATED FOR "THE INDEX" BY A LONDON LADY, FROM THE "REVUE DES DEUX MONDES."

BY COUNT GOBLET D'ALVIELLA.

The London Sunday generally scares the foreigner, who in the pursuit of business or pleasures takes up his quarters in the capital of Great Britain.

I shall perhaps astonish such when I tell him that during my later visits to London, I always arranged to pass as many Sundays there as possible. A curious book called Unorthodox London, by the Reverend Maurice Davies, enlightened me as to the enigma. Why does England on Sunday so completely bore the foreigner? Because she is absorbed in her religious life. Let him follow her in the various phases of that evolution, and, provided he is sufficiently master of the language, he will find the long hours (the very contemplation of which made him yawn with ennui) full of new impressions.

As Mr. Davies observes, never, since the time when the schools of philosophy and religion obstructed the streets of Alexandria, has the religious life shown itself under forms so exuberant and diversified as now in the metropolis of the British empire.

In consulting the London post-office directory I found mention of thirty different forms of worship; and, as this list confines itself to giving the addresses of congregations who have recognized places of meeting, one must also add the innumerable sects that gather together in private, in concert halls, and even under the viaducts of railways.

What a field here opens for the investigation of religious phenomena! Some of these sects are as strange in their practices as in their denominations. I shall confine myself to naming the Swedenborgians, who regard the revelations of the famous Swedish mystic as of celestial origin; the Irvingites, who, under the name of the "Catholic Apostolic Church," have a magnificent cathedral in Gordon Square, where they proclaim the return of the prophetic age; the Seventh-day Baptists, who celebrate the Sabbath in place of the Sunday; the Christadelphians, who deny the immortality of the soul, and who have resuscitated the theory of the millennium; the Johanna Southcotes, who wait for the second incarnation of Christ; the Sandemanians, who admit Paradise, but who spurn Hell and Purgatory, and who celebrate the sacrament with mutual embracings; the Peculiar People, who have rendered themselves amenable to law by obstinately refusing medical aid for their sick children; and lastly, those whom the popular voice has christened Shakers, Jumpers, and Ranters.

By the side of these parasitical excrescences of Protestantism a movement exists which on the other side represents the logical and inevitable crowning of the Reformation,—I mean the Rationalistic churches.

Among Protestant nations, the multiplicity of sects leaves room for a series of beliefs graduating between the blindest faith and the most absolute scepticism.

If we take the extremes of this series, the Ritualists and the Deists, the distance is nearly as great as between Catholics and Freethinkers; but this chasm is bridged by a ladder of sects which shows us the partisans of the Broad Church, approaching the Unitarians within the limits of the Anglican liturgy; the advanced Unitarians, in their turn, transforming themselves to pure Theists by a simple suppression of etiquette, and Theists passing over to the Deists, or Liberal Theists, by the negation of the Divine Personality; and lastly the Deists themselves adhering to positivist scepticism.

The development in England of these rationalistic churches is explained also by an idea essentially English, or rather a prejudice; namely, that it is not respectable to omit religious service on Sunday. As it is immaterial whether that service be Anglican, Catholic, Dissenting, or even Rationalistic, so long as it is celebrated in presence of a congregation and by a minister (of whatsoever denomination), one can imagine that advanced minds have thus accepted the only means of reconciling the independence of their convictions with the exigencies of custom.

Nor must we be in haste to blame the intolerance of the one party, or the hypocrisy of the other, if it is simply a question of giving up a few half hours in the week to listening to a sermon or a lecture delivered in the intervals of music by a favorite orator. Is this pressure of public opinion more to be regretted than the thousand daily encroachments of social convention on our individual liberty? Doubtless religious England has her extravagances and absurdities; but, in order to judge of a social status, one must view it under all its phases; and by the side of this archaic Puritanism, which already recedes before the advance of modern modes, one must place the extension of that intellectual and moral activity which the habit of discussing, or at least examining, the most elevated problems of human nature has so much contributed to spread amongst all ranks of the English people.

Of all rationalistic churches, we do not hesitate to rank the Unitarian as the best known, the most ancient, and the most numerous.

In its most advanced divisions it still deserves the name of Christian, because in traditions and in sentiments it remains in original community with all the other subdivisions of Christianity, though it has none the less the right to the title of Rationalist, specially the Unitarian Church of to-day, whose distinctive characteristic it is to impose no dogma on its members which their individual reason disapproves. The ancient Unitarians, whether, in imitation of the Socinians, they recognized in Christ a semi-divine nature, or simply regarded him as the most perfect of men, still, like all sects, held a certain body of positive doctrines which formed the common patrimony of their disciples; but, rejecting all the essential dogmas of Christian theology, such as original sin, sacramental virtue, resurrection of the flesh, possibility of miracles, and infallibility of holy books, they ended by retaining no other religious ties than their denomination of "Christians," their veneration for the person of Christ, and their adhesion to the general principles of evangelistic morality.

On this platform they found themselves in company with the numerous congregations of Methodists, Presbyterians, Independents, etc., who by a simultaneous internal emancipation had equally arrived at a rejection of the dogmatic part of Christianity. The official organization of the Unitarian Church of to-day also embraces not only the religious descendants of the ancient Socinians, but all the congregations of diverse denominations who, without rejecting the title of "Christian," cease to impose on their members any formula of adhesion to a professed faith.

Some Unitarians, desirous of sanctioning this fusion by abandoning all that could mark them as a particular sect, have even proposed to suppress their traditional denomination, and in the year 1872 founded, under the name of "Free-Christians," a religious association open to "all those who hold that man is bound, not to possess religious truth, but seriously to pursue it, and who require for the satisfying of their religious wants that they should be in accordance with filial piety and fraternal charity, with or without agreement in matters of theological doctrine."

A year later the Free-Christians solemnly celebrated their first anniversary in the great Masonic temple (Free-Mason's Hall) in Queen Street. Amongst the ministers who participated in this religious ceremony were Monsieur Athanase Coquerel, of the Reformed French Church, and the Reverend C. Regan Paul, a member of the Anglican Church. The Free-Christians could not have better affirmed their pretensions to embrace all Christian sects in a universal church, not founded upon what Channing called "a degrading uniformity of dogmas," but upon that community of sentiment which permits the independence of individual thought to coexist with the ties of religious association.

According to the Unitarian Almanac, the various congregations in Great Britain comprised under that name are three hundred and sixty-five. London alone counts twenty-five, scattered about in chapels built of iron or brick, in music halls, in Grecian temples, and Gothic churches.

My first visit was to the chapel in Little Portland Street, which owes its celebrity to its old minister, the Reverend J. Martineau, who has withdrawn to the Unitarian college called "the New Manchester College."

When I arrived there one Sunday morning I found a long string of carriages which promised a distinguished attendance; in fact, the Unitarians, as the lists published by the British and Foreign Association show, recruit their ranks from the superior classes, though some of their congregations in poor quarters are exclusively formed of the lower orders. The chapel, of Greek style, is in no way distinguished from the greater part of Evangelical churches; the altar had no other ornament than a sculptured figure of Christ. The congregation appeared to me thinly scattered,—about four women to every man. Can it be that in England the fair sex has a preference for Unitarianism, or, as amongst Catholic nations, are the masculine sex divided into the Orthodox and the indifferent? But we must not judge rashly; as in the case of the most advanced of these churches the men preponderate.

The minister, who immediately ascended the pulpit after a moment of private meditation, announced that he was about to celebrate the tenth service of the Unitarian liturgy. To follow the service, I had only to open a little book called Book of Common Prayer for Christian Worship, containing ten services, and several prayers, all more or less founded on the English Church liturgy,—leaving out all that bore on a Trinitarian interpretation or dogmatic signification, like the Athanasian and Apostolic Creeds. This liturgy is in use in two hundred and twenty-nine churches of Great Britain.

I shall not busy myself with detailing the ceremony, which differs little from the ordinary English one. The sermon which followed pointed out that Christ did not address himself to the intellect, but to the heart, of man; that he never attempted to teach theology or metaphysics; but that he simply sought to develop those sentiments of morality and charity inherent in the human soul. It was, as one may see, really an apology for the position taken up by the actual Unitarians towards other Christian schools (or societies).

I had great difficulty in following the preacher in the working out of his thesis, either from his volubility or the bad acoustics of the chapel. The retirement of the Reverend Mr. Martineau must have struck a severe blow to this, until lately, the most frequented of the Unitarian chapels.

I had more difficulty in finding out the church of the "Free-Christians" at Kentish Town. A charming little church, built at the end of a garden, the interior with large nave, stained-glass windows, and mural inscriptions in Gothic letters, appealed a thousand times more to the soul than the rigid austerity of many an Evangelical chapel.

I found the liturgy as well as the hymns were compiled by Mr. Martineau. The preacher cited a text of St. Paul relative to the dissensions of primitive Christians, and observed that, "as these ancient theological disputes struck us of to-day as absurd and ridiculous, so we might conclude that it would be the same in future ages regarding our own dogmatic quarrels. Unhappily we could not judge ourselves with the eyes of posterity; but we should do well to confine ourselves to following the advice of St. Paul, given to the controversialists of his time: 'Follow Jesus, and may the truth live.' The superiority of Christ consisted in his having taught the law of love; that he placed the spirit above the letter. Also we deceive ourselves in making faith in miracles a necessary element of the Christian religion, or in refusing to admit Christianity without belief in the Divinity of its Founder." Here again one sees that the sermon was in some sort a résumé of the views adopted by the congregation.

The preacher, however, was not himself Unitarian, but an Independent, the Reverend I. A. Picton. The Independents are a detached branch of the English Church, from which they differ solely because they reject all official ties. One may judge of what will occur in the heart of Anglicanism by this example of the Reverend Mr. Picton, if the Church is ever disestablished, or if one day she throws down the dogmatic barriers of the Thirty-nine Articles.

If we may believe an anecdote related to me, the first time the Reverend Mr. Picton arranged an exchange of pulpits with a Unitarian minister (which is common enough amongst dissenting churches), he astonished his new congregation by the boldness of his language, while his confrère equally surprised the Independents by the timidity of his arguments. No doubt the one had chosen the most Orthodox of his discourses, and the other the boldest, with the intention of being on a level with their hearers. But this does not lessen the difficulty of establishing a fine-drawn distinction between the scarcely divided elements of the different churches, which in England graduate from a semi-Catholic ritual to the furthest limits of religious rationalism.

One Sunday evening, Mr. Moncreu Conway (to whom I shall again refer) conducted me, near to the Grace Street Station, to the entrance of a cave where a congregation of advanced Unitarians held their meetings.

One peculiarity attending the advanced Unitarians is that after the service the chapel is transformed into a hall of discussion, where the sermon is discussed by the faithful. One can imagine what befalls the texture, and even the precepts, of the Bible, given over to such a controversy; but this is all in conformity with the eminently theological temperament of the English nation.

A church constituted on so wide a basis as actual Unitarianism must necessarily comprise very diverse religious opinions, which to us is its principal claim. Amongst its faithful adherents there are certainly found those who are inclined to recognize miracle and revelation. At the church in Little Portland Street, part of the congregation kneel at certain portions of the service, and the sacrament of communion is there regularly celebrated, not in its mystic character, but under the form of a fraternal and commemorative feast. Elsewhere one meets with Unitarian congregations that have nothing of Christian but the name. Such, amongst others, is the church at Clerkenwell, to judge by the preaching of its minister, the Reverend Peter Dean, who "substitutes for all theology faith in an infinitely perfect God; for revelation, the Universe; for the Bible, the manifestations of Nature, as well as the sacred literature of all times and countries; for Christ, the good incarnate in humanity; and for sacraments, the love of God and the love of mankind, piety and morality." Here we find ourselves landed in pure theism.

II. THEISM.—THE REVEREND CHARLES VOYSEY.—THE INDEPENDENT REFORMERS.

Some logicians have reproached the Unitarians with not carrying their attempts at religious synthesis far enough. To preserve the name of Christian, and at the same time to reject the supernatural origin of Christianity, strikes them as a self-delusion which unnecessarily causes the exclusion from their religious community of Jews, Mohammedans, Buddhists, and even Theists, who refuse to recognize the moral supremacy of the Bible.

Why, having founded a religious association not on identity of beliefs, but on the simple conformity of religious sentiment, set up precepts, however purely moral, as dogma?

The Universal Church is not a "Free-Christian" church. It is a free church, open to all who admit the existence of God, and who feel a desire to render him homage in common.

In the last years of the French Revolution, a society of Theophilanthropists established in Paris a worship founded on what they termed the truths of natural religion; that is to say, upon principles acknowledged by all nations, and so capable of uniting all sects in a common aspiration towards the Divine.

Two congregations in London, purely theistic, are founded on analogous reasoning; one under the direction of the Reverend Charles Voysey, and the other (much less important) by Dr. Perfit.

The Reverend Charles Voysey was a clergyman of mark in the English Church, distinguished from his first entrance into orders by the extreme independence of his religious opinions. The publication of a work called the Sling and the Stone, in which he called in question the Divinity of Christ and the dogma of Original Sin, excited such indignation in Orthodox ranks that two clerical associations each offered £500 to cover the costs of prosecuting him. In short, Mr. Voysey was deprived of his benefice, and, without halting at Unitarianism, founded at St. George's Hall, Oct. 1, 1871, the theistic congregation which he still directs.

A fund is in course of collection for building a church, and on the list of subscribers one alone has given 12,500 francs.

On this list I noticed military men, baronets, and men of science,—as Sir Charles Lyell, Sir John Bowring, etc.

I found at St. George's Hall, as in the Unitarian churches, a ritual specially composed for the use of the congregation. As the ritual of the Reverend J. Martineau is a corrected edition of the English Liturgy by the exclusion of the Trinitarian doctrine, so that of Mr. Voysey seems a résumé of the Unitarian, carefully denuded of all Christian formula. For the first time in any liturgy, I found rites appropriate for cremation of the dead, and I regret I did not ask the author if he had ever had occasion to use them.

The Reverend Charles Voysey entered the pulpit wearing the surplice and stole in use in the English Church. At first sight it struck me strangely to hear the most audacious attacks, not only against the practices of certain sects, but against even the doctrines and traditions of Christ himself, made by a preacher in the costume of the English priest, and after a service in the style of Christian churches, interspersed with readings from the Bible.

In his printed sermon, "Christianity versus Universal Brotherhood," after having denied to Unitarians the right to establish a distinction between the dogmatic and the moral in religion, the orator reproached Christianity for not having accepted as its body-guard the grand principles of charity and tolerance so often invoked by its adversaries and dissentients. This apparent contradiction between the old and the new, the entourage of this service, is explained by the conviction held by Mr. Voysey that, in the matter of worship, we should introduce new ideas under old forms.

"Since it is necessary that we should continue some form of worship," he says, in the preface to his prayer-book, "the most acceptable will be that form already familiar to British ears, deprived of all that is obsolete and discordant with pure theism."

The sermon on the day of my visit was in refutation of the "atonement"; that is to say, of the expiation suffered by Christ to ransom humanity. It might have been preached by any Unitarian minister, and taught me nothing of the particular doctrines of a church which claims to be "unique of its kind."

I was fortunate enough to be able to procure the sermon preached by Mr. Voysey at the inaugural ceremony, October 1, 1871. In it he says: "Our first object is to undermine assault, and, if possible, destroy that portion of religious belief which we hold false,"—which, as he explains it, is nearly the whole Christian doctrine. But he adds: "That is not all our task; we should be both unhappy and confounded if our work was purely destructive; on the contrary we only demolish to rebuild; we only desire to extirpate false beliefs to replace them by true ones." He then expressed his firm faith in the existence of a Supreme Being, infinitely good and just, which in default of a better name he calls God. Then comes his affirmation of belief in a future life, which he considers inseparably linked with belief in God. "The two must stand or fall together." Lastly, he seeks to develop the spirit of truth, of morality, of purity, and of fraternity, which represent to him the real conditions (or bases) of religious sentiment.

It is on these somewhat vague foundations that the church of Mr. Voysey has victoriously passed through the trials inseparable from the début of a new church. Should he succeed in raising sufficient funds to build a church, it will be a satisfactory reply to those who have in all times contested the possibility of establishing a serious worship on the simple formula of theism.

I cannot feel as much confidence in the future of the congregation presided over by Dr. Perfit, in the Free Church, Newman Street.

The fundamental statutes of these independent religious reformers are as follows: Firstly, the union of all those who desire to cultivate religious sentiment divested of all dogmatic spirit, all sacerdotal leaven, and sectarian intolerance; secondly, to discover and formulate truths in relation with the laws of Nature, the progress of intelligence, and the lives of men of wealth in all camps and in all countries; thirdly, to fulfil our religious duty towards the regeneration of society by aiding the efforts of all associations organized with a view of abolishing superstition, ignorance, intemperance, political inequality, and any of the other numerous evils that actually afflict society. Any person, male or female, desirous of contributing to these various objects, can join the society without signing any profession of faith, provided he or she engages to pay a contribution of one pound a year.

When I heard Dr. Perfit, his discourse was on the means and the glory of spreading the knowledge of religion. He particularly insisted on the error of the Christian missionaries, who treat as idolaters, if not savages, people far more advanced than themselves in the knowledge of God, instead of meeting them as St. Paul did the Athenians, with the simple pretension of completing their notions of the Supreme Being and the immortal soul.

In spite of the interludes of prayers and hymns, the service struck me more as a conference on the history of religions than the celebration of a worship, even purely Deist. No one assisted or took part in the proceedings, and no books were used to follow the different details of the ceremony. The non-success of this church is thus explained, though in its principles it is near akin to that of Mr. Voysey, who perfected the organization of his worship by the continual and logical development of his spiritual vocation.

III. DEISM.—THE FREE THEISTS AND MR. MONCURE D. CONWAY.

Simple belief in God is a dogma, however little one may be able to define the attributes of the Divine Being, or make of that definition the creed of a church. If it is admitted that worship is purely an affair of sentiment, not of reason or of faith, it must be detached from all positive formula, howsoever simple.

Starting on this principle, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, a talented American, founded some ten years ago a church open to all those who wished to satisfy their religious aspirations without distinction of beliefs, theological or metaphysical,—the only condition being that they did not erect as a dogma the non-existence of God.

Such a conception embraces not only Theists of all schools, but Pantheists, Positivists of the John Stuart Mill type, and all sceptics who refuse to declare themselves on the reality of a superior Being. We would not even affirm that materialists could not there find place, as only pronounced atheists are excluded.

Mr. Conway takes no title either of reverend or doctor, and belongs to one of those Methodist families who every spring unite to form religious camps, so well described by Bret Harte in his stories of the far West. He pictured for us lately himself, in one of his sermons on revivalism, a moving picture of the religious scenes which surrounded his youth, and the futile efforts he made to participate in the spiritual exertion of his early influences. In 1864 he succeeded the famous theistic preacher, W. J. Fox, in the chapel at South Place, Finsbury Square; and since last year he has a second chapel at St. Paul's Road, Camden Town.

The congregation at South Place has many recruits among savans and professors, as well as rich city families. Graduates of Oxford and the President of the Royal Society of Philology are among the number. And Mr. Conway's followers represent, I discovered, the extreme left in politics as well as in religion. This alliance of a religious element with the small school of extreme radicals which assimilates to French socialism sometimes leads to rather odd results. I myself heard a coming conference of Mr. Bradlaugh recommended in the sermon at this theistic chapel,—Mr. Bradlaugh, who not only figures in England as one of the rare apostles of Red Republicanism, but who, finding the term atheism too moderate, has taken his stand on the religious platform as the champion of anti-theism.

Unitarianism, and even the St. George's Hall congregation, are in politics quite fashionably Orthodox; and Mr. Voysey's liturgy, as well as Mr. Martineau's, retains the prayers of the English Church for the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Houses of Parliament, etc.

The liturgy of Mr. Moncure Conway consists only of hymns, to the number of five hundred and fifty, compiled by Fox, and the latter part by himself. As one may suppose, there is no prayer-book in a worship that dispenses with prayer. This last element is replaced by "meditations,"—moral and religious allocutions which tend to elevate the soul without any direct appeal to Divinity.

The rest of the service consists of hymns and readings from his work, Sacred Anthology, where he has gathered together with great skill more than seven hundred passages drawn from authors, ancient and modern, sacred and profane; the Bible figures by the side of the Koran and the Vedas, and Confucius shakes hands with St. Paul and Monsieur Renan. Mr. Conway told me that this Anthology is used by ten congregations in England—probably Unitarians on the borders of theism.

Mr. Moncure Conway, on the Sunday in question, chose for his text, "The Public Health"; and, while taking up the practical side of the subject, he skilfully developed the relation between health of body and purity of soul, in conformity to the Protestant view that "cleanliness is next to godliness." It is one of his fundamental principles that science and religion are one—that the pursuit of the one involves the other; and we must therefore not be surprised if he endeavors to justify this pretension.

Every Thursday the members of the congregation meet in the chapel to discuss some moral or political question. They also have periodical meetings, soirées for conversation and music, and so become a centre not only for religious but social intercourse.

The St. Paul's Road congregation is an ancient colony of "Free-Christians" who disagreed about the choice of a minister; and, since they have been under the care of Mr. Conway, have renounced the denomination of "free Christian," thus exemplifying the facilities which Protestantism offers for the gradual and almost insensible transition to forms of worship more in harmony with the continual development of individual reason.

The Roman Catholic Church has clearly circumscribed limits, from which one does not pass except at the cost of an abrupt and sometimes painful heart-rending, to arrive suddenly at the extreme limits of incredulity, or, at best, religious indifference; but, outside Catholicism, the churches of today, in spite of dogmatic limits within which they endeavor to confine the diversity of their doctrines, are only halting places in the evolutionary process of "religious thought" towards an IDEAL ever wider and more liberal. Further, it gives each the power to stop exactly at the precise point in that evolution process which best corresponds to his intellectual and moral culture.

Mr. Moncure Conway, as far as we could gather of his doctrines, starts from this point: "That instinct constrains us to render homage to a superior principle generally understood by the notion of God"; but at the same time he thinks it best not to define that notion, or gift it with any decided attributes, for fear of enclosing it in some formula that on the morrow should prove at discord with the fresh verifications of science.

He rejects prayer on this account, because (1) he sees it is an illogical request to change the course of natural laws; (2) because in invoking the Divinity, one appears to attribute to him organs and sentiments more or less analogous to our own. If in his meditations he often speaks of God, he never calls on him directly, either to adore him or to bless him; and, amongst the hymns and anthems which form all his ritual, he told me himself he purposely chose those which avoided bringing on the scene a personal and conscious God.

It seems to me that here we have exaggerated scruples. Mr. Conway confounds the exaggerated individuality of the Divine. Who necessarily imagines God with eyes and ears, a brain and a heart, in a word, with an organization after our pattern, if in a burst of religious emotion he appeals to the "sovereign intelligence" or the "supreme goodness" of "the Divine Being"?

The Reverend Charles Voysey cannot be accused on this head, as he himself told me that he should cease to pray did he consider God capable of complying with his prayers. Nevertheless, Mr. Voysey (like Dr. Perfit and the Unitarians) has retained prayer in his liturgy, because he sees in it the satisfaction of an instinctive and rational inspiration of the soul, a sort of intimate communion between the Divine and human nature. Mr. M. J. Tiberghien expresses this idea in his Experimental Psychology, when he says: "At whatever system of philosophy we take our stand, we must recognize, with theologians of all times, that the religious sentiment does not address itself to a vague substance, but to a Being gifted with conscience and self-knowledge. If the Divine Personality is only an abstraction, the 'love of God' is objectless."

Again, we may ask, does not Mr. Conway, by suppressing prayer in his liturgy (spite of the vague religiosity of his hymns and meditations), cross the last barrier which separates a rational worship reduced to its simplest expression from a society for conference or a school for morals?

Still, however vague may be the theology of Mr. Moncure Conway, one cannot doubt that his preaching responds to the religious sentiments of his numerous auditors; but this success is due perhaps more to the form than the substance of his doctrine. Were it not for the absence of all invocation to the Divinity, we should even have found in his service more of warmth and life, not only than in the little Free Church of Dr. Perfit, but than in the formal theism of the Reverend Charles Voysey; because, faithful to his principle, Mr. Conway, in place of addressing himself to the reason to provoke religious emotion, contents himself with making the lyric chords of the human heart vibrate,—the most powerful auxiliaries, if not the chief sources, of the religious sentiment.

Mr. Conway as an orator chiefly excels in his choice of images, and if sometimes his thought is veiled beneath a cloudy naturalism, from this very obscurity he knows how to strike out a reflex of mystery and grandeur that satisfies the religious aspirations of his auditors,—for the rest, easily satisfied.

IV. THE COMTISTS.—THE HUMANITARIANS.

One might suppose that the "Liberal Theists" of Mr. Moncure Conway had reached the utmost limits of a religion upon the progressive elimination of the supernatural; beyond it there would seem no possible form of worship, since there is room for nothing but atheism; that is to say, the dogmatic negation of God. Still, London possesses one more church (if church it be) that deserves notice here. I mean Positivism, or rather Comtism, which pretends to substitute the religion of humanity for the worship of God.

One knows the division that broke out in Positivism even during the life of its founder. The school prevalent in France rejects entirely the religious and political views of Auguste Comte, although they hold to his philosophical system; but a small party in England, constituted of men of reputation and talent, have accepted the doctrine of the master in its entirety.

They hold their meetings not far from the British Museum, in a small room in Chapel Street, ornamented with the busts of the thirteen great men whom Comte constituted patrons of the months in his famous calendar.

As the Comtists have always abstained from popular propagandism, they have remained but a small party. Some years ago a member of the Broad Church assisted at one of their reunions. On his return a Unitarian friend of his asked him whether he had seen God in three persons? He replied he had seen three persons, but no God! According to one of their most distinguished members, Professor Beesly, who wished personally to inform me, their congregation in London includes several active members. Every Sunday they meet to listen to an address delivered by their director, Dr. Congreve. As yet, they have not made use of the minute details of the Comtist ritual, except at the celebration of marriage and the "presentation" of children; but (always according to Mr. Beesly) they only wait for a spontaneous increase of their numbers to organize fully their worship. We must add that they have arranged a primary instruction conformable to their system, and, like the clergy, they proclaim the absolute incompetence of the State in the matter of instruction.

Comtism is not the only religion which, the offspring of a French brain, has taken root on the other side of the channel.

Going one day towards Pentonville with the intention of visiting Unity Church, I came across the rendezvous of the "Humanitarian Society" at Claremont Hall, Islington.

I found the theories broached by this society founded on the system of Pierre Leroux, who, as one knows, claimed to evolve from Pagan and also Christian philosophy the belief in transmigration of souls within the limits of terrestrial humanity!

The Humanitarians in their definition of God approach more nearly to Pantheism,—“a Being eternal and indivisible, whose essence penetrates all the universe under the double form of matter and spirit”; but their theory on the soul is an exact reproduction of the hypothesis of the French reformer.

However, Humanitarianism as a doctrine is inoffensive enough, perfectly moral in its precepts as in its consequences, and confined to that supra-sensible sphere where all religious speculations are permissible, so long as they are in good faith,—the more necessary as the process of scientific method is powerless to demonstrate either their truth or falsehood.

We have not hesitated to number this amongst the religious schools of the British metropolis which, though not holding a place in the gradual emancipation of religious thought, nevertheless deserves the title of rationalist, in the sense that, in the domain of reasoning, they respect the authority of reason.

I commenced this wandering amongst the London churches more as a diversion than anything else. Doubtless on my road I encountered both inconsistencies and eccentricities; but the smile that may have risen to my lips soon faded under a general impression of respect and sympathy for the efforts of sincere and thoughtful souls who have undertaken to reconcile religious feeling with intellectual liberty,—those two necessary elements in all harmonious civilization.

I owe it specially to them that I understood for the first time all the importance of that great reform inaugurated by Luther and still unfinished.

The impossibility of restraining within dogmatic limits a religious belief founded on a Protestantism averse to the authority of dogma; the extreme flexibility of Protestant Christianity, which reaches from ritualistic sacerdotalism to the theism of advanced Unitarians; the difficulty of drawing a line on the ground of doctrines between the least perceptible shades of churches the nearest akin,—these three facts which struck me above all others, are they not happy auguries for those who dream of religious peace in this world?

When society understands that religious unity is to be found not in a chimerical uniformity of dogma, but in the union of sentiment the result amongst men of their individual perception of the infinite and the ideal, then, though there may still be theological controversies, different schools, congregations as variable in their practices as in their denominations, there will be no more sects, no more churches, or rather there will be but one—the community of the faithful gathered together in their respective temples to adore God under different formulas.

Do we not already see from this picture of the rationalist churches that tolerance in dogma does not exclude variety in rites? Some, like Unitarians, hold more in accordance with tradition; others, like the theists who join the Reverend C. Voysey, seek to base themselves on reason; others, like the deists who gather round Mr. Moncre D. Conway, are founded solely on sentiment,—and thus each responds to a particular phase of our religious nature. But all find themselves linked by the common conviction, first, that in case of conflict between reason and faith it is the first that one would and ought to follow; secondly, that man is morally bound (according to the definition of the Free-Christians) “not to possess religious truth, but simply to seek it conscientiously.”

It is only on condition of accepting these two conditions for starting-point that one can work at the solution of what a savant (little suspected of spiritualistic partialities, Professor Tyndall) terms “the problem of problems, the rational satisfaction of the religious sentiment.”

Amongst the nations of the Old Continent, it is easy to see that England will be the first to approach this goal. Doubtless the congregations whose picture we have sketched count as yet but a restricted number of the faithful; but we cannot ignore that they represent a wide-spread tendency of English society, amongst men of science as well as religious men,—the sincere and reciprocal desire to find grounds for a cordial understanding between science and religion. The Established Church does not even escape this movement, as Mr. Albert Reville has lately shown, between the ritualists and the revivalists, who in different ways personify the supreme reaction of the theological spirit against the invasions of rationalism. We daily see the Broad Church party increasing, who for the rival theories of justification whether by faith or by works claim to substitute the more elevated doctrine of salvation through sincerity of beliefs and the worth of works.

But it is chiefly amongst the dissenting sects, the Methodists, the Presbyterians, and the Independents, that we observe the weakening of the ancient dogmas, even where the primitive liturgy is retained; as in the French Reformed Church it is generally the ministers themselves who, influenced by the spirit of the age, gradually lead the rationalistic education of those around them.

In some congregations the transition is complete; with others we may in some sort take it on trust; as for instance in regard to the Presbyterian Church at Notting Hill, where every Sunday the minister celebrates the evening service according to the Presbyterian ritual, and in the morning according to the Unitarian liturgy of the Reverend J. Martineau.

“We do not make many proselytes,” said a Unitarian minister to me, whom I questioned on the state of his church; “but, what is still more important, we see our ideas conquer, little by little, the other communities of the country.” And thus, without doubt, the religious veneration of society will proceed, not by the creating of a new faith, nor by a general movement towards conversion to the rationalistic churches, but by a sort of transfusion process that shall infuse the sap of modern ideas into the veins of churches vigorous enough and flexible enough to submit with impunity to such a metamorphosis.

Certainly the ancient theological conceptions will not disappear in a day; they will long remain the property of those who are incapable of attaining to a more general perception of religious truths; but the essential point is not so much to inculcate that perception in those who are content with a narrower faith as to furnish them with the means of emancipating themselves as soon as they feel the necessity for doing so, without breaking the continuity of their religious development.

Nevertheless, in order to realize that superior organization of an open and progressive church, capable of entirely satisfying the moral and intellectual wants of our nature, and alone able to authorize that tolerance which the laws prescribe, a great part of modern society will have to break with those religious schools that not only refuse to other churches all claim to the truth, but who also dispute their very right to exist.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

LEAVES FROM MY JOURNAL.

BY S. H. MORSE.

AS REGARDS the keeping of a “Journal” it may be well to observe that there are at least two ways open to mortals. One may diligently put the day’s doings down in black and white, or he may quietly allow his “Journal” to keep itself in the “book and volume of his brain.” The latter method is by far the most convenient, and I imagine it to be the least spiritually destructive. The former method is too intermeddling. One arranges, or is apt to arrange, his eyes with a view to the reporter. Life and liberty are—in short, Nature wants her own way without being reminded of it every twenty-four hours. But to filch from one’s memory now and then stray bits of opinion to serve some well-beloved editor is no crime, I take it.

CAUSE ENOUGH we have to thank our fathers and take courage; but the end is not yet. What was called the Revolution is our inheritance, not as a consummation of a past time, but as a present and unescapable reality, demanding fresh intelligence and fulfilment. Whether the fathers build better than they know depends very much upon the children. It is not enough to finish what they began as they began it, and comprehended it. Every generation has a new experience and a new vision. The old words, given by inspiration, abide; but they must have fresh interpretation. Every one of them holds a meaning whose depth no one age can sound. “Profounder, profounder,” the great words appear as the growing race considers them. The great word freedom, which has come to be our American word in a peculiar sense, has broadened out wonderfully since the fathers interpreted it, defining its scope. The enlarging work is destined to go on.

IS AMERICA to have a new religion of its own? Or will Christian religion suffice? Or, shall there be no religion? There are at least these three parties. For myself, I prophesy the time when there will be “no religion to speak of.” Was it Schiller who said as much, “for religion’s own sake”? The German government has recently amused itself with a grand “war play.” It must keep up the practice to be prepared for real war when it comes. That there is a vast deal of religious play throughout the world, is no secret. Getting ready, is it urged, for real religion when the need appears? Or if not that, practising that the religious spirit may increase? Well, now, is there not somewhat irreligious in the idea that one must play religion, or practise religion, or even strive to be religious? One’s religion, I think, will best take care of itself. If he have it, he has it; if he have it not, it cannot be extemporized. Effort kills. A sense of duty even is not friendly or helpful to it. “Our duties to you,” said Horatio. “Your loves,” cried Hamlet. Religion lies in the spirit of the deed. It is the way one unconsciously comforts himself. It is the joy one feels in the beauty and truth of his work, in the presence of noble thoughts,—the joy he feels; but he does not say or think, “Now I am religious, and God is pleased.” He has “no religion to speak of,” or think of. But I mistake; I am not describing religion at all? Well, perhaps not. Words—my words—are inadequate; take the spirit of them. But this much I say: when America gets religion, it and its life will be one and inseparable.

EXAMPLE for the sake of example, I do not hesitate to pronounce as vicious. It is one of the fatal delusions into which desire to help others may lead us. If we do what we think good and wise in and of itself, for its own sake, the example inheres in the act, and is healthful; otherwise not.

A NEW YORK editor is of opinion that “faith in mediums, tipping tables, and the like, however pleasant as a supplement to a fixed religious creed, is but a slight anchor to fix eternal hopes upon.” “Faith in Christ” is far better. No danger then of “shipwreck to one’s eternal hopes.” It is written that the Christ brought “life and immortality to light,” and we are warned that in him alone can hope be made steadfast.

This strikes me as a most perverse reading of the text. It says nothing of “hope.” It declares that he brought not hope, but certainty. “All men live in hope.” But if Jesus brought “certainty,” where is that certainty? What evidence did he offer less unsatisfactory than is furnished by the modern mediums? Where is the evidence to show that he knew more than other people about a “life to come”? I do not say he did not; but if he did, he could not convince those who could not enter into a like experience.

And those who could would see with their own eyes, not with his. No; immortality is not brought to light outside one’s own experience. It is a light within, and cannot be supplied from without.

MY FRIEND is of opinion that the world is more than six thousand years old; he rejects the plenary inspiration of the Bible, the authority of the Christ; disbelieves, of course, in the Trinity, hell fire, the forgiveness of sins, and thinks all days of the week equally holy. Well, I say to myself, what of it? I knew him when he still believed the old creed concerning these things. I strive to mark the effect wrought upon his amiableness or disagreeableness by this change of opinions. I do not discover any great difference. He was stiff-necked in believing the old way; he is now stiff-necked in not believing the old way. I have other friends whom I esteem equally with him; and they believe as he did before he became wise. They are all stiff-necked believers. As regards theology, what one vehemently affirms, the other as vehemently denies. As regards some other things, they stand neck and neck together, and “stiff” is no name for it. I confess I would not turn my hand over for the choice between them. And yet, my friend daily cries, “I thank the stars that I am out of the woods,” and desires, I suppose, that I should admire him for that reason. What do I care whether he be in or out of the woods? What I care for, if I care for aught, is for himself, wherever he may be. In the woods or out—does he charm me? If no more so out than in, am I particularly interested in his being out? But he is happier out; well, peace to him; I can say so much. But he is a “genuine radical,” and a “free man”; and I “ought to admire him from principle and for the sake of the cause.” Ought! Thou shalt not attempt aught that is vain. No; I can’t admire the performance; there is too much effort; he makes such boisterous work of his disbelief! May be his children will take to it more naturally.

“WITH MALICE TOWARD NONE, and charity for all.” No one can doubt but that these words convey the spirit in which Lincoln conducted the war. There was not a grain of vindictiveness in his nature, nor of false, foolish pride. He implored the Southern people not to bring on the war; but he implored them with reason and not with concession. His duty, as he understood it, was to preserve the Union. That, to his mind, was his business first and last. But against those who were fighting to destroy it, he bore no trace of ill-will. They were wholly in the wrong, as he believed; but in their own hearts he knew that they believed themselves wholly in the right. They must be put down, but he did not exult in the work. The spirit of the man was indeed sublime. Reconciliation was the major part of his being. “God forgives the sinner before he sins,” I once heard a preacher say. So with Lincoln; before, while he was sinning, and after. “When he died,” said Grant at his grave, “the South lost its best friend.” He had the ability to review his enemy, as well as all people with whom he had to deal, from their own several stand-points; he could see with their eyes, and always find the fit apology for their conduct. I knew a woman with Southern sympathies, whose son, under age, ran away and joined the Union army. She went to Washington, and for weeks hovered about the War Office bringing every possible influence to bear on the Secretary. At last Stanton rudely repulsed her, telling her her son should remain in the army to the end of the war. The government had no right to hold him a day. Nearly broken-hearted she at length fought her way into the presence of Lincoln. He told her he was "worn out; ready to drop dead." "I can't hear you; go to Stanton." "I have been to him for weeks. He has no heart, no spark of justice in his nature." "Tut, tut; I won't hear him abused. Well, then, be brief. What is it?" She told her story. He took out his pencil and wrote, "Give this woman her boy." As she stood crying, with this order to Stanton in her hand, he added: "You must forgive Stanton. You don't know how that man is worried." She never quite did so; but she said on her return, "If the Southern people only knew Lincoln, I believe they would throw down their arms at once. He is the nearest approach to a man I have seen."

THERE IS A DISPUTE as to whether Sherman tells the truth when he says that he refused to shake hands with Stanton. Stanton's friends say he does not; the great Secretary did not offer his hand. The probabilities are that he did. Certainly, for friendship's sake, I would not go out of my way to deny it. I should prefer to think he had the manliness on such an occasion to set aside mere personal feelings, and recognize cheerfully Sherman's real service, which was conspicuous enough, notwithstanding what he deemed his serious blunder in negotiating with Johnson. Let it stand as a faithful record that he offered his hand to Sherman. Pity Sherman must also add, "I refused to take it."

GREELEY AND SUMNER turned the edge of battle toward peace. Boston, on the 17th of June, finished the work of reconciling grace, and Virginia and South Carolina, Maryland, and all the late rebellious States, "joyfully accept union and fraternity." But it was unkind in Sherman to tell Fitz Hugh Lee that he was like the prodigal son; that he must not forget that as enemies Yankees were devils,--unkind to the South; casting also, though he did not intend it, a reflection on the North that is somewhat damaging. One may inquire, If the South was like the son, was the North like the father, as celebrated in the parable? As Jesus put the case it runs thus: the son told his father he wanted to go, and asked for his portion of the goods,--a request which the father did not feel at liberty to refuse. He gave the son his portion and let him go; and when he voluntarily returned, he killed the fatted calf. That is, the union was broken, and restored; but it was altogether a peaceable affair. One might suppose from Gen. Sherman's manner of following the text that the old man in the parable gave his son "a devil of a thrashing," and never let him go at all. But Jesus could never have been the author of such a parable. It was not like him. He may have been wrong; but if his parable is good for anything, it is good as a whole, and not for a part.

UNDOUBTEDLY the South will accept the "verdict of the sword," and strive to make the best of it. But one can sympathize with that Virginian who recently declared that, while he would bury all bad feeling, he never would own himself a "repentant rebel." Why should he? Why should it be expected of him, or of any Southerner? It would be contrary to fact, and when the true history of the war is written, the verdict of the dispute between the two sections will not all appear on one side. That slavery went down was by no particular design of the North. At least there is every reason to believe that, had the North seen that its continuance was indispensable to the maintenance of the Union, it would have resolved upon that course. At the same time it cannot be gainsaid but that the North rejoiced in slavery's downfall. Nevertheless, in coercing the South, if there be any force in words, it violated the original doctrine of American independence which based government on the consent of the governed. But it is useless to discuss the question, arraigning one party or the other. One thing is plain: both sides were in earnest, and equally believed themselves in the right. Now that chattel slavery has disappeared, both sides are apparently glad of it. Neither party are ready yet, dispassionately, to discuss whether the Union shall henceforth be voluntary, or continue by force. Indeed, on this subject there is a nearer agreement in favor of force than may appear. The Southern States were never consistent. They demanded a government of consent as against Northern free States; but the Confederacy was as much a thing of force as the Union. So, when South Carolina claimed the right to secede from the Union, on the same principle of consent any single county might secede from the other counties of that State; any township from the other townships of that county; and, finally, any individual from the other individuals of that township. This South Carolina no more recognized than Massachusetts. But it would be the legitimate carrying out of the principle.

A CORRESPONDENT writes me as follows:-- "I have read Mr. Warren's book, and I think it the most masterly analysis of human relations I ever came in contact with. Of course many a query arose in my mind as to how any arrangement could overcome human cupidity; but as to the propositions which underlie his book, I believe them to be indisputable. Now, when the labor certificate is employed as the medium of exchange, I do not see what can restrain the clergyman or physician from demanding ten hours of labor for his fifteen or twenty minutes, when the patient is so timid and superstitious as to believe his life or immortal soul will be forfeited on refusal. In brief, the general question comes back: How can human injustice be overcome as long as one portion of the race are keen and cunning and shrewd, while the other remain ignorant, timid, and superstitious? I can see how the face of the labor certificate would be a constant reminder of a great and true principle; but I can see no speedy help for a weak intelligence as against one well fortified, and armed with audacity. Warren admits, finally, that the only practical application of this principle is for A, B, and C to set the noble example of receiving no more than a just equivalent of labor for labor. Yes, when the moral heroes appear, I can see many a way to the millennium.

"I am very grateful for literature and thought bearing on the question of the right of governments to harness a man up in the car of state, whether he is willing to pull and be pulled or not. Would a labor reformer who disbelieved in coercive governments, on principle, be justified in inciting the laboring classes to use the ballot-box for their salvation? If I disbelieve in the right of society to ballot me into submission, can I conscientiously advise the laborers to do it?"

"Do you believe in taking society as it is and using instrumentalities which are developed out of it, when you know that they are the fruits of false and unjust principles? Now I live in this intellectual tomb of ---, and am weighing such matters in my mind. The suggestions of others are most welcome."

In regard to the opportunity for injustice in the exchange of labor suggested above, the advantage of Warren's system over the prevailing system would be held up as the standard. Now the disproportion in exchanges is justified. To take away this justification, was, I take it, Mr. Warren's aim. The precise ways in which the old will be disestablished, no one can pretend to map out. Nor does it signify. The idea will make its own path. If the cost principle be founded in justice, there is no further question. Human nature cannot avoid it. In the long run it must arrive at the conviction, and embrace it,--do this, or despise itself. Fear not. What can those do who believe already? Keep the idea in motion. It is itself the educator.

As to the "ballot-box," I have little to say. If one sees "salvation" in it for anything or anybody, use it, of course. Go to church in the same way, both Catholic and Protestant. Advise other people the same. But if one think "salvation" is not there, I should say let him devote most of his time in pointing out that fact, and in showing where he thinks it is. Let him use the instrumentalities he believes in, and can justify, rather than those furnished him. "Take society as it is," of course. But, also, take yourself as you are, regarding yourself as a fact quite as providential as any other. That is, sink or swim, stand by your idea. You'll swim if you sink. Never fear.

I SEE NO MORE harm in the Pope's effort to extend civil government over the world, establishing universal empire, than in the foundation of a German Empire, or of the Union in America. In fact, the unity of the whole world is a nobler aspiration than the aggressive unity of a part of it. The principle involved is the same in either case.

IT IS OBJECTED to the Church of Rome that it does not respect religious liberty, or liberty of conscience. Where is the State that does this? Religious liberty is not secured when you are permitted to build any kind of a meeting-house you choose, and say any sort of prayers there you choose. One's religion may have nothing to do with meeting-houses or prayers. If the modern professed free religious notion is correct--namely, that religion cannot be divorced from life,--why, one's conscience is concerned with other questions than the religiousness of Sunday touches upon. One may have as strong conscientious scruples against giving aid and support to the State as at present anywhere organized, as to the Church of Rome. The Roman Church in its worst days never did more than enforce obedience. What less does the State--the free State of our day? We talk of the Inquisition. But the victim could surrender and conform and have full pardon for his contempt of the Pontifical Court. It is the same here in America to-day. John Smith declines to testify. Our Inquisition (the Court or Congress) commits him for contempt, to bread and water in close confinement, or to whatever other better treatment will serve its purpose. In either case the victim must surrender or die. A filthy jail, bad air and food, are a rack on which if a man be stretched a sufficiently long time he will confess his "sin," or pass on and away from the State's clutches. The kind of torture resorted to has nothing to do with the question of right. To deprive one of his liberty by shutting him in a palace would not help matters. The fact is, both State and Church act on the same principle; the individual must surrender to the institution. Yet one's religion may dictate no support of either. Where then is religious liberty?

IN THE GUIBORD case, it seems to me the Catholic Church was clearly in the right. Guibord as a Catholic was bound to submit to Catholic discipline. If he did not, the Church had a clear right to withhold Catholic privileges. It refused to bury him in consecrated ground. What right had the civil power to compel it to do so? This claim of the State is an impertinence the Church does well to resist in whatever way the exigency may dictate.

MR. MURRAY gives his people their freedom as follows:--

"We know that new ideas, new views of truth,

new conceptions of the Deity, and a finer sensing of things spiritual will come continually to the mind that keeps itself open to their coming. I urge you all to keep growthful therefore. Live always in anticipation of knowing more to-morrow than you know to-day. Let no new truth, no new discovery, be a surprise to you. Live expecting them to call upon you as expected friends, any day. Do not cling to your last year's growth. Be as wise as the trees, and shed your leaves when they begin to wither and get old. Do not perpetuate stupidity; do not transmit ignorance to your children; do not impose bigotry upon the next generation by cherishing the bigotry of this. Feel that there is room enough on all sides of you to expand; that you can no more touch the boundaries of knowledge than a tree can thrust its branches out until they touch and are doubled back upon themselves by contact with the horizon wall.

"You see, then, how out of this idea of education comes naturally the idea of freedom. No man, no body of men, have a right to dictate to your minds. Reject all human dictation. Search after the true analysis. Feel all liberty to filter all sands in your search for the precious grains which lie no man knows where, until by patient seeking and testing he has found them. Any church that tethers its membership within narrow bounds, fetters the divine life of the soul. The spirit which dwells within you, which wings you with power to fly, is as free as the wind which comes and goes at its will. It blows the fragrance of blossomed truth from all shores; it wafts perfume from all points of the compass; and only those nostrils that are kept open to its coming ever scent the sweetness of its breath."

To be sure, he follows this up with the declaration that "the end of all Christian education is Christ"; but then he immediately adds, "Not the objective Christ which has his personality outside of you and above you, but the subjective Christ whose personality is in you."

IF WE START with the idea that human nature is depraved and damnable, we shall bring up into all sorts of damnable ways. To say that human nature is perfect, is not to say that individuals have attained to perfection. It is only to say that human nature is perfect in its adaptation to, and disposition towards, self-culture and perfected attainments. But it is in bondage to a lower nature out of which it has sprung, with which the human part must not be confounded. Divine nature is the human nature emancipated.

A POLICEMAN told me he could have arrested any number of drunken men on the 17th of June, but it was unnecessary, they were all so good-natured, so brim-full of the spirit of reconciliation. This shows what an idea can do, even when it is whiskey-soaked.

THE CHICAGO Times puts it very compactly when it says: "When it is once thoroughly understood that the game is to issue greenbacks until they are as cheap as were John Law's notes, or the assignats, or the continental or Confederate 'money,' and then use them to pay the war debt, the repudiators will be overwhelmingly repudiated, for the people still have a good strong sense of public honor, and some perception of the advantage of public credit. But if the repudiators win, they had better build themselves impregnable castles, or flee the country, as there will be trouble for them when the deposits in savings banks of the country, amounting in round number to a thousand million dollars, have been made worthless by inflation. Let them remember John Law, who had to flee precipitately to escape the wrath of his deluded and plundered victims."

"WHAT DO I CARE for a depreciated currency," said a lazy loafer to a man who tried to prove that inflation meant depreciation; "fifty cents on a dollar will do for me," continued the loafer. "I'll take your dollar at ten per cent. on its face. You fellows that work may object to them, but I go for the value I find in them. I don't care to sweat over a gold dollar, if I can get enough depreciated currency for nothing. I go for inflation!"--Columbia, S. C., Union-Herald.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 23.

E. L. Saxon, 25 cents; A. Magnussen, $1.50; John Gardner, $3.20; Charles Bartholomew, 75 cents; W. M. McFarland, $3; Mary N. Adams, $3.20; J. O. Wellington, 13 cents; Edward Palmer, $1.47; Cash, 85 cents; Colby & Rich, $1.50; C. B. Boyce, $3.25; Francis Alger, $34.40; E. W. Weir, $23.40; American News Co., $2.55; A. J. O. Weise, 75 cents; I. B. A. Haynes, $3.20; Preston Day, $3.25; P. R. Wright, $3; W. H. Walbridge, 10 cents; W. L. Hays, 25 cents; C. S. Stebbins, 10 cents; D. Porter, 20 cents; A. P. Tilden, 10 cents; Geo. Iles, $1; C. W. Newton, $9; R. Kieler, $1; A. Williams & Co., $2.68; George Young, $3.20; Atherton Blight, $3; John Hendrie, $2.65; H. M. Fisher, 75 cents; C. M. Lunger, $3.20; P. N. Bucknam, $3; Geo. O. Smith, $5; C. Wellington, $3.20; Caroline Wellington, $3.20; L. G. Janes, 45 cents; Joseph Whitney, $3.20; Southward Potter, $3.15; David Tenney, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.--Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.--Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.--When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.--Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 28, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

MR. C. D. B. MILLS, as appears by his list of lectures on our last page, offers a tempting intellectual feast to the public this winter. His reputation as a lecturer is growing rapidly and deservedly.

THE VOTE of the Overseers of Harvard College with regard to compulsory attendance on religious services, by which the seniors were last year excused from penalty or censure on account of absence from church, has been renewed for the current year. It seems that the college does not go to the dogs, even if the students do not get their regular dose of preaching. Probably the liberty now enjoyed by the senior class will soon be shared by the other classes. We hope it will.

MR. GILES B. STEBBINS, who is so well known as a lecturer both in the East and the West, informs us that he is now "in the lecture field for Free Religion; Spiritualism; the emancipation of the mind; a wise use of the mental and spiritual faculties for a higher conduct of life; the exposure of the horrors and absurdities of dogmatic theology, with a pointing-up to a higher and richer ideal of life; a truer conception of man's nature and capacities; opposition to 'God-in-the-Constitution,' and to all plans of Catholic or Protestant intolerance." Mr. Stebbins commands universal respect by the purity of his character, the elevated and cheerful tone of his lectures, and the devotedness of his spirit to all good things, and deserves the success he wins. His address in Detroit, Michigan.

PROGRESS AT FLORENCE.

We are glad to receive this encouraging letter from Mr. Clark in season for publication this week:—

FLORENCE, Mass., 23d Oct., 1875.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

You will be interested to know of the prospect in regard to the Liberal League for which the seeds were planted when you were with us, two or three weeks since.

We have been much cheered by the number at Northampton who have expressed themselves as favorable to the movement. Our first preliminary meeting, succeeding that at which you addressed us at Cosmian Hall, took place last Tuesday evening at Northampton. There were some twenty-five or thirty persons present, some of them of Evangelical affiliations. Joseph Marsh, the well-known Northampton book-seller, and a member of the Florence Free Congregational Society, made some introductory remarks explanatory of the objects of the Leagues. Dyer D. Lum, of Northampton, with whom the readers of THE INDEX have an acquaintance, acted as secretary. The plan of organization presented in THE INDEX was taken up and discussed, and the occasion was one of an interesting and intelligent exchange of opinions and feelings. The meeting adjourned for one week, when the organization proposed will doubtless be effected and put into operation.

The Springfield Republican contained the following brief reference to our meeting:—

"The preliminary meeting for the forming of a Liberal League was held in Clark's Hall, Tuesday evening, among those present being Seth Hunt, treasurer of the Connecticut River Railroad, Revs. C. B. Ferry, of the Unitarian Church, and D. H. Clark, of the Free Congregationalist Church at Florence, W. B. Hale, and others. After discussing the aim of organization, they adjourned for one week, when the officers will be elected and the League instituted."

It is time that the cry went forth to Radicals everywhere: "Awake, thou that sleepest." While men sleep, the enemy sows tares. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

D. H. C.

A PROGRAMME OF WORK.

The Liberal League Convention at Philadelphia, on September 17, 18, and 19, reported in THE INDEX of September 30, seems to have had an excellent effect in calling attention to the true character, objects, and principles of an intrinsically great and important movement, and in awakening interest in it in different parts of the country. From various quarters we learn that the liberals are seriously contemplating the organization of new Leagues, and we hope their purpose will not be allowed to flag. A gentleman in the capital of one of the Western States has just written to communicate information of a new local movement in this direction, stating that in that locality the word "League" is in disfavor with the liberals on account of its association with the "White League" of the South, inquiring whether the name is essential to the movement, and suggesting that this point is worth noticing in THE INDEX. Our reply was to the effect that no name can be made a shibboleth of so broad and vital a movement as this, and that, if a prejudice exists anywhere against the word "League," any association is to all intents and purposes a Liberal League which is intelligently and earnestly devoted to the League's especial work. By a direct vote expressing in an unambiguous way its intention to labor actively for the complete separation of Church and State, and its desire to cooperate in the formation of the proposed National Liberal League next year, any organization, whatever its local name, will properly belong in our informal list of Leagues, and be properly entitled to representation in the General Congress of Liberals in 1876, in case it is deemed best by the General Centennial Committee to convene that gathering as a representative body. It might prevent some possible misunderstandings among the friends of this movement, if they should all adopt the same general title for their local organizations; but all that is really essential is devotion to the practical reform of secularizing the State in all respects. Wherever a radical society or club exists, the advisability of the whole project should be specially, freely, and candidly discussed; and if it seems to be a wise and right movement, then it will be well to take prompt action accordingly.

One point, however, it is all-important to bear in mind. Whatever name may be adopted as a local designation, it should never be forgotten that the ultimate object of the Liberal League movement as a whole is action; debate and discussion should be merely means to this end. It may be doubtful whether a society organized simply to hold stated meetings of a social, literary, scientific or religious character, and originally designed for the support of lectures or local services rather than for the active prosecution of practical measures, can easily or wisely be transformed into an association of the latter kind, or whether it can readily combine the two objects together. If serious objections should be urged, no attempt ought to be made to override them, even if urged only by a small minority. It would be far better for the bolder and more active spirits, though few, to organize a Liberal League independently, and seek only the cooperation of those who heartily and entirely favor the vigorous promotion of its objects. The kind of work contemplated calls for courage and self-sacrifice; the indifferent, the unconvinced, the timid, cannot do it, and should not be asked to do it. Let only those be appealed to who have a clear vision of the magnitude and magnificence of this cause, a clear purpose to promote it in a spirit worthy of it, and a clear willingness to brave whatever opposition and to make whatever sacrifices it may involve. It calls for heroes to take up this cause in earnest, and persistently plead its justice till the conscience of this mighty nation is touched to its core. Although the justice of the demand for the absolute secularization of the State is so evident, and the necessity of it so pressing, the obstacles to it are nevertheless so formidable that reluctance to move in the matter should not too much discourage us. Let it be understood that whoever openly and boldly tries to emancipate the State from the unacknowledged but in fact tremendously strong chains of ecclesiasticism will encounter more or less odium and opposition at once, even among those who would assent without hesitation to the abstract proposition that in a really free republic the Church and the State must be absolutely separate. There is an immense and difficult work before us, friends, and it must be taken up, if at all, in the spirit of genuine heroism. Whatever is unimportant, this is supremely important: to understand thoroughly the nature of the vast task before us, to bring to its execution a noble spirit of self-sacrifice for the public good, and to be resolved to prosecute it with the determination, energy, and wisdom which men carry into their chief business affairs. It is no child's play to undertake the enlargement of public liberty and the establishment of denied or violated public rights; and it will be only men of strong character and high aims who will really give themselves to this great cause of the Liberal League.

For those who may not precisely comprehend in what manner it is to be practically carried forward, we venture to suggest that the secularization of the school system by the abolition of Bible-reading and other religious exercises in the public schools is the reform most urgently demanded at present. The public school system is to-day in the greatest danger, not so much from the fact that it is openly attacked from without by the Catholics, as from the fact that a great inherent injustice to all non-Protestants is made part and parcel of it by its distinctively Protestant character. What is built on wrong is built on the sand; and our school system will certainly fall in ruins by-and-by, unless it can be grounded on equal justice to all. Let, then, the exclusion of the Bible from the schools be the first measure proposed by the Liberal League. How will a local League go to work?

1. Let a meeting of the League be called to discuss the adoption of some such resolution as this:—

"WHEREAS, The use of the Bible in the public schools is a violation of the recognized American principle that the Church and the State ought to be absolutely separate; and whereas it is a practice which gives a distinctively Protestant character to the public school system, is grossly unjust to all non-Protestants taxed to support it, and thereby dangerously aids the Roman Catholic Church in its openly avowed warfare upon it; therefore,

"Resolved, That the Liberal League of ——— hereby respectfully petition the Board of Education to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools of this city; and that the officers of the League are hereby instructed to carry this resolution into effect."

2. If this resolution is heartily adopted, then let it be immediately published in the local papers, even if it has to be paid for as an advertisement; for the appeal is made really to public opinion, which is to be educated so as to discern and ordain justice in this matter.

3. Further, let the officers of the League, in presenting the resolution, request a public hearing by the Board of Education, at which the ablest and best advocates of the measure to be found in the city shall be engaged to plead for its adoption.

4. At the same time, let all the members of the League join in canvassing the city for signatures from the citizens in support of the League's petition, securing as many as possible, and not forgetting that this whole movement is a general, not partisan one, and proposes only to make the schools genuinely unsectarian.

5. Moreover, let the League hold public meetings, free to all, for the fullest discussion of the subject, welcoming objections and giving a most kindly and courteous hearing to all objectors. The strength of the movement must lie wholly in its justice, its reasonableness, its beneficence to the whole community; it must win its triumph solely by an appeal to the public reason and conscience; and it will be sure to win in the end, notwithstanding temporary defeats, wherever these methods are thoroughly and persistently practised.

6. If the Board of Education refuse the petition after all, then let the election of a new Board that will grant it be made the special object of the League. The reform of the school system in this respect is of most vital concern to the whole body of electors; and the question should be boldly carried to them for decision. Reform may be voted down again and again, but it will be voted up in the end, provided only that the friends of reform do not flag nor grow weary in the good cause. The Liberal League is nothing but an organized expression of the awakening conscience of the country touching a great existing wrong.

7. "DON'T GIVE UP THE SHIP!"

TYPHUS VERSUS PRAYER.

George Müller's Orphan Asylum in Bristol, England, supported (as he claims) entirely by prayer, has become famous throughout the world. In founding and sustaining this institution, which has grown into an immense and in many respects excellent establishment, he professes never to have made any appeal to man for aid, but to have relied wholly on that kind of Divine Providence which is moved to action by human supplication. Some less naively pious people have been ready to suggest that the dexterous system of advertising, through Müller's continual public iteration of the claim that the asylum is supported by prayer and through his careful distribution of information as to the good work it is doing, is quite sufficient to account for its financial success. It is certain that such publicity given to the work through newspapers and circulars is a pretty direct appeal to the sympathies of two classes of people,—of those having the same faith in the efficacy of prayer as Müller, and of philanthropic persons who care little for the religious dogmas involved, if they can only help forward a humane mission. But let this sceptical intimation pass at present. Let it be admitted that the asylum is the result solely of Müller's prayers to his God as he has bent on his knees in his closet, and that even the same financial success would have attended it, if Müller had not prayed so as to have been heard of men.

But now it seems that the Divine Providence that has thus brought these hundreds of orphans together and given them the shelter of a home has not deemed it necessary to care for the health and life of the little ones when collected. It would seem, on the contrary, as if many of them had been entrapped to an early and suffering death. For late reports from England brought the intelligence that the asylum had been visited by a most virulent form of typhoid fever, which raged with such fury and proved so fatal that the civil authorities of the city of Bristol were compelled to order an inspection by the public Board of Health. And the official British inspection of this work of the Almighty showed a condition of things that had directly invited the worst forms of malignant disease. In foul water-closets and bad sewerage the seeds of typhus were revealed. The most ordinary requirements of sanitary drainage and cleanliness had been neglected, and none of the precautions taken for the protection of health which modern science demands. The inspectors bluntly reported that the sickness and mortality could be traced directly to this violation of common sanitary laws, and directed, without recourse to prayer, an entire reconstruction of the drainage of the establishment.

Now it is a curious fact, worth noting, that Müller's success by his method of prayer seems to have extended just as far as his human sympathies and knowledge extended, and no farther. The Divine Providence that was caring for his asylum appears to have been limited by Müller's own limited knowledge of sanitary laws, and threatened to break down just where his knowledge so fatally ceased; a fact indicating that the Divine Providence which is working for human benefit works very much through human intelligence and volition. Müller and his associates had spent their zeal in supplicating the Almighty for the money needed to keep the orphans from starvation and the perils of street life, and in spreading printed information concerning their prayers through England. Hence no Providence had been invoked to save the innocents from the poison of a foul drain, until the typhus, like an angel of retribution for broken law, threatening to devastate the city with disease, summoned a very effective providential agency in the health inspectors. And these two acts—Müller on his knees, praying for money to carry on his asylum, in the midst of the very foulness and disease it had engendered, and the health inspectors ferreting out the ill-constructed drains and demanding that they be rebuilt according to sanitary laws—represent in sharp contrast the old and the new ideas of Divine Providence.

And this incident will serve as well as any to illustrate that none of the beneficent results alleged to flow from the old view of Divine Providence would be lost, if it were to be supplanted by the new. If the same philanthropic zeal which now impels Müller to prayer as his instrumentality were to impel him to appeal directly to his fellow-men for the aid he needs in his work, there can be no doubt that the means would be abundantly obtained. Orphan asylums seldom appeal for human help in vain. Nothing touches the sympathies of man or woman so quickly as the sight or the imagination of a helpless orphaned child. The feeling that hastens to its relief does not have to be invoked to descend by some supernatural, invisible pathway from the heavens; it is already implanted and actively alive in some human heart, which only has to be notified of the need. The roughest frontiersman, the coarsest and vilest of men, will soften into something of tenderness, if an infant child, bereft of its natural care, be thrown upon their compassion. Nothing is easier in philanthropy than to secure an interest in schemes for destitute children. Only let the schemes be judicious and genuine, and there will be no lack of means for their support in any ordinarily moral community. The means will flow from that fountain of natural kindness which belongs to the human heart; and of which we may say that it is not only human, but divine—that is, representative of a power in the universe that is beyond and greater than humanity.

And so in general. The sentiment and act of philanthropy are the natural pathway of Divinity. The philanthropy of the human heart, guided by reason and knowledge, using the results of science as well as the impulses of pity, may be appealed to with confidence for establishing even greater works for human welfare than Müller and his fellow-believer have ever instituted.

W. J. P.

WOMEN'S CONGRESS.

The Women's Congress held at Syracuse on October 13, 14, and 15, was a noteworthy gathering in all its aspects, and is a sign of the progress making both by and for women on the questions in which they are most deeply interested.

It was not precisely a convention for agitation, but rather a meeting for discussion and the promotion of mutual acquaintance with each other's views; and yet, partaking as it did of both characters, the unexpectedly large audience which came to listen made the former purpose more predominant.

The question of suffrage did not occupy a very prominent place, but seemed to be taken for granted by the speakers generally, who were rather aiming to strengthen women to meet the new order of things that seems to be inevitable.

The papers were generally earnest statements rather than rhetorical appeals, and there was very little controversy, sarcasm, or denunciation of any sort.

Education was the leading topic, and was ably touched by many speakers. The importance of woman's influence in the public schools, and the duty of woman to acquire thorough training in every department of study undertaken by her was repeatedly insisted upon. Anna C. Brackett, of New York, read an admirable essay on the value of the mental discipline of the school, full of sound wisdom and great beauty of expression; and Grace Anna Lewis sent an excellent scientific paper.

The subject of crime was represented in a clear and suggestive paper by Elizabeth R. Chace, of Rhode Island; but it did not receive the full discussion it deserved. More time was given to temperance, in regard to which Mrs. Blackwell and Mrs. Cutler gave some interesting reminiscences.

One morning was given to art in its relation to education and society, and a very charming paper was read by Mrs. Doggett, of Chicago.

Dress reform, also, received some attention. Perhaps the Congress failed to do as full justice as it might to any one subject, by touching upon so many; but the temptation is very great, with a fresh place and a fresh audience every year, to strive to arouse attention to a subject rather than thoroughly to satisfy inquiry.

The presence of Prof. Maria Mitchell as presiding officer gave a great charm and dignity to the assembly. She was very quiet and courteous, and yet decided, in her management of the meeting, and was reelected for another year by universal acclamation.

Mrs. Livermore's lecture on "Superfluous Women" was given one evening, and delighted the large audience which crowded the Opera House to its utmost capacity.

The hospitality of the people of Syracuse seemed to be unbounded, both to the members of the Congress and to their ideas. The audience were remarkably intelligent, respectful, and responsive, and the frequent references in society to the thoughts offered in the speeches from the platform showed how much interest they had aroused. Members were often stopped in the streets by listeners eager to ask some question about the subjects discussed at the meetings.

It was curious to see how all sense of strangeness passed away. Prof. Mitchell seemed to preside by divine right, and all the speakers took their places so simply and naturally, that the peculiarity of their being all women was hardly felt.

The Congress is good as an intermediate measure, to unite women together, to show them their own strength, and to give them freedom in expression; but any such one-sided expression should be only temporary. We need for the discussion of these great social questions the united wisdom and conscience of both sexes working harmoniously together.

It was delightful to feel the pervading spirit of Samuel J. May throughout the city. All classes and sects united to do him honor, and we felt almost as much that we had visited him in his city, as if he had been there in actual presence. His gifted young fellow-citizen, Miss Gifford, has made an admirable bust of him, which by the generosity of the Unitarian society is placed in the city library, in the high school building. Miss Gifford was a pupil of Hiram Powers, and her work is thoroughly good. It represents Mr. May in his last years, and looks somewhat old and bent to those who remember him best in his prime, and it emphasizes the strong rather than the sweet traits of his nature; but it is a faithful likeness of Samuel J. May, and so, like him, will be a perpetual lesson of truth and good.

E. D. C.

INFLATION.

NO. III.

By reference to the tract that was printed at the head of the first of this series of articles, the reader will observe that, believing the banking system now in vogue, is unjust and oppressive, the inflationists have determined to abolish the banks and to substitute a financial system of their own. Their first proposition is to "demand a return of the national bank-notes, and return to the banks their securities." A return of these notes means their redemption in greenbacks and a contraction of the currency. To avoid this contraction, they demand an issue of greenbacks by the government, fully equal to the amount of the retired notes. But how do they propose to put these greenbacks into circulation? The plan is very simple: "Create sufficient greenbacks to buy an amount of bonds equal to those returned [by the banks]. Tax-payers will thus save millions of dollars yearly, and the country will still have about the same volume of currency as now."

I emphasize the main part of this proposition by the use of italics. It is essentially a dishonest proposition, and the saving of hundreds of millions of dollars to tax-payers cannot make it honest. The government is under no obligation to pay any part of the bonded debt for years to come. On the other hand, it is under a solemn obligation to pay the enormous debt represented by greenbacks, at the earliest possible moment. What would be thought of a merchant who refused to meet obligations overdue, and then entered the market to purchase his notes maturing years hence—pleading in justification, that he was saving interest? The standard of mercantile honor is no higher than it should be, but there is not a business man in the community who would not condemn such a transaction as an abominable fraud. However innocent of fraudulent intention, gentlemen may be, who propose this scheme to the government, this is just what the proposition means; for if such a transaction is dishonest when committed by an individual, it is equally so when committed by Congress. The expediency of such a policy need not be discussed; for what is morally wrong is necessarily inexpedient, and, being essentially wicked, the mere statement of the scheme is its best refutation.

But let us suppose the inflationists in power, and the policy adopted. Let us imagine that they have bought $400,000,000 of bonds (the amount now held by the banks), retired the bank-notes, and issued $400,000,000 in greenbacks. The amount in circulation will then be about $800,000,000. The national banks will be abolished, and authority to issue currency will be vested solely in the government. And now all the benefits and blessings of inflation are to be realized. The government is to "issue as much [currency] as productive industries may require, on United States bonds or real estate as security, charging four per cent. interest, and making the money interchangeable with 3.65 per cent. United States bonds." That is to say, when money is worth five, or six, or seven per cent. per annum, the government must lend it, at four per cent.; but, when it is not worth over one or two per cent., it must borrow at 3.65 per cent. There may be a surplus in the treasury, but it must borrow, and must pay a higher rate than other borrowers pay; or there may be a deficit in the treasury, but it must lend, and lend at a lower rate than other lenders will submit to. Refer this feature of the proposition, also, to the mercantile community. There is not a merchant or banker who will not characterize it as ridiculous and suicidal, if you ask him to adopt it in his own business.

But aside from the loss of interest involved, what effect will the adoption of this financial measure have upon the business of the country, and the ultimate credit of the nation? If a majority of the people can be persuaded to believe in it, the spirit of speculation will receive a new impetus. The value of United States bonds and real estate together is estimated at many billions of dollars. A rush for the treasury will be made by bond-holders and real-estate owners, and an unlimited amount of the new currency will be put into circulation. Enterprises of all kinds will be started, and, for a time, the people will suppose they are prosperous; but eventually, and as sure as night follows day, the evils of over-trading and speculation will overtake them. The crash will come. Over-production will have glutted the markets with unsalable goods. Town lots, for which inhabitants cannot be found, will have been laid out; railroads, canals, factories, will have been built, far in excess of our necessities. The fever once broken, a chill of fear and distrust will succeed it. Millions, or, more probably, thousands of millions, of dollars, will in vain seek for safe investment. No longer able to earn four per cent. through the "productive industries," this vast amount will be thrown upon the government; and it must swell its indebtedness by paying 3.65 per cent. for it. Land, having been pledged, not alienated, and being practically indivisible, cannot well be exchanged for currency, and therefore all money carried to the treasury, will be entitled to a 3.65 per cent. bond. Then denunciation of "bloated bond-holders," and bloated real-estate owners, will be in order. The laboring class, unemployed, will denounce, as an imposition and an iniquity, the law that taxes them to enable these lazy aristocrats to draw their income from the treasury. And right here I call attention to the fact, that the men who are now loudest in their condemnation of money monopolists and class legislation, are the very men who vociferously urge legislation that will give bond-holders and real-estate owners a monopoly of the money issued by the government.

But, overlooking this rather suggestive, not to say instructive, coincidence, let us pursue their scheme a little further. The danger of an over-issue of money in response to the demands of bond-holders and land-owners—the privileged classes—will be almost paralleled by the danger of an over-issue by Congress for its own purposes. It will have authority to issue money, limited solely by the demands of "productive industry." An immaculate Congress might make serious mistakes; but, judging from the past, our future Congress will not be immaculate; and, in addition to issues of money honestly proposed, there will be a pressing demand for issues to be applied to internal improvements. Washington will swarm with patriots eager to engage the government in plans for the development of our internal resources. The party in power will not hesitate to secure votes by the employment of thousands of laborers. How to pay them will no longer be a serious question, for the Secretary of the Treasury will "create" money as fast as it is needed. His paper-mill can be kept running day and night, if necessary. But, says the inflationist, "our 3.65 bond will absorb any excess of currency." Unfortunately, this "bond" is only another name for the currency; it is the same thing, with a little more added, under the name of interest. The two, that is, the greenback and bond, are to be "interchangeable"; the new greenback is to be paid in this bond, and it is to be paid in greenbacks. There is no solid foundation for either, and, practically, there is to be no check upon the issue of either.

Millions of dollars are to be paid out for government salaries and government work; billions of dollars are to be loaned to bond-holders and real-estate owners; and all of this money is to be redeemed in bonds payable in paper! How many bushels of such money and such bonds will be required for the purchase of a bushel of wheat? This is a conundrum that can be answered only when one can guess how many gallons of water a bottomless tub will hold.

But another question remains to be considered. With the advent of the new legal-tender, what is to become of the greenbacks now in circulation? They will cease to be currency as soon as the new money is issued, for no one will exchange a paper dollar redeemable in gold for one redeemable in paper. They will represent a gold debt of the government, amounting to about $800,000,000, and payable on demand. Yes; and they will represent the honor of the government and the integrity of the nation. Will the inflationists redeem them? It is safe to say they have no such intention. Having ruined the public credit with their irredeemable currency and bonds, they will point to our hopeless financial condition, and plead inability. Here and there, some one will propose to fund them in a long, very, very long bond, with principal and interest payable in gold. This, interpreted, means, violate the pledge of the nation by forcing the holder of the greenback to exchange it for the bond. Others will tell you plainly to pool it with the new legal-tender, and so use it as money, or to invest it in the new 3.65 bond. Take your choice! This is repudiation, pure and simple, and this, after all, is the true solution of the inflation problem. The road from inflation to repudiation is direct, the distance is short, and the transit will be rapid. "Let her paint an inch thick, to this favor she must come."

In conclusion, I wish to say that, in characterizing the inflation schemes as dishonest, and disastrous to national morals as well as to national prosperity, I by no means intend to impugn the integrity of all inflationists. Some of them, and especially the author of the tract I have used as a text, believe they are reformers in the best sense of that much abused term. If the advocacy of inflation could be confined to unprincipled men, the possibility of its endorsement by the people would be materially diminished.

R. P. H.

WEST WISCONSIN NOTES.

The fairs are over, and the grangers have scattered for winter quarters. There was the usual number of fat hogs, big squashes, rows, races, and run-aways. The usual dust this year, however, was mud. This is the only variation we can report, except, perhaps, a very sensible address at Oshkosh by Chas. Francis Adams, Jr., in which he departed from the conventional speech about the delights and independence of the farmer's life, to tell the citizens of our State how to deal with the railroads.

The weather is cold; Indian summer is wintry; but the theological thermometer in and about Chicago indicates blood-heat, with an upward tendency. It is true, Moody has not yet made his advent in that "upstart village," as St. Louis denominates her rival sister; but the infidels, rationalists, Jews, and emissaries of Satan generally, have produced, perhaps, a greater excitement than brothers Moody, Sankey, and the Holy Ghost could possibly have done. About two weeks ago (Sept. 28), the School Board of Chicago voted to dispense with Bible-reading and morning prayers in the public schools. Following close upon this sacrilegious act, Judge Booth delivered before the Philosophical Society of Chicago an able, elaborate, and very radical lecture on "The Evidences of the Resurrection of Christ," in which he exposes the tissue of contradictions in the Gospels with unsparing hand, and which was all spread out in sight of the public in the morning papers. These almost simultaneous assaults in front and rear of the Christian camp have thoroughly aroused the clergy; and the papers are full of their replies to Judge Booth, and sermons, lectures, resolutions, and emphatic protests against the action of the School Board.

The Chicago Presbytery passed resolutions unanimously condemning the Board for expelling the Bible, and committees have been appointed to labor with the School Board to prevail upon them to reconsider their action. With but few exceptions, including the Unitarian clergymen, the preachers of the city appear to be a unit in their opposition. Unless the members of the School Board have more moral back-bone than some other officials in that city, it is greatly to be feared that the Bible-worshippers will force them to back down. Zeal, enthusiasm, and pertinacity frequently overcome justice and truth. If we are not mistaken, the Board of Education in Detroit were thus persuaded to get down on repentant knees, and abjure their heresies. We trust Chicago will show us that the world does move, after all.

So far as we have read the sermons against the action of the Chicago Board, the arguments rest on the assumption that the Bible is the only moral standard; that Republican institutions must rest on morals as well as on intelligence; and therefore that the State is bound to retain the Bible in her schools where her citizens are trained. If these premises were both true, the conclusion would be inevitable; but, if true, the Church and State ought to demand (as Catholics do) that the Bible and the Christian theology in full be instilled into the minds of children at school; that a rigid indoctrination be exacted of teachers, and examinations in Bible-teaching be required of every candidate for suffrage, or for any official position whatever. Instead of this, in several States where religious services are required in schools, the law expressly provides that the Bible shall not be taught; that it shall be merely read without note or comment. Will the Christian clergy presume to say that upon such desultory and perfunctory reading our republican institutions rest?

But the premise is not true, that the republic rests on the Bible. It rests on the spirit of liberty, and upon ideas of justice and equal rights which were quite foreign to the age of Jesus. The Bible, especially the New Testament, does not inculcate political, but rather the domestic, social, and submissive virtues. So far as the theology of the New Testament is concerned, it is decidedly anti-republican. It commands us to bow down to King Jesus; to pay the tax of unquestioning "faith," and acknowledge mental and moral allegiance to a heavenly dictator. Such a doctrine is monarchical rather than republican.

Again: it is urged by these Protestants that, if it offends the Catholic conscience to keep the Bible in the schools, it also offends the Protestant conscience to put it out of the schools. If so, there is a "conflict of consciences," and we see no way to settle it squarely except by fighting it out on that line, and decide it by majorities, as questions of conscience have been decided in history, unhappily too often, by sword and fire. If Protestants feel that the Bible in schools, and Catholics feel that the destruction of the schools themselves, are demands of conscience rather than of religious prejudice or political expediency, then we can see no other alternative but a stubborn conflict of consciences. Catholics and Rationalists united against Protestants to expel the Bible from public schools; and, when that is done, Rationalists and Protestants united against Catholics to preserve the public schools themselves, which both believe are essential to the stability and perpetuity of republican institutions. But Protestants and Rationalists ought to form an immediate alliance against the common enemy of free schools. It is unquestionably true that Catholics do not hate Bible-reading in schools half as much as they hate the schools; and, on the other hand, we believe it is unquestionable that Protestants do not care half as much for Bible-reading in schools as they do to preserve the schools themselves. Now, as Catholics are winging their shaft with our feather—are making the common practice of reading the Bible in schools a pretext for assaulting the school system itself,—cannot all Protestant Christians see that it is the part of political wisdom to disarm the Catholics by taking the Bible out of the schools? So long as we suffer Bible-reading in schools, we are furnishing a strong, plausible reason to legislatures to grant division of the school fund, as is done in East St. Louis. Nothing is more short-sighted and fatuous than the purblind stubbornness of Protestants in insisting on Bible-reading in our public schools. They unwittingly whet the knife or clasp the sword-blade aimed at their own heart.

One of the protesters against the action of the Chicago Board urges that such action was a discredit of the Bible. Says he: "The very day the reading and prayer was abandoned, I had the question from my own and other children, 'Is the Bible not a good book? Why, then, quit reading it in school?'" Would it not have been very easy for the gentleman to have answered? "Yes, the Bible is a good book; but we think the place to read it and teach it is the home, the church, and the Sunday-school. It is not proper to read it at school, because there are children attending school whose parents do not wish the Bible read there; and, as they are taxed to support the public schools, equally with myself, we do not think it right needlessly to offend their feelings. So we take the Bible out, and we think it is doing to others as we would have others do to us." But the reverend gentleman could apparently think of no other answer than this: "Because the Bible is not a correct moral standard, and therefore unfit for the school, they kicked it out," and the child goes away with a debased idea of the Bible, and of course will soon be using it as a foot-ball, and end his days in a felon's cell or on a traitor's gibbet! "Where will you stop?" they cry. "If you expel the Bible, why not expel all hymns and songs of Wesley, Watts, or Milton? You can't teach reading, for the child might come across the truth—'Man is immortal,' or 'Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners,' and this would be sectarian reading. You can't study grammar, for the pupil might have to parse the sentence, 'Sin is the transgression of the law'; can't learn to spell, for such words as soul, sin, guilt, salvation, hell, and heaven may come in to offend somebody,—in short, can't study anything. When are we going to stop expunging and expelling, if we begin to concede to the whines and prejudices of people?"

The reply to all this is very simple. Bible-reading as a religious service is what we object to. As to the literature of the Bible, properly selected, we think no one would object to its occasional use in reading, parsing, etc., any more than they would to passages from the Koran, Books of Kings, Laws of Manu, or Path of Virtue. It appears like a dishonest evasion of the real issue, and mere special pleading, when such objections are offered by Bible-defenders. Still they are presented apparently in good faith, and no doubt carry conviction to those who cannot see through the veil of sophistry.

Hoping that we may report in our next that the Bible is still excluded from the Chicago schools, we remain yours for truth,
W. H. S.
SPARTA, Wis., Oct. 14, 1875.

Communications.

PRACTICAL EFFECT OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE ON MASSACHUSETTS POLITICS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

"Equal Rights for all American citizens irrespective of sex" having been reaffirmed by the Republican State Convention, Woman Suffrage again becomes a recognized question in our State politics. As such it must be met next winter in our Legislature. I propose to show what it actually means.

The United States Census for 1870 gives the following statistics. There were in Massachusetts

Native born males over 21 years of age	280,324
Foreign " " " " " "	130,832

Native American male majority	122,492
-------------------------------	---------

Of the males, however, the following number were unable to read and write, and were therefore legally disqualified to vote:—

Native born illiterate males over 21	2,577
Foreign " " " " " "	28,343

Total	30,920
-------	--------

This gives us the following as the male population capable of voting on the present educational and sexual qualifications:—

Native born male voters	257,747
Foreign " " " " " "	109,489

Native American voting majority	148,258
---------------------------------	---------

This was the actual state of facts in 1870 in Massachusetts. It is still approximately correct, and represents, on our present voting basis, a native American voting majority of 148,258. Now let us see what would be the effect of an extension of suffrage to women upon the same terms as men.

By the United States Census for 1870 there were in Massachusetts:—

Native born women over 21 years old	289,820
Foreign " " " " " "	149,918

Native American female majority	139,902
---------------------------------	---------

Of these females, however, the following number were unable to read and write, and would therefore be legally disqualified to vote:—

Native born illiterate females over 21	4,404
Foreign " " " " " "	48,486

Total	52,890
-------	--------

This would leave us the following female population capable of voting on the present educational qualification:—

Native born female voters	285,416
Foreign " " " " " "	101,432

Native American female voting majority	183,984
--	---------

Thus a law giving suffrage to women in Massachusetts upon the same terms as men would give us

Native born male voters	257,747
" " female voters	285,416

Total native born voters	543,163
--------------------------	---------

Foreign born male voters	109,489
" " female voters	101,432

Total foreign born voters	210,921
Native American voting majority	332,242

Thus the extension of suffrage to women in Massachusetts would increase the number of native American voters from 257,747 to 543,163, and would increase the native American voting majority from 148,258 to 332,242. It would thus thoroughly Americanize the politics of Massachusetts. This fact explains, though it does not justify, the rabid virulence with which the Boston Pilot opposes Woman Suffrage.

The Democratic party demands the repeal of the educational suffrage qualification. The explanation of this is found in the fact stated above. Of the 30,920 males over 21 who cannot read and write there were

Native born	2,577
Foreign	28,343

In other words, the repeal of the educational qualification would give the Democratic party, as now organized, at least 28,000 additional votes, or, in other words, would give them the control of the State; while Woman Suffrage, on the other hand, would give the Republican party, as now organized, at least 100,000 additional majority, and would thereby continue its supremacy.

It will be remembered that, in 1871, the Massachusetts House of Representatives directed the Tax Commissioner to ascertain and report to the Legislature the number of women who paid taxes on property. The Report (House Document No. 428) states that 33,961 women were taxed, and that they paid in that year $1,927,653.11; i.e., one-twelfth of the whole sum raised by taxation. If these 33,961 tax-paying women were made voters, they would counterbalance any supposed dangers that might arise from the votes of the 30,920 illiterate men whom the Democrats propose to enfranchise. If, therefore, the extension of suffrage to all women who can read and write seems too radical a change for our timid legislators, would it not be well to enfranchise our 33,961 tax-paying American women?

Permit me to say, in conclusion, that I do not expect a political millennium, even from impartial suffrage irrespective of sex. I am not one of those who fancy they see impending ruin in "rum, Romanism, and ignorance." I am not a "native American" in a political sense, nor even a partisan Republican. But I do believe that women born on our soil, educated in our free schools, members of our churches, and readers of our newspapers, our own mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters, are a thousand times better qualified to vote than men who cannot read and write, and who have no intelligent comprehension of political issues.

Respectfully,
HENRY B. BLACKWELL.

THE TWO WORLDS.

MY DEAR MR. EDITOR:—

There is a world of mind and a world of matter. The world of mind stands to the world of matter as superior to subordinate; as ruler to ruled. Not only is the human mind, in its ultimate conditions, destined to such lordship over matter as to subject it in unlimited uses, but it is destined to an intellectual supremacy that will open to all its most hidden secrets, and so give possession of full amplitude in knowing as well as doing. I further conceive that mind must first truly know itself as a condition of truly knowing its dependent or subordinate. Thus my thought inevitably leads to the conclusion that a valid science of mind is indispensable to a valid science of matter. I do not mean to say that the current analyses and syntheses which make our generalizations and classifications in the physical and rational sciences are dependent upon the attainment of such mental science; but I mean that the deeper mysteries of matter that are to be satisfactorily solved in a clear knowledge of its nature, methods, and purpose as a whole, are only to be explicated in a knowledge or science of mind, fully comprehensive as such.

Thus you see, while I hold, with you, that science is all-sufficient, or rightly supreme, I also hold that there are degrees of science, degrees of true knowing, and only the highest can comprehend and rule the lower in amplest manner.

The heart-throbs and head-struggles of the day seem in vital earnest for full realization in such science; and so I think they are coming to rest in attainment; for I cannot believe the human soul is fired with delusive aspirations sure to wreck it. He who can point clearly to the requisite conditions of achievement does much; but he who can unfold the actual commanding science itself, and give it available form, will do infinitely more. But whether more or less, the person is simply instrumental, and in any such effort is not rightly the object of applause or censure, though he may be congratulated or commiserated in view of success or failure.

Yours,
CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 8, 1875.
THERON GRAY.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

DEAR INDEX:—

I am glad to see that you have taken up the grand sentiment of President Grant uttered at Des Moines.

Do not tolerate for one moment the idea that he spoke as a "bid" for another term of office. The speech was wholly incidental, as I am directly informed. He spent the afternoon riding about the city with Judge Cole, who pointed out to him the fine school-houses of the city. This brought up the subject of the Catholic Church and the schools, in the light of the discussion pending in Ohio; during which, President Grant said he was interested in that subject, and, as he would be expected to speak in the evening, he would speak on that subject. They returned to Judge Cole's house about five and a half o'clock, and supper came at six and a half. In the meantime, in about half an hour, Gen. Grant, in his room, wrote his speech in pencil on notepaper.

You see it was an imprudent speech, if he wanted popularity with all parties. But he probably spoke his heart, and it made a speech that will go with the last inaugural of President Lincoln.

Truly yours,
DAVENPORT, Oct. 13, 1875.
S. S. HUNTING.

GEN. GRANT'S SPEECH.

THE IMPORTANCE OF NON-SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.—THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS WARMLY APPLAUDED. ADDRESSES BY GOV. FLETCHER, GEN. SHERMAN, AND OTHERS.—THE GENERAL PROCEEDINGS OF THE REUNION.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Sept. 30.—At the evening session of the Army of the Tennessee yesterday the Opera House was crowded. An address of welcome was delivered by the Hon. C. C. Cole, Gov. Fletcher delivered the annual oration. He reviewed the history of the Army of the Tennessee and of the Society, and dwelt on the part taken by the Iowa soldiers in the war. He referred in kindly terms to the Confederates, who opposed them, and expressed the hope that the people of all sections of the country will conduct themselves toward each other like men who have a common country.

Eulogies were pronounced on members of the Society who have died since the last meeting. Among the dead are Gens. Morgan Smith, Frank Blair, and Chester Harding.

President Grant being called for, came forward and said:—

"COMRADES: It always affords me much gratification to meet my comrades in arms of ten and fourteen years ago, and to tell over again from memory the trials and hardships of those days,—of hardships imposed for the preservation and perpetuation of our free institutions. We believed then, and we believe now, that we have a government worth fighting for, and, if need be, dying for. How many of our comrades paid the latter price for our preserved Union? Let their heroism and sacrifice be ever green in our memory. Let not the result of their sacrifices be destroyed. The Union and the free institutions for which they died should be held more dear for their sacrifices. We will not deny to any of those who fought against us any privilege under the Government which we claim for ourselves. On the contrary, we welcome all such who come forward in good faith to help build up the waste places, and to perpetuate our institutions against all enemies, as brothers in full interest with us in a common heritage; but we are not prepared to apologize for the part we took in the war.

"It is to be hoped that like trials will never again befall our country. In this sentiment no class of people can more heartily join than the soldier who submitted to the dangers, trials, and hardships of the camp and the battle-field, on whichever side he fought. No class of people are more interested in guarding against a recurrence of those days. Let us then begin by guarding against every enemy threatening the prosperity of free republican institutions. I do not bring into this assemblage politics, certainly not partisan politics; but it is a fair subject for the soldiers, in their deliberations, to consider what may be necessary to secure the prize for which they battled. In a republic like ours, where the citizen is the sovereign, and the official the servant, where no power is exercised, except by the will of the people, it is important that the sovereign, the people, should foster intelligence,—that intelligence which is to preserve us as a free nation. If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other.

"Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar, appropriated for their support, shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither the State nor Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate. With these safeguards, I believe the battles which created the Army of the Tennessee will not have been fought in vain."

The President's speech was greeted with applause, which was repeated again and again.

After speeches by Secretary Belknap, and Gens. Jeff. C. Davis, Force, Baine, Meyers, and others, army songs were sung. Gen. Sherman closed the speaking for the night with brief, humorous remarks, in which he said he wished all the speeches made here to-night could be printed in full and scattered broadcast through the South, to show the people there how the ex-soldiers of the North all feel toward them.—N. Y. Semi-weekly Tribune, Oct. 1.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH AT DES MOINES.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, writing from Des Moines, Iowa, gives the following as the true history of the President's speech at the reunion of the Army of the Tennessee: "The fact is, it was almost an impromptu speech. During the afternoon the President had given a reception to the school children in the Opera House, when a scene met his gaze which would have awakened enthusiasm in the heart of any American citizen. From the Opera House he took a carriage for a drive through the city. By his side sat Judge Cole, of the supreme bench, who has great pride in the capital city, and the culture and refinement of her citizens, and especially in her public schools, which are really worthy the pride of every citizen. During the drive, in which the school buildings were viewed, the topic of public schools was discussed by the party, after various political questions had been talked over. The President expressed himself very earnestly upon the subject, and seemed anxious to impress his views upon those with him. The wish was expressed that he would give them to the public. The President replied that if he had time he would prepare them and present them at the reunion that evening, as he expected to be called on to say something, and he knew of no subject more impressed upon his mind just then. The drive was cut short, and the President taken to Judge Cole's residence at 5:30, and, during the thirty minutes preceding supper, on four sheets of commercial note paper, he hastily pencilled the speech which has set the nation agog. There was but one change from the original draft. The words, 'But we are not prepared to apologize for the part we took in the war,' were interlined after the speech was written, and with a different pencil from that first used; in another place he changed the word 'government' to 'institutions.'" —Boston Advertiser, Oct. 16.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUTERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.50
Physics and Politics.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	3.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising.....
Adam Bede.....
Romola.....
The Mill on the Floss.....
Felix Holt.....
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAUTBORN'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Two-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forum of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Acronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	3.00
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson, with an Introduction by Rev. C. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHEP'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, and The Expense of Heaven.....	5.00
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	2.00
ROSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.75
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	2.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	2.00
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketches, Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unrepentant Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	1.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	.50
Sauterines.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pauses. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

i Tremont Place Boston.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address * THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS, IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00: per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48.00: " " 16.00.
Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.
Five " 55.00: " " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.

Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

LECTURES

CHAS. D. B. MILLS

Will answer calls during the coming winter for

Public or for Conversational Lectures,

On the following subjects:—

1. THE EARLY AGES OF MANKIND, so far as yet known: Prehistoric and Pre-historic.
2. ANCIENT RELIGIONS: Egyptian, Chinese, Indian, and the relations of these and other Faiths to Christianity.
3. SOCIAL REGENERATION: or, The Idea of Pythagoras.

Any who may wish to secure these or any portion of them will please address MR. MILLS without delay, at SYRACUSE, N.Y.
Oct. 23, 1875.

LECTURES AND CONVERSATIONS.

FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY

Is prepared to lecture or conduct conversational meetings on the following subjects:—

Essential Religion.

Education and Educators in a Republic.

The Ballot for Woman.

Woman: Her Rights and Duties.

Marriage.

The Philosophy of the Labor Movement.

The Relation of the Labor Movement to Intemperance, Prostitution, and Crime.

TERMS MODERATE.

Address Box 916, Boston Post-office.

GIVES PERFECT SATISFACTION.

For Sabbath Schools.

THE SHINING RIVER.

For High and Grammar Schools.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR.

The former is by H. S. and W. O. Perkins, and sells for 35 cents per copy in Boards, and $30 per 100. Issued only a few weeks since, but the publishers are showered with commendatory letters, and its praises are sounded everywhere. It will prove a "Shining River" of beauty and melody in hundreds of homes and Sabbath-schools.

The High School Choir is just out, and is a book which no Teacher can fail to admire and intro. uce. It will be a decided element in the musical advance of the time. Sells for $1.00, or $9.00 per dozen.

NOW READY.

A new collection of most beautiful Hymns and Tunes for Praise Meetings, Prayer Meetings, Camp Meetings, etc., etc., entitled LIVING WATERS.

For Praise Meetings, . . . For Prayer Meetings.

LIVING WATERS.

By D. F. HODGES. Price 30 cents.

Now give new life to the singing in your congregation by introducing a few hundred copies of this delightful work.

Specimen copies of Living Waters, Shining River, or High School Choir, sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.
Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being.

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WALTHAM, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The New York TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1875.

WHOLE No. 306.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

Will-friendly journals please copy our "Open Letter" to President Grant?

PROF. DENTON begins next Sunday a course of eight lectures at Paine Hall, Boston, on theological and scientific subjects.

THE DILEMMA to which voters are reduced of throwing away their votes or casting them for undesirable candidates is discouraging. Is there no remedy?

THE NEW YORK STATE Baptist Missionary Convention, just held at Saratoga, adopted resolutions protesting against the State law giving the Gray Nuns power to issue certificates of qualification for teaching in the public schools, and "against any and all changes in the management, instruction, and support of our secular education in the interest of any sect, whether Romanist or Protestant." This sounds well; but it is a vote to retain the Protestant Bible in the schools.

MR. BENJAMIN R. TUCKER was sent to jail at Princeton, Mass., on Monday, Oct. 26, for refusing on principle to pay his poll tax; but he was released on Wednesday. Mr. Tucker has the "courage of his opinions," and evinces no little fortitude in adhering to them at all sacrifices. While we do not see the reasonableness of his objections to paying his poll tax, we can yet admire that quality of his character which makes a conviction of duty sacred in his eyes, cost what it may. His action is at least a refreshing instance of non-conformity.

THE NEW YORK Independent says that "the action of the Chicago Board of Education has resulted in a redoubling of the cry of 'irreligious schools,' not only, unfortunately, by the Catholic press, but by some Protestant journals also." Already the press is yielding to the growing pressure in favor of Protestant, as opposed both to Catholic and secular, schools. The secular principle must assert itself in organized form, or it will be lost in the revival of fanaticism. All signs of the time point steadily to one conclusion—the necessity of the Liberal League movement.

THE NEW YORK Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, on October 27, adopted resolutions protesting against the act of the New York Legislature to which we referred last week, and which practically empowered the Roman Catholic Sisterhood of Gray Nuns to grant certificates of qualification for teaching in the public schools. But they also "pledged the Presbytery to the defence of the Bible in the public schools and all the Christian features of our government." These men, in their sturdy opposition to the craft of Rome, rush to a suicidal policy which can stop nowhere short of adopting a Christian Amendment of the Constitution. The logic of Christianity is driving them, even against their will, towards open advocacy of that deadly measure; and already they are adopting its special phraseology, as the words we have italicized show clearly.

EVERYWHERE the indications of a rising tide of Evangelical Protestant sentiment on the school question are visible. The Chicago ministers are almost a unit in protesting against the exclusion of the Bible from the schools; a great mass meeting has just been held in New York, and an "American Common School League" has just been formed at another mass meeting in the Cooper Institute, for the same purpose. Before long the secular press, which has hitherto been pretty unanimously in favor of the secular principle, will begin to waver and yield to the pressure of the now organizing and protesting opinion of the churches. Where is the organized and protesting opinion of true American liberalism, in default of which the worse will be made to appear the better reason? Would that our fellow-countrymen might be wise in season, and unite in the broad, just, and in the best sense peaceful movement of the Liberal League!

AT THE immense mass meeting held in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on October 21, to protest against the exclusion of the Bible from the schools, Rev. Dr. Gregg declared: "The expulsion of the Bible is only the starting point; it means ultimately the elimination from public instruction of all that tends to the promulgation of the doctrines of true religion, of morality, and of the rights of free human worship. . . . It is time for the people of America to arouse, and, if there is no law or statute in the Constitution to specify what principle of religion or of faith shall be sustained, then it is necessary for the people to speak and amend the Constitution." Thus does Evangelical Protestantism confound itself with liberty and justice, at the very moment when it is getting ready to crush both beneath its heel. And thus is the stern and terrible logic of Christianity whipping the churches into support of the Christian Amendment of the United States Constitution. O sleepers, O sluggards, can you not hear the muttering of the approaching storm? Sleep, then, till it bursts upon your heads; but say not that you were not warned betimes.

THE BROADWAY TABERNACLE was filled on the evening of October 21, says the New York Sun, "from the pulpit's edge to the outer doors, by the opponents of the measure that would banish the Bible from the public schools." Impassioned addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Gregg, Rev. Dr. Osborne, Rev. Dr. Newton, Rev. Dr. Prime, and Rev. Mr. Terry, all influential clergymen of New York city. Rev. Mr. Mickle sang the "Sword of Bunker Hill"; ribbons of red, white, and blue streamed from the breasts of a score of ushers; the national flag was displayed above the pulpit. The cause of the Bible-in-schools was evidently regarded as that of our national existence and religious liberty; and the bitterness of some of the speakers showed how dangerous already is the excitement of Protestant fanaticism. Who cannot see the necessity of enlightening Americans themselves upon the principles of true secular government? If the liberals neglect much longer the duty of compelling public attention to the right and wrong of this great question,—if they do not in some form or other take up the work of the Liberal League,—they will see the present Protestant character of the school system hopelessly confirmed, and probably intensified. The result of that step must be a mighty popular effort to Christianize the United States Constitution, and ultimately the ruin of the school system, which will break down under the load of an unnatural and unjust sectarianism.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Revivalism.

BY CHARLES K. WHIPPLE.

Of the labors of Moody and Sankey in Great Britain, of Varley in New York, of Hammond in San Francisco, and of Finney, Earl, and Burnell in various places, the press speaks with a voice nearly unanimous. The results of these labors are admitted by the secular press to be wonderful, and on the whole beneficial; while the "religious" press (so called) pronounces them very wonderful, eminently useful, and obviously "the Lord's work."

Does this unanimity on the part of the press prove, or tend strongly towards proving, the correctness of the opinion expressed? It will hardly appear so to those who remember that, with those who express it, weighty motives of self-interest tend in the same direction. Revivalism is the chief promoter of that increase of church-membership which is the main object of the papers called "religious"; and the Church element is so powerful in the community as seriously to influence the prosperity of a secular paper according as it does or does not favor their theological theories.

It is admitted that, in most places where they operate, the revivalists have great success. They draw crowds, make a sensation, excite intense interest in a portion of the community, and have a crop of "conversions," from which ultimately comes enlargement of the churches whose members have been forward in the work. Is this success wonderful, or even strange? Is it any more wonderful than the success of any commercial or industrial enterprise which has been engineered with intelligence, industry, and perseverance?

The church people say of the success which follows revival labors: "It is the Lord's work!" We will by-and-by examine the facts, and try to discover what grounds exist for this confident assertion. At present let us inquire whether the success is not accounted for by the abundant sufficiency of the human means employed; just as in house-building or ship-building.

House-building and ship-building require intelligence, industry, and perseverance. Moody and Sankey, and the other operators of the same class above mentioned, are as much masters of their craft as any architect or engineer that can be named. They all have a genius for organization, and a power of exciting and arousing their assistants and subordinates to the work of effective coöperation, not less than of working upon the sympathies of the unintelligent mass of their hearers. Their work in each town is carefully prepared for weeks beforehand. They sharpen the tools in advance, stimulating their church allies to the active performance of the work that must be done, and done energetically and simultaneously in various quarters, to secure the grand result. The way must be prepared beforehand by the press, by pre-announcement in the various churches, by placards on the walls, and by the employment of all other available means of calling public attention.

All these means, actively and skilfully used—and they are used, both with energy and skill, where the persons above named have control,—insure a good audience and an attentive hearing for the revivalists. Then half the work is done; for the people who go there accepting the designation of "impenitent sinners," with which the revivalist labels them, understand perfectly what is to be there urged upon them, and by the very fact of being there (generally in company with "pious" relatives or friends) express their consent to be operated on.

Is it strange that, while in this consenting frame of mind, under the influence of fervent rhetorical appeals from the leaders, and urged by the known sympathy, often the direct solicitation, of relatives or friends, a proportion of the hearers should do the very thing which they went there with the desire to do, and the hope of doing? The wonder is that, when so many take the preliminary steps, steadily attending the meetings, consenting to be prayed for and labored with, and even themselves asking for prayers, so few take the final step. For, it should be remembered, what the revivalist asks of them is no new thing, but precisely that which they have heard announced as their duty every Sunday from the pulpit, and which, by force of repetition, and through its assumption as certain by the pious people around them, they have come to suppose must be really their duty. The "impenitent sinners" (so called) of each congregation, though perceiving religion, as taught by the minister and exemplified by the Church, to be an unattractive thing, desirable only for its (supposed) ultimate result, yet have settled into the belief that the disagreeable thing so taught and exemplified is religion, and that they themselves must have it sometime before they die. What wonder, I say, that, under these circumstances, a proportion of the seekers should really embrace the "opportunity" then urged upon them—"the last one, perhaps, with which they will ever be favored," the exhorter tells them.

The success, then, of revival operators is by no means "wonderful." The amount, the skill, and the energy of the human means employed account abundantly for all the results.

Let us now inquire, Are these results beneficial?

This is a mixed and complicated problem. The question is not to be disposed of by an impassioned affirmative or negative. Many and various interests are concerned in the solution of it.

A revival brings a crop of new members to the Church, a crop of new subscribers to the "religious" papers (so called), an increase of subscriptions to the Church's propagandist societies, mission, tract, and Bible, and an increase of honor and glory to the revivalist under whose administration it occurred. This last result comes all the more certainly and thoroughly when the operator is profuse in disclaimers of merit in the matter. The more he cries out, "Not unto me, not unto me; it is the Lord's work!" the more his associates hail him as a chosen and favored servant of the Lord, request his prayers in their behalf, and try to engage him for the next town in their appointed series. Indeed if an operator in any other department, an editor, an architect, a carpenter, could make the community really believe that the results following his diligent labor were "the Lord's work," he would certainly find an increase of patronage, as well as of credit.

We may now ask, "Does a revival benefit the community in which it occurs?" It will do this if, and in proportion as, it benefits the individuals whom it claims as "converts."

This if, however, is a very important one, and the question of advantage or disadvantage in a conversion from worldliness to churchliness is by no means so simple as it may at first appear. In fact, some gain and some lose by it.

The Church is a respectable and a conservative institution. It upholds law and order. It is opposed to vulgarity, to gross vice, and in fact to all vice except that which is upheld by the respectable public sentiment of the community. To explain this last qualification, I will give some instances. When slavery (which John Wesley justly called "the sum of all villainies") was upheld by the government and the nation, the Church upheld it. When war is declared by the government, the Church upholds it, though pretending to follow "the Prince of Peace," to receive as binding his command to forgive injury and to return good for evil, and to receive as inspired the prediction that at his coming swords should be beaten into ploughshares, and nations should learn war no more. And, whether or not war at the time exists, the Church makes no objection to the enrolment of her members in armies and navies, ready to engage in war whenever ambition or revenge shall bring it on, and choosing that business as their occupation for life; nor does she object to their enrolment as teachers or pupils in schools designed to teach the art of war; thus directly opposing the principles and postponing the reign of him whom they pretend to honor and imitate, the Prince of Peace.

The Church, then, being respectable and conservative, opposes all vulgar vice, and all unpopular vice; and thus membership in her body exerts a beneficially restraining influence upon men who were addicted to those forms of sin. The prize-fighter, the drunkard, the gambler, the pickpocket, will be materially helped to combat their peculiar temptations by joining the church, adopting its ways, and associating with its members. Decency in conversation and manners, and regularity of life, are indispensable to them if they would retain their standing in the Church. And this, to the small class of men above mentioned, is a real help and advantage.

But the decent and respectable man, the man (rich or poor) whose language, manners, and habits are up to or above the average of moral society, will probably be a loser instead of a gainer by that conformity to church theories, ideas, manners, and habits, into which "conversion" brings him. If he be an ignorant man, he will probably suffer a complete arrest of mental development, besides having superstition engrafted on his ignorance. His reading will be confined to the Bible, with tracts, an approved commentary and a "religious" newspaper; and the sophisms, false assumptions, and misinterpretations of Scripture in the last three will probably pervert and neutralize the wisdom he might have gained from the first. He will be taught to recognize Church theories (utterly without foundation) as settled truths; to practise customs useless or injurious, as duties; to avoid many things innocent or salutary, as sins; and to follow the Church's traditions in regard to manners, morals, and religion, not only where these violate common sense, but where they contradict that Bible which the Church calls infallibly inspired. In short, the ignorant man who submits himself to Church influence is likely to remain destitute of knowledge in other departments, while in the departments of morals and religion his ignorance is increased by the acceptance of false theories as true.

Let us now inquire how church connection modifies the condition of the decent and respectable man whose general intelligence is up to or above the average.

Here the Church's power to arrest mental development will be much more limited than in the case of the ignorant man; she will strive, however, to accomplish this in the departments of morals and religion, leaving the intellect in other directions to take its natural course. She will require reason to be silent and submissive when the church creed, or church traditions, or theories, or church customs are in question; she will exact conformity to church ways of thinking, and looking, and acting; and she will discourage, as dangerous and evil, all critical inquiry into the foundation, the authority, and the reasonableness, of creed, traditions, theories, and customs. And not only must the mind of the convert be silenced in these departments, but his conscience must be warped by the reception, as true, of dogmas dishonoring to God and libellous of his creature, man. He must believe what the Church teaches, though it may revolt his moral sense as well as contradict his reason.

If now, as we have seen above, the success of professional revivalists is fully accounted for by the ample sufficiency of the human means, the skill, energy, and perseverance employed, what plausibility is there in their pretence and confident assumption that it is "the Lord's work"? When success attends the same amount of labor in agriculture or architecture, it is attributed to the persons who have applied the requisite skill and labor to that work, not to any special Divine interposition. The fact is, it suits the purposes of the engineers of revivals to say of such success as follows long effort and skilful management on their part, "It is the Lord's work;" just as it suited the purposes of the priests at the shrine of Delphi to say that Apollo gave the oracles there delivered. Success in obtaining credence, in the modern cases as in the ancient, is due mainly to confident assumption, made so solemnly and so persistently as to constrain the belief of those whose education and surroundings have predisposed them to receive it as truth. Confident assumption, solemnly uttered and persistently repeated in the midst of a community predisposed to believe it, is the great instrument of revivalists; and the acquiescence of the public in this assumption is the key to their success. This success is greatly facilitated by two circumstances: 1. A large proportion of the converts in revivals are ignorant persons, undeveloped intellectually, quite unaccustomed to weigh evidence, and even unconscious of the need of it, and so overmastered by the pretension of the exhorters to enlightenment and spirituality, that implicit belief seems to them an imperative duty; 2. The very effort at scrutiny, the demand that pretension be supported by evidence, when any attendant at a revival meeting has intelligence and self-possession enough to make it, is promptly rebuked by the revivalist as a sin, a temptation of Satan, one of the most dangerous devices of "the great enemy of souls." The manager of the meeting is fluent in assumptions of this sort; but he does not furnish the evidence nor answer the objection. When circumstances permit, he will blacken the reputation of the querist, and represent him as a dangerous person; but he will at all events represent doubt and the disposition to scrutinize as dangerous, and will demand thorough and unquestioning submission to his claim, as the first duty of that great majority of the community which he stigmatizes as "impenitent sinners."

I will now inquire whether internal evidence throws any light upon the question whether the success of revival operations is "the Lord's work."

If the assertions and assumptions which lie at the foundation of revival operations are found, on examination, to have a large intermixture of misrepresentation, partly unreason and partly untruth, this will fatally interfere with the claim of the operators that their success is "the Lord's work." Let us examine some of the principal matters coming under this head.

The revivalist classes the people who are not of his way of thinking as "impenitent sinners." This assumption on his part is impertinent, and in very many cases unjust and untrue; but he also classes and addresses them as "lost sinners"; a statement grossly misrepresenting God, their Creator, from whose superintending power and love they have not been and cannot be "lost."

The exhortations of the revivalist assume:—

1. That God will forever inflict unspeakable torments on millions of the men and women he has created here, having made arrangements for this purpose even before their creation.

2. That this doom will be inflicted upon these persons as a punishment for living in accordance with the inclinations and propensities with which they were born.

3. That, throughout the eternity which is to follow this short mortal life, God has provided that these sufferers shall receive no benefit from repentance and reformation, and shall have no encouragement from him in the attempt to do right rather than wrong.

The doctrine of "damnation," or of punishment ordained to continue forever, irrespective of repentance or reformation after the death of the body, includes all that is contained in the three specifications above mentioned. The mere statement (as above) of a doctrine so horrible would suffice for its refutation with any unprejudiced person; but since a majority of the people of the United States are taught to believe it from their childhood, there is need of a plain statement of the reasons why it should not be believed.

The sufficing and decisive argument in this case is found in the nature of God, and of goodness and justice, of which he is the embodiment.

1. Goodness. Is it consistent with goodness deliberately to create a being capable of suffering intensely, knowing at the time that he certainly will suffer intensely forever, and that thus his entire existence will be a curse to him?

If Satan had power to do the thing here supposed, would it be right for him to do it? If he did it, would not that act be fairly attributable to his preference for evil?

If an archangel had power to do that act, would it be right for him to do it? Would not even the desire to do a thing so cruel show him to have fallen from his original measure of holiness?

If the disposition to do such an act, in case the power were granted him, should arise in the heart of a human being, should we not confidently decide that such desire arose from the worse and not the better part of his nature? In classifying man by moral character, should we not judge his place to be with the evil rather than the good?

It seems clear, in the light of these suppositions, that the act in question is an act positively and enormously evil; an act which would be repudiated with horror by the better class of human beings—by the missionaries, the philanthropists, the benefactors—by Henry Martyn, William Penn, Elizabeth Fry—and by such people exactly in proportion to their benevolence, and their general elevation and refinement of character.

How, then, dares any one attribute the deliberate perpetration of such an act—nay, more, the choice of a system including unnumbered millions of such acts—to God, the embodiment of benevolence and beneficence? What human opinion should avail for a moment to make us think such evil of him?

2. Justice. Is it just to force immortality upon a being capable of suffering, with the knowledge that his existence will certainly be an everlasting continuance of the most dreadful suffering? If an archangel, if any good man or woman, if any being with less than the malignity of a fiend, had the option of creating or not creating persons whose doom was thus foreseen, would he not of course prefer to abstain from such creation?

But in the act and choice we are supposing, it is not men nor angels, but God who is in question; and many people are accustomed to think of God as a being possessing unlimited rights, but bound by no duties. Neither of these notions will bear examination. God has no right to do wrong. Moreover, from the moment God creates a living, sentient being, he necessarily enters upon certain obligations in regard to it, preëminent among which is this: that the creation, all things considered, shall prove beneficial, and not injurious, to that being.

In our judgments concerning men, these points are deemed axiomatic; namely, that they do wrong to beget children when circumstances show a strong probability that these will inherit lifelong disease and suffering from their parents; and that, when children are born to them, they do wrong voluntarily to leave them unprovided and uncared for. If parents could know certainly that their children would permanently suffer the very worst disasters in consequence of their birth, would not the deliberate procreation of offspring under such circumstances be justly reckoned an aggravated sin? But, if such be the confident decision of reason and conscience, how dares any one attribute to God acts the same in character (and far worse in degree) than those which we have seen to be evil and base in men?

The central doctrine, then, on which revivalism is founded, the theory; namely, that God will inflict vengeful and eternal torments upon some of his creatures, is a calumny against God, and thus is not for a moment to be believed. But others of the main assumptions of the revivalists are equally incredible. Such, for instance, are their theories about the remedy for the pretended danger above mentioned.

To secure this remedy, you must believe (they say):—

That the shedding of blood is necessary for the remission of sins;

That in ancient times the sins of men were really purged by shedding the blood of sheep, bulls, and goats; but

That now, and for all future time, sin can be remitted only through acceptance, by the sinner, of the blood of Jesus of Nazareth, shed long ago on Calvary, as his atonement; and

That Jesus, in this and the other acts of his life and death, must be accepted as fulfilling the predictions of Hebrew prophets in regard to an expected Deliverer, to be called "Christ," or "Messiah," or "the Lord's Anointed."

In these propositions lies the very essence of what is called "the plan of salvation"; the diffusion of which, and the persuading of men to accept it as the only way of escape from (a supposed) hell, is the main object of revivalists. But not one of these propositions will stand examination in the light of reason and fact.

Shedding the blood of a creature without sin, whether beast or man, has not the slightest tendency to remove the guilt of a sinful person. Purification can be accomplished (if at all) only by the repentance and reformation of the sinner. The perpetuation of the utterly unfounded notion that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission" is only one instance among many of the incorporation of Hebrew superstitions with the Christian system.

The blood of Jesus is assumed to fulfil this function only on the supposition that he was really that "Christ," or "Messiah," or "Lord's Anointed," predicted by the Hebrew prophets; but a comparison of those predictions with the New Testament narratives of the life and death of Jesus proves conclusively that they were not fulfilled in him; and the state of the Hebrew people now and ever since the record of those predictions proves that they have never been fulfilled at all.

The statement of Jesus (when asked by Pilate if he were the King of the Jews) "My kingdom is not of this world," is a sufficient refutation of the theory that he was the "Messiah" of Hebrew prophecy. The Messiah's kingdom, according to Isaiah (ix., 6, 7), Jeremiah (xxiii., 5, 6, xxxiii., 14-18, and 20, 21), and others, was to be of this world. The predictions were of a king in the line of David, who, sitting on the throne of David, should gather Israel in their own land of Palestine, and rule them there, in peace and righteousness forever. These things have not been accomplished at all. Of course, then, Jesus has not accomplished them. And the pretence of a spiritual kingdom (as if that would be a fulfilment of the prophecy of a temporal one) has no better foundation than the other. The Hebrew people continue to refuse all recognition of Jesus as their predicted Messiah. He is not, he has never been, in any sense, "the King of the Jews." True, Jesus taught a doctrine far better than that of their prophets; but this better thing was so entirely different, that they could not possibly accept it while they continued to regard those prophets as inspired of God, and the fulfilment of their predictions as certain. He set forth God as the universal Father, instead of that localized and limited Jehovah who was supposed by the Jews to have chosen them as his peculiar people. He freely criticised their Scriptures, Moses, the decalogue itself, as well as the traditions and ecclesiastical rulers of his own generation. He flatly denied some of the doctrines specially cherished by them, because undoubtedly taught in their Scriptures; saying that God dwelleth not in temples made with hands; that he did not rest on the seventh day; that he is not a respecter of persons; that he does not require men to go up to Jerusalem to worship; that the abstinence from certain articles of food, and the ceremonial washing of hands, cups, and pots is not required by him; etc., etc., etc. The many things that Jesus said in utter disregard of the laws of Moses and the Scriptures popularly ascribed to him, necessarily seemed to the Jews of his day what they called them, "blasphemy against Moses and against God." The reality and extent of this opposition is the reason also why the great mass of the Jews have continued to reject Jesus. They never can with consistency accept him as the Messiah while they retain their belief in the infallible inspiration of Moses and the prophets.

We find, then, that these cardinal doctrines of the revivalists—namely, everlasting punishment not to be modified by repentance or reformation after the death of the body; bloodshedding needful and available for remission of sin; Jesus the Messiah of Old Testament prophecy; and deliverance from hell now possible only through trust in the blood of Jesus,—are mere theories, entirely destitute of evidence, and with no ground of reason or probability sufficient to justify our acceptance of them. We now come to another vicious feature of the system in question.

Belief in the unproved and unreasonable theories above mentioned is required by the revivalists, irrespective of evidence; or (to give a more minutely accurate statement), the propositions which they offer as full and sufficient evidence are found, on examination, to be mere assumptions, without ground either of truth or reason. "If you do not believe, you will be damned," is the ground taken by the revivalist, just as by the Mussulman; and for the truth of this proposition no better evidence is given by one party than by the other. Doubt of any of the theological doctrines which he teaches is declared by the revivalist to be dangerous and sinful, just as by the Mussulman; and when earnest and candid examination has caused any one to reject those doctrines as unsound, he is treated with sactimonious pity or sactimonious rebuke therefore, by persons who have not only never examined, but who are utterly unable to give any sufficient reason for retaining that which he, on evidence, has rejected. The people in question depend so entirely on authoritative assumption as the means of propagating their doctrine, that they habitually discourage appeals to reason, stigmatizing it as "carnal reason," and recommending, in its stead, implicit faith in their theological system.

The last of the unfounded assumptions of the revivalists of which I have space here to speak is what they call "the inspiration of the Bible." Their customary title for the volume containing the Old and New Testament is "The Word of God"; and they assume that every portion of it is infallibly inspired, so as to be without error either of fact or doctrine; also that it claims for itself such inspiration and authority; and also that it is, and will permanently continue to be, a sufficient and obligatory rule of life for all men.

On the other hand, examination shows the following facts, absolutely irreconcilable with the revivalists' pretences above mentioned:—

Neither Old Testament nor New makes any claim for itself of inspiration such as is above pretended.

Neither Old Testament nor New pretends to be other than a collection of writings by various human authors; the first comprising the history, laws, and early literature of Judaism; the second the history, laws, and early literature of Christianity.

In both these collections, the authorship and date of many of the separate works is absolutely unknown; of others, obscure and doubtful. We have each in its present form, because some unknown man or men, at some unknown period, chose these among the writings then extant as best worthy of preservation; we have them bound together under the name of "The Bible," because some unknown men or man, at some unknown time, chose so to unite them; and we have them divided into chapters and verses, because various persons in more modern times have chosen so to divide them.

There is no evidence whatever proving, or tending to prove, the assumption of divine authorship or superintendence for these writings; on the other hand, such assumption is imperatively forbidden by the occurrence there of errors of fact, irreconcilable discrepancies of statement, and imputations of error, imperfection, and infirmity to the Creator. God certainly has never dictated unworthy and degrading representations of his own character; yet, if all the Scriptural portrayals of him are to be credited, we must believe that he objected, in the beginning, to men's acquiring knowledge, and even to their learning the distinction between good and evil; that he allows Satan not only to tempt and torment, but to destroy men and women; that he represents labor as a curse and punishment to the human race; that he partakes so far of human infirmity as to be wearied with labor and refreshed by rest; that he has many times shown jealousy, passion, and misjudgment, repenting of some of his past acts, and changing a course of action determined on and declared, in compliance with the better judgment of one of his creatures; that he hardened Pharaoh's heart, and then punished the people of Egypt for the king's doing what he was divinely impelled to do; that he commanded robbery of the Egyptians by his chosen people, the Hebrews, expressly directing that the false pretence of a loan be used for its accomplishment; that he afterwards enjoined upon the same people not only robbery but extermination of the whole population of many cities of Canaan; that on one occasion he commanded a father to kill and burn his own son as an act of sacrificial worship; that on one occasion he commanded a much more extensive human sacrifice, the slaughter of one portion of the chosen people by another portion, to the extent of three thousand men; that, besides enjoining this fearful fratricidal slaughter, he still further "plagued" the chosen people for having followed the directions of Aaron, whom he himself had set over them as leader and guide, in conjunction with Moses; that, of two brothers not yet born, he chose one as his favorite, and continued that favoritism through their lives, though the chosen one proved far the worse in character and conduct; that he tempted David to number the nation over which he was king, and then not only stigmatized as sinful an act which experience has shown to be desirable and needful in every civilized community, but punished for it the innocent people instead of the offending monarch, even allowing that monarch to decide whether the penalty should fall on himself or his people.

But what need is there of further citation? The cases above mentioned are only a small proportion of those contained in the Hebrew Scriptures of such a character as to force upon us this alternative: either to think ill of God (whom we desire to recognize as perfect in wisdom and goodness), or to admit that the unknown writers of the most ancient Hebrew records made an estimate of the divine character in some points defective, and in some points erroneous. Why should we not trust in God rather than in those writers? Who were they, that for the sake of agreement with their hoary superstitions we should impute error, folly, injustice, and cruelty to the heavenly Father? Why should we not admit that they, like other historians, have shown themselves human and fallible?

The revivalists, however, assume that the portions of Hebrew Scripture above mentioned must be received as God's Word, infallibly inspired, not less than any other portions of the Old and New Testaments. The whole contents of those books, they say, must stand or fall together; and they continue their sactimonious repetitions of this absurd fiction with an air well suited to overawe and impose on the ignorant portion, that is to say the majority, of their audience.

The considerations above mentioned (to which many more of like character might be added) convince me that the system taught by the revivalists very mischievously misleads those who receive it, giving them grossly erroneous views of God, of man, of the relation between these two, and of human character and destiny in this world and the next. If this view be correct, their work is certainly not "God's work." I hold it, in the main, to be neither pleasing to God nor useful to men, though some classes of persons may get, on the whole, more good than harm from them.

A PRESBYTERIAN minister, while marrying a couple of his rustic parishioners, felt exceedingly disconcerted on his asking the bridegroom if he were willing to take the woman for his wedded wife, by his scratching his head and saying: "Ay, I'm wull-in', but I'd rather hae her sister."

HE THAT speaketh against his own reason, speaks against his own conscience; and therefore it is certain no man serves God with a good conscience who serves him against his reason.—Jeremy Taylor.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

CAN THAT BE TRUTH WHICH CANNOT BE APPREHENDED?

In the Contemporary Review of February last, Mr. W. R. Greg discussed the question, "Can truths be apprehended which could not have been discovered?"

In reasoning out this problem he answers in the decided negative as far as regards matters distinctly within human cognizance: "Matters of positive knowledge, the facts of science, the operations of Nature, and the laws or principles deducible from these operations, can be verified by those to whom they are announced; the faculties and mental processes needed to test and verify are the same as those employed in the original discovery; the power of verifying a proposition implies the power of discovering it." Again: "All so-called revelation is only an anticipation of future attainments by the mind. If we can ascertain that a proposition comes to us from a superhuman source it must surely be by applying some test or standard which can judge the doctrine; judging it would seem to imply the means of verifying it."

On these statements of Mr. Greg, we propose to consider two questions. Is the revelation of a God verifiable? Have we any test or standard whereby we can judge and so verify the proposition, "There is a God and a life hereafter"? for on these two, either facts or fictions, rests the whole superstructure of revealed religion.

When Mr. Greg comes to deal with the important class of truths, propositions, or revelations, embracing the existence of a personal Creator and a life beyond the grave, he is much less confident in the efficacy of his unerring formula, "That a truth apprehended could have been discovered." If the power of apprehending a proposition implies and involves the possibility, by the process of research and meditation, of constructing or divining it, the assertion that "there is a God and a life hereafter," does not come within the category laid down by Mr. Greg of "truths that can be apprehended," inasmuch as it is not a truth discoverable.

If "so-called" revelation is only an anticipation of future mental attainments," we make bold to say that 4000, or rather 400,000, years have not sufficed to produce the faculties of mind necessary for this "original discovery"; that within the era of human knowledge no tests applied to verify this doctrine of "God and a future life" have succeeded in discovering for us that gold without alloy which passes by universal acclaim as "the truth."

In regard to this class of "revelation," Mr. Greg remarks: "It can scarcely be supposed that any future perfection of our matured instruments of vision, or of our mental faculties, will enable us to solve these problems." So, then, the most vital of all problems ever propounded to the human intellect are to be solved by some other process than the exercise of our mental faculties,—are to pass out of the region of verifiable facts into the shadowy land of "those apocalyptic flashes of imaginative insight which the intellectual history of our race assures us have in all ages been vouchsafed to it." After this, Mr. Greg may well ask in the next page, "If the authoritative announcement of the truth comes to us from 'on high,' in what language can it be conveyed so as to dispense with that verification which by the very constitution of the human mind precedes and clinches certainty if not conviction?"

His answer determines one of two things: either that man's intellect is utterly incapable of absorbing or apprehending by any operation of its powers this "announced truth from 'on high'"; or, if it comes from a superhuman source, there is no human test or standard by which to judge the doctrine, and, as it cannot be judged, it cannot be verified.

Mr. Greg says: "If the announcement is of such a nature as to need no such verification, if it include and convey its own credentials so as to be self-evident, self-proving, as soon as made, does not this imply such an adaptation, such a native fitness and preparation for its reception in the very frame-work of the spiritual intelligence, as could scarcely fail in time to reach the goal and to discern the light?"

In other words, had a longer period of evolution been permitted to this spiritual intelligence, no revelation, no announcement, had been needed; by itself, spontaneously, the mind would have apprehended this "assertion from 'on high'"; by aid of its native fitness for the supernatural the mind of man (or rather his "spiritual intelligence") would have discovered as a "self-evident truth" the revealed knowledge of "God and a future state."

What would not poor humanity have been spared, had this evolution process been allowed its course? For as no date is assigned by Mr. Greg for "arrival at the goal, for discovering the light," eternity itself might not have sufficed, and in blissful ignorance of this "Promethean Vulture," forever gnawing at the vitals of free thought, to what unimagined heavens of knowledge might not the untrammelled mind have soared, unhampered by the dogmatic incubus that curses all inquiry into the regions of the unknown. This God of the Bible with his hell for all unbelievers still unrevealed! Where might we not have been piloted by those divinely inspired sons of genius, who, like Columbus, opened up not only new but imperishable worlds, and, like the great explorer, found their reward in chains, misery, obloquy, and death?

Were the human mind, as Mr. Greg thinks, capable of spontaneously apprehending the knowledge of God, why such fearful waste of machinery in order to inculcate this truth? Why such continual grinding of victims beneath the wheels of this Juggernaut car, whence shouts the prophet, "Believe and be saved, or deny and be damned"?

We hold that the human mind would never spontaneously have engendered any such monstrous conception as the revealed God of Scripture, and we utterly dissent from Mr. Greg's definition of "revelation"; namely, a "confirmation of the verdict and hopes of human speculation concerning the unknown and the future," the knowledge of which we maintain has never been revealed, and the search after which, as Professor Tyndall finely and prophetically observed, "will occupy the best and noblest minds long after this generation has faded like streaks of morning clouds into the infinite azure of the past."

It has been proved by no less an authority than Dr. Moffat, who should be a good judge of the "untutored savage," that not only is there a total absence of all spontaneous idea, but that the language of savagdom contains no word calculated to express God; whatever occurs to their mind as the origin of all things, including themselves, it certainly bears no reference to the glorified man of the Bible; like the imaginative Greeks and Latins, all Nature for them is deified; their "Great Spirit" resides in rocks and trees, in waterfalls, in the thunder and in the lightning.

"Thou art in the soft winds,
In music; thou art in the cooler breath
That in the inmost darkness of this place
Comes scarcely felt; the barksy trunks, the ground,
The moist fresh earth, are all instinct with thee;
Thou art the soul of this wide universe."

The most natural and spontaneous of all worship is surely Pantheism; that and sun-worship we should select as the natural outcome of human cogitation regarding a "Higher Power."

We must go back to the Persians for our earliest known conception of a something that was before man, a something from which they derived existence, and which, in the person of the Sun-God, they thus addressed: "Let us adore the supremacy of that divine Sun, the God-head, who illuminates all, who recreates all, from whom all proceed, to whom all must return."

Our Aryan ancestors believed that from the sun sprang all life, animate and inanimate; nor are they alone in their conclusions, as witness the speculations of to-day by two able men; one perhaps merely a romancer, the other an acknowledged scientific philosopher. The former, Louis Figuier, in his Tomorrow of Death, ventilates the theory of "our final home in the sun"; and the other, Professor Clifford, in his essay, "The First and Last Catastrophe," says: "The life which exists upon this earth is made by the sun's action, and it depends upon the sun for its continuance."

The professor does not seem to have determined whether we shall be frozen to death by the going out of the sun, or whether this planet is to be burnt up by absorption into the "God of Day"; but with us, as with the Persians, the Sun-God is still the acknowledged arbiter of the fate of all material life.

From these early gropings, these aspirations after a "first great cause," the ingenuity of the human mind created for itself not only a "God the Father," "God the Son," and "God the Holy Ghost," but also a "Mother Mary."

To the student of comparative religion, it is no difficult matter to trace back the present Christian belief to its source in the Persian and Egyptian mythologies; not only the Trinity but also the Resurrection come to us from Egypt, where they flourished as religious tenets eight hundred years before the Christian Era.* Yet this "resurrection fable" which has survived since the days of Osiris, is declared by the priests of the Christian religion "to be an absolute fact, and not a matter of speculation or opinion." Dr. Church (Dean of St. Paul's) says in an Easter Sunday sermon: "It was the plan of salvation that after death Jesus Christ should come back to convince men of the existence of a future life."

We ask, Do these "absolute facts" come under the head of those considered by Mr. Greg as—"Whatever we can receive and comprehend, that we can also ascertain and discover"? The rule Mr. Greg applies to test "all matters of positive knowledge, the facts of science, and the operations of Nature," we claim to apply in judging those very serious phenomena included in "Revelations from 'On High.'" Will this rising from the dead of a man "like in all things unto ourselves" stand the test by which we verify other propositions? Yet, to quote St. Paul, if this is not a truth, then the Christian religion comes to naught; "then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."

Instead of accepting such traditional fables as facts, we may safely refer them to the category of those truths alluded to by Mr. Greg "as vouchsafed in a sudden gleam of light, in a dream, in a vision of the night, to some favored and highly-strung natures, who tell us they have arrived at this confirmation by spiritual discernment, and can feel not the shadow of a doubt about the matter."

We fear that Mr. Greg, in this discussion on "truths that can be apprehended," has permitted himself to wander in that spiritualistic atmosphere where truths that cannot be apprehended are allowed weight because of their supposed source,—are accepted, however incomprehensible, as "a revelation from a higher power," that "will-o'-the-wisp" which lures us across the misty moors of the incredible, that ignis-fatuus which shines only to deceive.

This acknowledging of a spiritualistic realm apart from the intellectual, where all things are weighed according to their worth, opens wide the door to the imaginative and emotional, and permits a very fair-land of impossibilities,—a land where the genii reign triumphant over sober sense.

If Mr. Greg's long explorings in the mine of free inquiry (the cost of which he so eloquently alludes to in one of his finest works) have but resulted in convincing him that we must be content with "apocalyptic flashes of imaginative insight" concerning the most vital of our inquiries, then we think his method of research is misleading, or he is hampered by the ignoble fear that dares not meet the consequences of looking a truth in the face, a fear that dreads the results of his own conclusions.

* Egyptian Mythologies: Samuel Sharpe.

The Dean of St. Paul's speaks of the resurrection as "having solved the great riddle of human existence; as an answer to the universal cry for a solution of the mysteries of life, the cry that asks, What was man made for, and what is his destiny?"

Mr. Greg is surely not far from Dr. Church when he characterizes "revelation as a confirmation of the verdict and hopes of human speculation concerning the unknown and the future"; and though he gives up miracles (which the Dean does not), Mr. Greg speaks of the "signs and wonders now no longer regarded as proof, having given way to the essential loftiness of the divine characteristics of the truth announced."

It is because the essential loftiness of what we conceive divine characteristics is absolutely wanting to revealed religion, because in grandeur and nobility of conception the God of the Jew and the Christian falls below the highest ideal of humanity, that we claim to reject the teachings of "Moses and all the prophets"; that we claim for mankind the right to withhold assent to any recognized solution of the deep mysteries of life and death. If, as Mr. Greg says, "the patient-working brain has in all ages discerned for itself the truths it sought," we claim it shall still be permitted its right of search towards the greatest of all discoveries, towards the working out of the deepest of problems, "whence we came and whither we shall return,"—a problem buried in a sea "deeper than e'er plummet sounded." W.

LONDON, Sept., 1875.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

CATHOLICISM IN CANADA.

This province of Quebec presents a sharp contrast with the adjacent New England States. Originally settled by French Catholic missionaries and their protégés, the Roman Church has been able to plant and rear a remarkable colony, rich, devoted, and obedient as nowhere else in the world. The aggregate population, various as it is, remains powerfully affected by the nucleus; and throughout the land Catholicity is the principal feature, as at the beginning.

The cessions of land to the Church by France were respected by England at the conquest, although men high in the nation, as the Duke of Wellington, urged repeal, seeing, as they did, the viper that was being nursed in the bosom of British liberty. The opening up of the country, and its settlement by English-speaking people, has enormously enhanced the value of lands belonging to the Church, giving them riches entirely unearned. Every foot of land in this city that it does not own has been bought from it at one time or other. Hence the profusion of churches, convents, and colleges which cap every hill, and are being continually added to.

Jealously watched by a Protestant minority, and living under what is in some degree a foreign civil power, the Catholic clergy are a respectable class of men; much more so than their American confrères appear to be.

Until the accession of the present Pope with his ultramontane party, mild Gallicanism prevailed; middle-aged men remember when Presbyterians held services in the Church of the Recollet Fathers on Notre Dame Street; now such a thing would be utterly impossible.

Not satisfied with unbounded spiritual sway, the Church aims as ever at civil power. At elections the priests are the chief nominators and supporters of candidates; and their freely-made threats of spiritual pains for disobedience make opposition useless. After mass on Sunday, in country parishes, the favored one may be heard setting forth his principles to the congregation at the church door, reminding them of his filial love for Monsieur le Curé.

The ultra-spirit which has so recently and so strongly arisen, is shown in many curious ways. The miraculous Lady of Lourdes is having an expensive church built in her honor on a fashionable street; and a milliner in the western part of the city announces on her sign-board that her shop is dedicated to the same person. On Notre Dame, the chief retail street, there are several shops for the sale of sacred articles,—images, sacred hearts, lamps, pictures, incense, rosaries, etc. Ten years ago not one of these shops existed.

Bi-hop Bourget recently incorporated a new order of nuns—the Sisters of our Lady of Mount Carmel,—who are neither to engage in works of charity nor industry, but on a pleasantly-elevated site at Hochelaga are to devote themselves to contemplation.

Such an obituary as this is not uncommon in the French press:—

"Died, on Tuesday morning, F. X. M., aged —. He ever cherished a peculiar devotion to the Sacred Heart."

About five years ago the bones of St. Zeno, a martyr, were imported from Rome, and carried about the streets with much pomp. Strange to say, they have as yet effected no miracles for us.

The bad weather and other troubles which afflict our poor farmers have engaged the attention of the priest who is treasurer of the Seminary of St. Sulpice. He proposes to remove these troubles by erecting on every farm a statue of the Infant Jesus, whose protection cannot but be most efficient. Inaugural and annual fees are to be paid to the good father for the relief of the Holy See from the wicked and expensive opposition of heretics.

The methods of this wonderful Church can be well studied here, where it has had its own way. Its doctrine of original sin requires the baptism of an infant when a few hours old. Its name and parents' house are registered. If it lives, its education at a Catholic school is looked after. There doctrinal instruction is given, and at about ten or twelve years of age the child, with millinery and a pretty ceremony, is admitted to membership. The enforced attendance at mass and the confessional are the life-links binding it to the Church, until at last the ever-necessary priest shows the poor soul out of the world.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Nor is this submission unwilling. Priest and people are on a plane. They are satisfied complements of each other; and were they alone in this province, it might be an interesting bit of mediævalism to the traveller, and a peaceful unit of the Dominion. As it is, the Protestant minority, more intelligent, and as individuals more wealthy, than their neighbors, have much cause for discontent.

The original gifts of land to the Church, and the present exemption from all taxes, even water tax, on all church property, press very sorely on the active workers who do not hold the faith. Besides, the collateral effects of Romanism, in the ignorance that always goes with it, and the subordination of civil authority which it demands, make trouble continually, and have had their fruit in two recent riots to which reference shall be made farther on. Yet in this atmosphere, laden as it is with superstition, I cannot see how Romanism really threatens civilization, as many fear. The mass of its adherents and converts are fit for nothing better, and its system of authority and obedience stifles the very factor needed for its supremacy; namely, the intellectual power required to wield successfully so vast and bold an organization. Such power is only born of freedom where individuality can be developed, not by any plan of mechanical uniformity and suppression. The recent policy of the Church here, as well as in Europe, has been a mistake, and shows plainly how irresponsible power is ever abused to its ruin.

Scattered throughout this province there are many religious communities provided with competence or wealth, leisure, and such education and culture as might lead one to expect them to produce something good and new in letters, science, or art. Not so. Their intellectual squalor is disheartening. They have not even written as much as a hymn, or even a good book of meditations; and the very pictures and frescoes in their best churches are the work of foreign artists.

The entire book business of this city I am sure is exceeded by several retail houses in Boston; and elsewhere in the province there is scarcely any book business at all.

Nor can the ground be taken that morally the people make up for intellectual short-comings. After seeing a great deal of them in city and country, I think that, like the native Irish, the absence of violent crime is attributable to mere simplicity of conditions. They are too ignorant, weak, and scattered to be able to commit forgeries, house and bank burglaries, or gross and extended swindling; but in all the vices and crimes within their range they are like other people,—neither better nor worse.

The ultramontane spirit has been too recently imported and forcibly spread to have been kindly received in all quarters, and some twenty years ago a few liberal French Catholics organized throughout the country some score of "Canadian Institutes," which were to furnish chiefly young men with public libraries, news-rooms, and halls for social and public discussion,—all free from priestly control. Of all these institutes the one in Montreal is the sole survivor; the priests have killed the rest, either by opposing similar institutes of their own, or by denouncing them as infidel and demoralizing.

Guibord, a printer, belonged to the institute here, and, as he well knew, as it was under the ban, he could not die in its membership and be buried in the Catholic cemetery. Having disobeyed the Church, in however arbitrary a command, he had certainly forfeited its privileges, as in the deed of purchase of his cemetery lot it was expressly agreed that none should be buried there who had not died at peace with the Church. When he died, the Church consistently enough refused to bury him. The institute took the case before the local courts, and lost, and appealed finally to the English Privy Council, which issued mandate for Guibord's burial in his lot.

The Church has weakened its otherwise strong position in two ways: by recognizing the civil courts at all, and by burying members of the institute without question when they have died rich.

At the attempted interment recently, a mob forcibly prevented the fulfilment of the law; and although trouble was anticipated, neither the Church nor the city government did anything to prevent it, nor have they since done anything to punish the rioters. The corpse still remains unburied, a disgraceful proof of the moral weakness of the community. The Catholic Bishop, seeing that the burial shall be effected, even at the sword's point, has laid himself open to farther trouble by cursing the grave, for the mandate requires burial in consecrated ground; and besides, Mrs. Guibord, who died a good Catholic, must not be endangered or contaminated by the curse on her husband, who is to rest with her forever. Verily one of the chief uses of the Catholic Church is to show the utter folly of dogmatic religion, by carrying it out rigorously in actual life in all its logical consequences.

A notable fact in this province, and particularly this city, is the high death-rate, mainly caused by the great fecundity, comparatively, of the people, the severe and fitful climate, and the prevalent ignorance of the laws of health. Small-pox never leaves the city, and frequently thirty or forty have died of it in a week. The French Canadians are generally the victims, because of their antipathy to vaccination.

Several of their physicians, chief among whom is Dr. Emery Coderre, make attempts to prove it injurious scientifically. When vaccination was first introduced here, impure lymph infected several persons, and no improvement in practice nor accumulation of evidence can now convince the common people of its safety and value. The citizens other than French, in self-defence, proposed to pass a by-law for compulsory vaccination, whereupon large opposition meetings were held, resulting in an assault and riot at City Hall, when the by-law was under consideration. Windows were smashed, furniture broken, and the councillors rudely dispersed after pitifully agreeing to drop the matter. The old French spirit of mob and revolution has not yet died out in the breasts of the submissive, priest-led Canadians, and with fitting opportunity it may yet be aroused into flame.

The present mercantile depression in Canada has never been equalled in its history. Stocks within a year have dropped twenty to thirty per cent., and the wide-spread lack of confidence is daily reducing the small, active capital engaged in business. The causes of our panic are mainly local. A succession of good years has gradually expanded credit of all kinds to the snapping-point. For years imports have been too large, and too many have been induced to start business without fit capital, character, and ability.

The enormous banking capital of the country has postponed the evil day which has come at last, and with compound interest. Two of our banks have failed in circumstances of the grossest fraud; both of them for months have published false sworn statements of their affairs, and have been managed in a slovenly, reckless way, to the severe loss of many poor stockholders. Defalcations and bankruptcies abound, with apprehension of worse yet.

This winter is expected to be a terrible one. It is a sad and dangerous thing when a man wants work and cannot get it; and thousands of such there are here now who have done nothing to bring the panic about, and who see those who are responsible for it as well off as ever. The discontent among the idle, together with the excitement about the Guibord case—which at a busy time would be much less,—conspires to make the situation here an anxious one. Firm civic control and the utmost individual charity are required, if peace and order are to be maintained.

J. G. H.

MONTREAL, Oct. 14, 1875.

INANIMATE objects sometimes appear endowed with a strange power of sight. A statue notices; a tower watches; the face of an edifice contemplates.—Victor Hugo.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 30.

M. C. Perkins, $13.30; E. Bornemann, $6.50; J. W. North, $3; Ths. Nye, $3.20; B. M. Smith, $3.20; Wilnot Wilson, $1.80; W. A. Tower, 80 cents; E. W. Hooper, $53.20; Wm. E. Shepherd, $16; C. D. Gambrell, 5.50; J. H. Clark, $3.20; W. B. Studley, $3.20; C. H. Peirce, 3.20; Aberdeen Keith, $3.20; C. A. Marks, 5 cents; H. Balcomb, $3.20; Marcus T. Jones, $1; Wm. T. Carpenter, $5.50; H. N. High, 75 cents; A. G. Wait, $3.65; C. B. Tilden, 54 cents; W. H. Parsons, $3.20; C. D. Weston, 10 cents; Harvey Spaulding, 10 cents; C. P. Somerby, $2.20; J. S. Shaler, $1.20; N. A. Lombard, $3.20; C. N. Norris, $3.50; S. Buhner, $3.20; R. J. Rogers, $2; T. D. Giddings, $3.20; Mary E. York, $2.50; George B. Thompson, $3; W. S. Bell, $5; B. F. Underwood, $3.50; Henry Müller, 25 cents; J. W. Castle, 10 cents; L. Neufeld, $2; James L. Angle, $3.20; P. Plimpton, $3.20; J. S. Cox, $2.50; N. W. Covell, $3.90; J. A. Needles, $1.20; Cash, $2.15.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

MONEY AND THE MECHANISM OF EXCHANGE. International Scientific Series. By W. Stanley Jevons, M. A., F. R. S., Professor of Logic and Political Economy in the Owens College, Manchester, Eng. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.

MUSIC OF THE WESTERN CHURCH. A Lecture on the History of Psalmody, illustrated with Examples of the Music of the Various Periods. By William A. Leonard. London: F. Pitman. 1872.

THE CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL: its Origin, History and Customs, together with a Selection of Carols. By William A. Leonard. London: F. Pitman.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

INTERESTS MATERIAL AND SPIRITUAL. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1875.

SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey. London.—The Causes of Irreligion: September 7.—A Plea for True Religion: September 12, 19, 26.—The End we have in View: October 3.

DANGER SIGNALS: an Address on the Uses and Abuses of Modern Spiritualism. By Mary F. Davis. New York: A. J. Davis & Co. 1875.

ECONOMIC SCIENCE. By Joel Densmore. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1875.

KINDERGARTEN TOYS, AND HOW TO USE THEM. By Heinrich Hoffmann. With other Tracts on the Kindergarten. All published by E. Steiger, New York.

THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S ALMANAC, for 1876. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Charles Watts. London: Charles Watts.

THE OLD FARMER'S ALMANAC, 1876. Boston: Brewer & Tileston.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. November, 1875. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

THE WESTERN. October, 1875. St. Louis: Western Publishing Association.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH. November, 1875. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

DREAMS.

I have been reading in the book of Job, Soul-shaken by its most tremendous thought: "Gird up thy loins!" thy understanding, man! "And answer me—ME, the Almighty!" So The ancient, wise, and most prophetic word. In those far times, unseparated, still devotee, Man walked and talked with God as friend with friend. Now God is banished from the human world. Not banished quite,—they say God lingers yet Upon the confines of the outer world, 'Twixt Nature and the supernatural, Or else, in region of the unknowable. Gone is the Presence and the Form Divine: That awful light and glory which once shone Around men's thoughts, as round their footsteps, is "Pinnacled dim in the intense inane"; And God exists by faith of worshippers. For like a burning light that's borne from us, So God, as faith and worship fail, recedes In distance and remoteness dim, which makes A strange, sad starlight for the orphan soul. But yet the child his trailing garment sees In clouds that hide the glory of his face; And the child hears mysterious voices still. Not sounds alone, but voices, issuing whence He knows not; but he knows the soul in him Is touched and melted in strange harmony. For the same Power that strikes upon the world Strikes on the soul, that chorded shell, and wakes The music slumbering in its silent cells, 'E'en as it slumbers in a wood, until The winds arise, and, blowing in their might, Make musical at times the roar of woods, And ring the sweet bells of the underworld.

We cling to Nature as to nurse's hand, And to the objects of our early love: The dear old earth, the cradle of our lives, The sun and moon, familiar to our thought, As honest servants, shining faces seen But balanced on the far horizon's edge! The blue horizon rimming the green earth, And shutting in my valley-home, with all Its homely virtues, and that still serene And cheerful hope on which the mind relies, Not darkly doubtful, but with trust sublime. And there are minds so full of hope and faith, So poised and balanced in eternal calm, And wrapt in ethers of embracing love, They wear the heaven's fair, perpetual smile, A look of happiness,—supreme content,— Like deep seas in a sunny atmosphere. And what were man without the hope sublime. That fills the present, makes the future bright, And rainbows o'er the world beyond the grave,— The lustrous hope that rises soft and clear Behind his knowledge and low-born desire, Like heaven's blue ground against the baser earth? "Our little lives are rounded with a sleep." And were they not—could lives continue on Unaltered still by fate or circumstance,— Yet who would live without the hope of change? Who does not almost hate the world because It grinds forever in the self-same groove The thoughts of him who lives and works in it? But that sleep comes to break the chain imposed, To break the circle, and to let go free The conjured spirit and its kindred claim With brighter worlds and better lives than ours. 'E'en as the sea that washes round the earth Becomes a bridge uniting worlds in twain, So is this world and other joined by sleep. Spirits and angels on that bridge may meet And pass their greetings, and on errands still Run to and fro, and knowledge be increased; But chief our knowledge of the spirit world. There was a time when men relied on dreams. They welcomed them full-freighted from the skies, As messengers from heaven and from God. "The Lord came to me in a dream by night." So they believed the dream, and welcomed it As eagerly as men now welcome news By the last packet from a foreign strand. Poet and prophet was the dreamer then, For he interpreted the dream, and brought Not Asia's word, not Europe's troubled thought, But news of God who sent the dream to him, And by a sentence like "Thus saith the Lord," He raised the abject slave above all fear, And shook the stoutest monarch on his throne. Dreamers were poets then; the poet now But plays some tricks in language of his own. Is this the art, the faculty divine, When rhetoricians skillfully usurp The name of poets, but they cannot wear The fallen mantle of the sacred bard? But poetry is not dead, nor that divine Spirit that lives and breathes in all mankind. And men might poets be, would they give heed Unto their dreams, and above all obey The secret hints and omens of the mind. But men reck not; they lose and cast away, Or suffer to be lost, their ships of dreams, Rich argosies of golden thoughts to men, Which not embalmed in books have disappeared. For thoughts once lost are like forgotten dreams; And many a noble work in ruin lies, Because the dream did not become a fact. The world calls dreamers those who live alone, Who dedicate themselves to some great work, And pass their time in fancies of silent thought. The work is done, and then the workman dies. The world meantime knows not, nor cares to ask, Who laid the keel of that mysterious ship To sail o'er gulfs of space and time and thought: O'er gulfs like that which Milton's hero passed; Or that enchanted boat, by no hand steered, Which Shelley launched in his adventurous song; Or epic of the mightier Florentine, Who sailed his Dream through hell and world and heaven, Ascending visions to the most high God. St. John saw sitting on "a great white throne" Him in the heavens; but there was no place For earth or sea, which fled before his face. His raiment white as snow, and sun and moon Beneath his feet,—for darkness ever was About his throne, though in a blaze of light. "Shadow of God," said Plato of the light, Implying that the light became a veil Which hid the features of the Eternal One In glow of splendors most insufferable. The face of Moses glowed upon the Mount: For he had seen, the record says, a face Which no man else might see and hope to live. And still the faith of Orthodox divines Draws round his form the light-obscuring veil, The dread effulgence of the face of God, Which withers man as fire the shrivelled leaf: And in the judgment who cannot abide To be in presence of that awful light, Ten thousand splendors brighter than the sun, Will fall with others of our worthless race, Swept like dead leaves before the fiery blast. But thou, soft Moon of that great Sun, who art The God of glory veiled in mortal flesh (Unless the faith of Christendom be vain), On thee men look, behold thy face, and live.

J. S.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15, 1875.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 4, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. This does not apply to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as the reduction is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

THIS LITTLE NOTE explains itself: "Major Evans Bell, the Honorary Secretary of the Fund for Mr. G. J. Holyoake, to which many friends in America have subscribed, would be obliged, if the editor of THE INDEX would announce that it is intended to close this fund at the end of the year, and that the Committee will be favored by receiving at an early date any further sums which friends of Mr. Holyoake may intend sending. The editor of THE INDEX has kindly consented to receive subscriptions to forward them." We add that it will be the greatest of pleasures to be the medium of such kind messages to one whose character commands the highest respect, whose sacrifices and services for the cause of mental liberty deserve the general gratitude, and whose honorable poverty, advanced years, and feeble health now render assistance a sacred duty of humanity.

MR. GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, whose monthly letters to THE INDEX have been interrupted for several months by sickness, contributes another of his interesting series to the present number. His many friends in this country will be rejoiced to learn that, although not yet wholly restored, his health is decidedly better. Lippincott has just published an American edition of Mr. Holyoake's invaluable History of Coöperation, Vol. 1, which will be forwarded from this office on receipt of two dollars. It is an indispensable work for all who are interested in the labor question, and its scope can be gathered from this pregnant definition: "Coöperation, in the social sense of the word, is a new power of industry, constituted by the equitable combination of worker, capitalist, and consumer, and a new means of commercial morality, by which honesty is rendered productive."

MR. MURRAY'S Golden Rule and Mr. Babcock's New Age are new papers recently started, the former in the interest of "Liberal Orthodoxy," and the latter in the interest of "discussion, not advocacy"; though all "discussion" is necessarily "advocacy" of different views by different minds. The typographical appearance of the New Age, an eight-page weekly at $3.00 a year, is faultless, and its tone is mild and conciliatory. Its first issue contains a variety of bright paragraphs and longer articles by the editor, the best of which is on "Dreams," and contributions by Messrs. Stevens, Hinckley, Clifford, Smart, Pratt, and others. The purpose of the paper is to "convene in these columns a Congress of all sections and representatives of human progress"; and the editor says that, "if there is a journal now doing the work we propose for the New Age, we are unacquainted with it." If Mr. Babcock has definite and positive convictions of his own to express, they will probably develop themselves hereafter, as he still holds them in reserve. We wish success, and the best success, to every attempt to bring forward the results of matured thought on any side of any question; but we believe no journal can ever win the best success, if the editor either has no such results, or forbears to bring them forward in order to avoid making his paper "advocate" something. Mr. Babcock's enterprise will deserve sympathy exactly in proportion to the excellence of what he has to "advocate."

F. R. A. CONVENTION.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Worcester, Mass., beginning on Tuesday, the 16th November, in the evening, and holding through the 17th.

Messrs. Frothingham, Higginson, Abbot, Gannett, and other well-known speakers, are expected to be present. Further particulars will be given next week and in the local papers.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

AN OPEN LETTER.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY, ULYSSES S. GRANT, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Sir,—The brief speech delivered by you at the late reunion of the Army of the Tennessee made a deservedly favorable and deep impression on the minds of your fellow-citizens. It struck a responsive chord in the soul of every enlightened patriot. The danger of "another great contest in the near future of our national existence" is not an imaginary one, and you admirably defined its character; the necessity of "strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago" is evident to every far-sighted thinker; the duty of "adding all needful guarantees" for freedom of thought and utterance, and for equality of human rights regardless of all arbitrary distinctions, cannot be too strongly dwelt upon; the one great guarantee and safeguard of republican institutions, a system of absolutely unsectarian public instruction in the primary elements of knowledge, cannot be entrenched too strongly in the hearts of the people; and, lastly, the principle that the matter of religion should be left entirely to the citizens in their private capacity, and that the Church and the State should be absolutely and forever separate, needs to-day as never before to be pressed home upon the general mind and conscience. For your weighty and timely declaration of these things—weighty by its intrinsic truth and by the just influence of your own high position, timely by reason of the evident drift of contemporaneous events—I venture, as merely one of your forty-six million fellow-citizens, to thank you gratefully and publicly.

At the same time I would respectfully suggest that, in one supremely important point, the meaning which I doubt not you intended to convey by your words is liable to be misunderstood by the general public, and to express a hope that, in such manner as shall best commend itself to your own judgment, you will take occasion to render all such misunderstanding impossible by an explicit and indisputable interpretation of your own language. The point I refer to needs a little explanation.

Moved undoubtedly by sincere devotion to its own religion, the Roman Catholic Church in this country is avowing itself more and more plainly every day the enemy of our public school system. It claims that, as administered, this system violates and oppresses the Catholic conscience: (1) because the schools are made "Protestant" in character by the religious exercises now held in them; (2) because the total omission of all religious exercises would convert them into "godless" schools; and (3) because the requirements of the Catholic conscience can only be met by a system of instruction absolutely under the control of the Catholic priesthood. For these reasons the Catholic Church demands that the school funds shall be divided, or the school tax remitted, or the school system surrendered wholly to their own control. Fair-minded persons will not hastily assume that these claims and demands are wholly baseless, but will be disposed to lend an attentive ear to complaints urged in the sacred name of conscience. I believe that, so far as the protest lies against the Protestant character impressed on the school system by the Bible-reading and other religious exercises which it sustains, the Catholics are in the right and the dominant majority are in the wrong. It is a fundamental principle of our government, which is formally affirmed in most of our State Constitutions, that no man shall be taxed for the support of a religion which is not his own; and it follows by irrefutable logic that the nation does wrong to tax the Catholics for the support of Protestant worship, whether such worship is practiced in churches or school-houses. Our school system, therefore, is not rightly or justly administered to-day, judged by the very principles we profess to be governed by. The American people are persuaded (and I certainly share the persuasion) that it is not only just, but absolutely indispensable to our national existence, to maintain a system of public education by general taxation; but all the more incumbent upon us is the duty of making this system perfectly equitable and impartial. No one who is willing to waive his prejudices so far as to consider this question from the various points of view held by the Catholics, the Protestants, the Jews, and the great multitude of free thinkers of all sorts, can fail to admit that no one of these parties has the right to stamp its private belief on the public school system. The case is too plain for argument; wilfulness alone can obscure the issue. I hold it, therefore, as self-evident that so much of the Catholic protest as lies against the maintenance of Protestant worship in the public schools is intrinsically just, and that the schools ought to be absolutely unsectarian in the broadest sense of that word.

It is only on this point that I think the language of your late speech susceptible of misconstruction. The word "sect" is almost universally considered to apply solely to the denominational subdivisions of Protestantism, not to Protestantism itself. The Methodists, the Baptists, the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, the Episcopalians, and so forth, are popularly classed as "sects"; but the great body of Protestant believers which is composed of all such denominations combined is not popularly so classed. It is not perceived that the Protestants are as much a "sect," in relation to the Catholics, the Jews, or the community as a whole, as the Methodists are in relation to the Baptists. Hence the Protestant public are quite unanimous in the declaration that the public school system must be "unsectarian," not perceiving that they have themselves made it "sectarian" by maintaining in the schools a non-denominational, but distinctively Protestant, form of worship. Here is the root of a possible misunderstanding of your speech. When I consider the breadth of your words—"Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions," I cannot resist the conviction that in your own mind you have risen above the common, confused notion of sectarianism; and that, when you so emphatically urge your fellow-citizens to withhold all support from "sectarian schools," you mean to be understood as expressing yourself in favor of the total cessation of all religious exercises in schools supported by general taxation. If your meaning is any less broad or just than this, I shall for one be greatly disappointed; for I would fain find your speech to be what I now believe it—the bravest, the wisest, and the most truly American utterance on this question yet made by any one holding high official position in public life.

But, on account of the ambiguity of the word "sectarian" which I have pointed out, the natural effect of this utterance is at least greatly impaired. So many Protestants think that the full measure of unsectarianism is reached, when the mutual differences of Protestant sects are put out of sight, that it does not occur to them that you could mean to counsel the exclusion of the Bible from the schools and the discontinuance of all religious exercises in them. They fail to comprehend the broad sweep of your language, and thereby lose its most instructive lesson. No question of this time is so profoundly important as that which concerns the preservation, the reform, the improvement, of our public school system; and the country will owe you a great debt of gratitude, if you now unmistakably throw the weight of your influence in favor of the absolute secularization of that system. I therefore venture to ask you in this public way to remove the uncertainty, and in many quarters the misunderstanding, which lessen the full force of your noble speech, and to declare yourself unmistakably in favor of the only genuine "unsectarianism"; namely, that which sinks not only the distinction between Methodist and Baptist, but also that between Catholic and Protestant, in the grand universality of equal human rights. If you, a Methodist Protestant, can practise the high magnanimity of waiving your Methodism and your Protestantism for the preservation of that public school system which is the republic's only bulwark against self-dissolution in general ignorance and degradation, I am persuaded that the effect of your example will not be lost on the great body of your fellow-Protestants, but will stimulate them all to make the sacrifice now imperatively demanded of them by their country's welfare—the sacrifice of the sectarian but unjust advantage they now enjoy in the conduct of the public schools. It is a great opportunity for you to do a new deed of priceless service for the country which owes so much already to your historic past; and the greatness of the opportunity must be my excuse for the liberty I have taken in pointing it out.

Respectfully yours,

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

"L'INSTITUT CANADIEN."

Last Saturday M. Joseph Dufresne, the accredited representative of "L'Institut Canadien" of Montreal, which is engaged in the great struggle with the Roman Catholic Church over the burial of Joseph Guibord, presented a letter of introduction at this office, in furtherance of the objects for which he is travelling in the United States. He solicits the pecuniary aid of the American people in the maintenance of the Institute's cause; and any sums, large or small, which may be forwarded to "M. Joseph Dufresne, Advocate, St. F. X., Montreal," will be faithfully devoted to that purpose. As explained by M. Dufresne, the Guibord case is imperfectly understood in this country, even by our best journals. It seems that, by the Concordat mutually agreed upon by the Pope and the French government prior to the English conquest of Canada, it became the civil right of every French Catholic citizen to be buried in consecrated ground, unless excommunicated by name and by notice personally served upon him. At the time of the cession in 1763, the English government bound itself to execute the already existing laws relating to the Catholic Church; and the mandate of the Privy Council, ordering the burial of Guibord in consecrated ground, is issued simply for the protection of Guibord's civil right, under a contract formally assented to by the Church itself and made part of the law of the land. Bishop Bourget, by denying him burial in consecrated ground, violates this contract, and renders himself amenable to the Courts. The real question now is whether the Church has the right, or shall have the power, to cancel this contract at its own pleasure, and set at defiance the civil power which interferes to protect the rights of the habitants, solemnly guaranteed by itself at the time of the cession. If the Bishop executes his threat of cursing the grave after Guibord's burial on November 18, a new appeal will be at once taken to the Privy Council; for the independence and supremacy of the civil government, as well as the civil rights of Canadian Catholics, are at stake. Although the issue is a terribly mixed one, considered from an American point of view, there can be no doubt that the little Canadian Institute, with its heavy debt of $15,000, is bravely fighting the battle of religious liberty in its own country; and it deserves the hearty support of all who sympathize with that cause the world over. With its property of $30,000 now mortgaged to half its value, its local usefulness has been sadly crippled by the expenses of its law-suit; and its modest appeal for general support in a general cause will surely be heard and responded to.

FREE THOUGHT NOTES.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREE-THINKER.

ED. INDEX:—

Formerly I saw without looking; now I look without seeing—very much. Though the capacity of discernment increases, I have been wandering about our eastern coasts, with great advantage to my health. My physician advised me to do nothing for a long time; and I have tried it, till I begin to like it. It has just occurred to me that I have not fulfilled my engagement of sending to you a certain series of letters, and that I ought to give my mind to fulfilling that duty.

A curious emendation occurred in a public letter I lately wrote, which shows that the delicacy of terms imputed to Americans, as a fastidious singularity, exists also among us. Not being able to read at the time I wrote, the revision of my letter fell into other hands. A passage occurred in it in which I said that a certain Act of George III., employed in this country to put down any public address or scientific lectures on the Sunday, where admission was charged, was a prohibition of any instruction given to the poor on the seventh day; since it must be given altogether at the cost of those who gave it, unless those who valued and availed themselves of it were permitted to contribute in some small degree to defray its expenses. Lecture halls and advertisements are expensive in England, and those who are best able to give information worth receiving are not always able, even if willing, to give all their time of research, preparation, and delivery for nothing. The Act which prevented payment by the hearers was written by Bishop Porteous, and drawn so astutely by his wise and wicked hand, that not even a bug could get into his lordship's bed on a Sunday (if any consideration was taken for his admission), without the chamber-maid being liable to a fine of £200. The word "bug" never appeared. That noisome little word was changed into "tiniest insect." It appeared, I suppose, to the reviser that even a bug could not have been so depraved and thoughtless as to attempt to bite that worthy bishop. But why the "tiniest insect" should be considered capable of an act of audacity from which his larger brother was conceived to shrink, I have never ascertained. You will please bear in mind that we have delicacy of sentiment over here, and due discernment of all the gradations of ecclesiastical deference in the insect world.

There is general contentment expressed in every town in the kingdom here that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have retired from troubling us, and we hope they have found repose in the bosom of their country. Complaints are made that, now that the machinery of spiritual excitement which those ingenious operators put in motion here is withdrawn, there is great flatness in the world of religious sensationalism, and that the average of piety has fallen below its former standard, and cannot be brought up to the more wholesome level at which it formerly existed. Well-informed clergymen wrote to the public journals after the departure of the Chicago apostles, to complain that they had introduced a spurious and dangerous doctrine of salvation into the country. They had represented that the forgiveness of God was to be had at their hands; its acceptance there and then was all that was necessary; unless people believed upon the spot, they could hope for no further chance. These clergymen contended, and I think very wisely, that salvation depends not merely upon change of profession, but on change of life; that it is an affair of spiritual culture, and is to be purchased by conduct; and that it is immoral to represent it as being obtainable by the lucky accident of meeting with Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

You heard these gentlemen were invited to Eton, the most famous aristocratic school in Great Britain,—it being intended that the Eton boys should be brought under the tuition of the Chicago salvation agents. Immediately parents of the children, in both Houses of Parliament, called for public interference to save their sons from being subjected to contact with this spurious spiritualism. In consequence of this outcry, I wrote a letter to the Times, saying: "America has finer samples of faith than that lately so ostentatiously made known to the English people. It is therefore creditable to the higher taste among us, that the parents who have children at Eton object to their sons being familiarized with the peculiar quality of grace imported into this country by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It was as pleasant as rare to see anywhere in our days self-respect in salvation. But how is it that noblemen and clergymen of high degree should think that good enough for the people which is not good enough for their sons? Since God is no respecter of persons, why should the common people be left to go to heaven in an inferior way?" The fact became obvious to the whole country, from what took place at Eton, that we have two sorts of salvation in England; that respectable people have their own private arrangements for their eternal security; and that they are quite content that working people should be carted away to Paradise by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. No doubt they believe in their hearts that St. Peter keeps a separate gate for the admission of the humbler arrivals.

Since your enterprising countrymen have returned, balance-sheets have been published of the total expenditure on account of their proceedings in London; but not a word is said of what they received for their services. I should have no objection to their being paid. I never thought them anything but earnest, sincere men, very much mistaken in their ideas, and largely deficient in spiritual taste. They certainly worked incessantly, and ought to have been liberally paid. If they were paid, why should they be ashamed to own it? And why should we not be informed whether they were paid adequately? There were prelates and priests who promoted and connived at their proceedings who were handsomely paid themselves; and if they sent Moody and Sankey pennilessly away, we have some very shabby saints among us. We do not want American apostles to visit us for nothing. The common people have independence, and do not want to go to heaven by charity. Their means have much improved of late years, and they can afford to pay for grace like their betters, and I hope will always have the will to do it.

You are a determined people. When Lord Coleridge (then Sir John) made his twenty-one days' speech against Orton Tichborne, the butcher of Wapping, he flattered ourselves that a Britisher had made the biggest speech on record; and when we began a second trial, and continued it month after month, we naturally concluded that this nation would be so silly as to wish to rival us in this costly and perilous prolixity of law. The Irish are the most ungrateful people in the world. We have abolished their national Church, and keep up the disadvantage and dominancy of our own. We have given the Irish a system of land-laws immensely superior to any we enjoy ourselves. In Parliament we treat their members with a deference which is not accorded to English representatives; so that Englishmen discontented with their own country, and seeking a land of freedom, emigrate to Ireland. If an Irishman presents himself as a candidate in any English borough, the constituency go mad to elect him; this is why the borough of Stoke sent Dr. Kenealy to Parliament, and why the populace listen to him, as he goes about our country complaining that the spurious Roger Tichborne did not have a fair trial. It took two years and cost the country £200,000 to convict him. If he had not a fair trial, there is no knave ever transported who is not illegally convicted, and no scoundrel been hanged who was not murdered; for we never devoted a twentieth part of the money or time on any trial before.

It was Lord Coleridge's ill-timed and virulent tongue which made premature imputations, and took twenty-one days to try to prove them. The crowd cannot follow a three weeks' demonstration. He founded the Tichborne agitation, which we thought would deter all rivals. But we have been deceived. You envy us our foolish fame, and so have invented a big trial of Mr. Beecher imitating us in the most ridiculous particulars. We closed our proceedings by prosecuting a witness (one Luie) for perjury; and we learn from the papers you are going into that line also, and also have a perjurer before your courts. We scarcely understand in this country how the Tilton scandal could be the subject of a protracted trial. Two witnesses like Moulton and Tilton would not have been believed, in England, against any minister whose character stood half as high as that of Mr. Beecher. At the beginning of the affair, I wrote to Mr. Beecher to say I did not believe a word those accusers could say, or would say, against him. I once had, when Mr. Beecher was in this country, a short correspondence with him; but I did not imagine it could be of consequence to him what I thought of this Tilton-Moulton affair. But I had respect for him and his great services on the side of freedom and the Union in this country and in yours; and I thought it might be some satisfaction to him to know that persons whom he might regard as the most likely to believe charges against a minister were not among his adversaries or defamers here. I know that any person in a position where he is required to be the counsel of others is often placed by his own generosity, and mere kindness of heart, in circumstances which might easily be construed into guilt; and unless a generous construction was placed upon his conduct, many persons would be deterred from rendering services of the greatest social value.

I have begun to have propagandist adventures again, of which I will give you an account.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I hope you are aware that we Englishmen are a very virtuous nation. There is nothing we abhor so much as vice—in others; nothing so soon rouses our righteous indignation as tyranny and oppression—in foreign lands.

Wherever we are unable to play the part of international policeman, we betake ourselves with resignation to the rôle of "heavy father," rather than not interfere at all in the correction of our neighbors.

We have just had a tremendous eruption of this praiseworthy zeal. A deeply degraded member of our government, totally blind and deaf to English ignorance and traditions, lately issued a circular in regard to fugitive slaves and British men-of-war, practically rescinding the old glorious shibboleth: "Every man is free on British soil, or under the British flag."

In sober earnestness this was a terrible blunder, and ought not to have been committed. The government, aroused by the general agitation, seem to think so too, and have "suspended" the obnoxious order, with a view, no doubt, to its being ultimately cancelled. The benighted individual who has caused all this clamor possibly fell into this woful mistake through a sense of justice to the holders of property who, we are taught to believe, have rights quite as much as fugitive slaves.

We may congratulate ourselves, however, that our zeal for poor slaves is still strong enough to crush every other moral consideration. One of our orators went so far as to say "the sooner the owners of slaves were ruined, the better."

Some of our philanthropists have invoked "Christianity" to their aid in denouncing the hated circular; and one went so far in his bold flight as to quote the New Testament on his side in spite of the example of the Apostle Paul. Altogether the exhibition has been both amusing and highly flattering to our country; and it will be long before any government repeats such an enormity as to enjoin the surrender of fugitive slaves.

Yet, somehow, I do not feel quite so elated and proud of my countrymen as might be wished. The fairness of the picture is considerably spoilt by a text which will keep thrusting itself up into my mind's eye: "First cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye."

It seems to me that Englishmen are yet steeped in ignorance on the question of slavery, and are totally blind to the various ways in which they themselves are both slave-holders and slave-traders.

No sane man would dream of defending the iniquity of buying and selling slaves; or the still worse horrors of slave-breeding, and the separation of husband and wife, parents and children, for mere gain. No one with a heart the size of a pea would tolerate for a moment a revival of slave-beating and cruelty such as disgraced our colonies fifty years ago.

But all these evils are not absolutely essential to a system of compulsory labor, such as is in the highest degree beneficial to some races and some conditions of men. That slavery is not an unmixed evil, is as true as that it is not an unmixed good. And on this part of the subject of slavery Englishmen for the most part are perversely ignorant and, of course, intolerant. As I cannot enlighten them by half-a-dozen lines in THE INDEX, I pass on to point out their inconsistency. While we rave against the slave-trade in foreign countries, we have some of the worst features of slavery in our own land.

Some may think that I am alluding to the alleged tyranny of the upper classes over the lower. I am doing no such thing. If we want instances of generous consideration, and even kindly indulgence of employers towards the employed, we should find the most eminent and most numerous among our hereditary aristocracy and most ancient county families. Where slavery abounds is chiefly among those who are just above the verge of poverty themselves, or who are eaten up by covetousness and greed of gain.

There are thousands of white slaves here in this land of boasted freedom,—slaves who are bought and sold as well as coerced, and God knows how often ill-treated.

I am not going to bring a hornet's nest upon my head by singling out individuals, or even mentioning specific trades and employments where slavery is rampant. I only say that it is so, and the slaves at all events know it full well, and live and die beating against the bars of their cage. Many a family has been broken up and scattered just as fatally and cruelly as under the auctioneer's hammer in Tennessee. To this hour aged couples, not less dear to each other than "John Anderson" and his wife, are separated in the work-houses in their old age; and if this be not inhuman and cruel as any slavery, I know not what cruelty is.

No doubt the struggle for existence interferes at every turn with individual liberty; but of this discipline we do not complain; we receive it and use it—with a wry face, probably,—but with a secret conviction that it is the best possible training for our characters, and but for it, we should never be more than animals. But this needful discipline is fearfully aggravated and overdone through either the thoughtlessness or selfish ambition of those into whose hands its administration has fallen. We, of all people, have no right to cry out against foreign slavery, while we have so much more of it than we ought to have in our houses, and shops, and factories. I am no more a friend to oppression than Clarkson, Wilberforce, and Garrison—would no more hand over a fugitive slave to a cruel master than would Theodore Parker; but for all that, I see but too plainly a vast amount of noisy and easy "virtue" in the antipathy of Englishmen to compulsory labor, and a vast amount of hypocrisy in their denunciation of slavery.

"Charity begins at home," and so does true liberty. It is our business to see, not that all without exception shall be turned loose to do as they please, but that the necessary and wholesome restrictions on liberty shall not be perverted into tyranny; and that only those who can and will use their liberty aright shall be intrusted with so precious, so perilous a boon.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, Oct. 9, 1875.

Communications.

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

THE BISHOP'S PLATFORM AND THE CATHOLIC CONSPIRACY.

THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—So the propositions which I have been for some time developing in the columns of THE INDEX have now, in your estimation, shrunk into mere truism. If so, they are demonstrated; demonstration, to whatever applied, being nothing else than the reduction to truisms, which every one admits, of propositions the truth of which was not at first manifest.

This truism, as you express it with my full assent, is that, in the United States, Church and State are not yet as completely separated as they should be. This is a very fair summing up of all that I expressed with specifications.

Since my series of communications began, there has been in your sheet comments upon them, and in your own articles, as well as in those of several of your contributors, a steady approximation to a clearer understanding of the subject. Whether my humble and zealous efforts have contributed to this result, or have been themselves one of the individual manifestations of the collective growth of the public mind, is a question as unimportant as my own personality.

In reference to a doubt that you still express, I reiterate to you and to your readers the assurance that nothing is farther from my mind than to wish to see American citizens restricted in their liberty to make just such private contracts as they please, provided that of those private contracts, such as are, in their stipulations, of a civil nature, should alone receive enforcement at the hands of the civil courts. Private contracts sectarian in their nature should have none but a spiritual enforcement, such as excommunication or deposition from the ministry; and excommunication or ministerial deposition, in a country with a laic government, should have absolutely no temporal effects enforceable at the hands of a civil court.

The opposite doctrine is simply that of the Inquisition. The Inquisition justified its proceedings on the ground that there was a private contract between the Church and the person who had subsequently turned a heretic. This contract was held susceptible of temporal enforcement by the temporal courts, into whose hands the Church delivered the criminal to be executed.

It is evident that nothing short of the theory on which the Inquisition was founded could justify the present practice of the civil courts of this country in enforcing sectarian contracts. In other words, as it is true that though Presbyterians do not like to hear it, so is it true that we now have the Inquisition in full operation in the United States, though, thanks to God, Americans do not like to hear it, and will soon put the matter in order. Until they do, I will, as myself a good and loyal American citizen, reckon among my most glorious privileges that of grumbling at my country in this and every other thing in which I may think her wrong.

"A presbyter is but a priest writ large,"

In this, however, I do not only act in my capacity as an American citizen loyal to his country. I also act in defence of the spiritual interests entrusted to me as a Christian bishop. As long as sectarianism can hold the souls of men captive through the bribery of its endowments and mercantile stipulations in matters of conscience, so long will it be impossible for the Christianity of Jesus Christ to take a footing in this country. I see in the ministers of the different sects slaves used against me for strategic purposes; in other words, CONTRABAND OF WAR; and it is as a strategic measure that I demand their emancipation.

I remain, dear sir, truly yours,

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, Oct. 22, 1875.

AN IMPORTANT CHURCH CASE: NO "CANON LAW" IN NEW YORK STATE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As bearing upon the question "whether we have a canon law in this country," allow me to call your attention to the case of Watkins vs. Wilcox, decided by the General Term of the New York Supreme Court in the Third Department at April term, 1875, and reported in 4th Huse, at page 220. It will also be interesting to you, as it involves substantially the same questions as were at issue in your case in New Hampshire. We see by the liberal language used by Judge Learned, who writes the opinion of the Court, that the "world moves," and that we have public men who dare to express their common-sense views, and say that in religious corporations the majority should be allowed to control, the same as in other associations; men who recognize the fact that, "in spite of written symbols, the beliefs of men change and have changed"; and who "look with no favor on a rule which would permit the past generations to appropriate property to the support of their beliefs, so permanently as to deprive the present of the use of such property, in case those old beliefs shall have passed away."

The incorporation in question was formed under the act of the New York Legislature, entitled "An Act to provide for the Incorporation of Religious Societies," passed April 5, 1813, under the name of "The Elders and Deacons of the Protestant Reformed Dutch Church of Ithaca." It was in connection with the general synod of the Reformed Church in America, and with the classis of Geneva, an inferior ecclesiastical body connected therewith. In July, 1872, a large majority of the church and congregation petitioned the classis to dismiss the church from its ecclesiastical connection. A meeting of the consistory in October, 1872, with one only dissenting (the plaintiff), requested the dissolution of the relation between the church and that classis; the classis declined to terminate the connection itself, though admitting that either party had the right to terminate that connection when it thought proper.

In December, 1872, the church voted to disconnect itself from the classis of Geneva and the general synod of the Reformed Church of America. The vote was sixteen male members in favor, one opposed.

In February, 1873, the consistory of the church voted to confide the management of its concerns to nine trustees, and the trustees were elected accordingly. Subsequently, an application was made to a justice of the Supreme Court for a change of the name of the church, and it was changed accordingly to "The First Congregational Church of Ithaca, N. Y.," and a Congregational clergyman was employed. The action was brought to set aside the order changing the name of the society, and to have the transfer to the trustees of the temporal affairs of the church declared void, and to have the old consistory of 1872 adjudged entitled thereto. Judgment was rendered for defendant, and plaintiff appealed to the General Term. Judge Learned then proceeds on the opinion of the Court as follows:—

"It may be well to examine this case on the broad grounds raised by the plaintiff's counsel. In substance these are that as the majority of the congregation have severed themselves from the old ecclesiastical connection, the property belongs to the minority. It is important here to notice that the law of charitable uses has no existence in this State. 'Corporations take and hold property only to the amounts and for the purposes prescribed by their charters or acts of incorporation' (52 N. Y., 332). And in the act to provide for the incorporation of religious societies (Laws of 1813), the only purpose prescribed is to be found in section 4. There it is said that the trustees of every church, congregation, or society hold the real and personal estate for the use of such church, congregation, or society, or other pious uses."

"So far, then, as the express language of the act goes, there is nothing which declares that the trustees hold the property for the support of the believers in any particular tenets. That act is one in all its scope. It provides for the incorporations of religious societies in three different cases: first, in the Protestant Episcopal churches; second, in the Dutch Reformed; third, in all others. In each instance it provides for the election of persons to be trustees. In the first, these are the rector, wardens, and vestrymen; in the second, the minister, elders, and deacons; in the third, those who are elected trustees. But in each case their authority is not by virtue of any ecclesiastical office; it is simply because the law declares them to be trustees. And section 4 speaks of all these trustees alike, giving them, in each case, the same powers."

"I see no reason to think that the trustees of societies organized under one section of this act have any different rights or authority from the trustees of societies organized under either of the other sections; or that any system was intended to be established under section 3 different from that established under sections 1 and 2. The counsel for the plaintiff urges strongly that the contrary is true, and that an ecclesiastical character is possessed by the societies formed under sections 1 and 2, which does not belong to those formed under section 3. But we must notice that there are many other large denominations which are as thoroughly organized, are as much accustomed to have what, by a misnomer, are called ecclesiastical courts, as either of those denominations named in the first and second sections. Such, to name no others, are the Presbyterian, the Methodist Episcopal, the Lutheran. Now, the religious societies connected in belief with these organizations, must incorporate themselves under the third section of the act, and have done so. . . .

"The act was intended to form a general system, and to make only such variations as would facilitate, in each denomination, the election of trustees, by harmonizing such election with old and existing customs. . . .

"Religious societies are not ecclesiastical corporations in the meaning of the English law. They are civil corporations. The corporation consists not of the trustees but of the members of the society. 'It was the intention of the Legislature to place the control of the temporal affairs of these societies in the hands of a majority of the corporators, independent of priest or bishop, presbytery or synod, or other ecclesiastical judicatory.' (11 N. Y., 243.) . . .

"It is insisted that one qualification of a voter in corporations under the second section, is to be a communicant in good standing, and that the members of this church have ceased to be such. . . .

"The consistory of the church is the tribunal which decides on the standing of the members, and that body had not excommunicated any of these. Their right to vote was undisturbed. It seems to me to follow from the decisions that the majority of the corporators have the right to control, and that they are free from any ecclesiastical restrictions. If there is anything contrary to this view in Watson vs. Jones (13 Wall, 714), or in the decisions of other States, it is not binding.

"I fully agree with the principle which thus seems to me to be established. In spite of written symbols, the beliefs of men change and have changed; and I look with no favor on a rule which would permit the past generations to appropriate property to the support of their beliefs, so permanently as to deprive the present of the use of such property, in case those old beliefs shall have passed away. The judgment should be affirmed with costs."

The italics are mostly mine. I have given a full statement of the case, and copious extracts from the opinion, for the reason that the statute in question does not differ in effect from the statutes of other States upon the same subject, and also to show to Bishop Ferrette that we have no canon law in New York. Churches here are civil corporations, like banks or railroads, having the right to connect themselves with other like corporations, the same as do banks and railroads, and the like right to disconnect themselves and be governed by the vote of a majority of the corporators, as to the manner in which they shall carry on the business for which they are organized. It is also recognized as a fact that beliefs in religious matters change, in like manner as do beliefs as to the proper manner to run a mine or a steamboat, and a majority of the corporators have the common, civil right to change the manner and form of the operations to be carried on by the concern.

MARATHON, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1875.

SETTLED.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I wish to disavow any intention of doing you any injustice in holding you responsible for the "statements of fact" contained in the Christian Union article which you embodied in your editorial on "The Catholic Peril."

I now understand THE INDEX to affirm that it is not responsible for "statements of fact," or opinions, contained in extracts from other papers which are embodied in its editorials, unless they are distinctly indorsed in the editor's own language. Now this is to me an entirely novel position, and I think will be so to most of your readers, since every one whose attention I have called to the matter has agreed with me in the general understanding of the usage in such cases. I am yet unable to see what purpose that quotation served in your article, unless you tacitly indorsed its correctness.

However, since the position of THE INDEX is now understood, we will drop the matter, and I will endeavor to do you no "injustice" hereafter.

The Ohio election is happily over, and "hard money" is triumphant before the people. Whether more bigoted Protestants were influenced by the agitation of the "school question" to vote the Republican ticket, or sensible people, disgusted with the senseless clamor, were led to refrain from voting it, can hardly be known.

The subterfuge was so thoroughly exposed in Ohio, that the discussion was almost entirely dropped there (judging from the newspapers) for some time before the election; and probably very few votes were influenced, either way.

Let us rejoice, then, in the triumph of financial honesty, and rally all our friends, of whatever party, for the complete secularization and permanence of our public school system. LEWIS G. JAMES.

NEW YORK, Oct. 25, 1875.

[The "purpose" of that quotation was to show what the Christian Union thought, and to leave the statement of fact standing solely on the Christian Union's authority. This authority we considered good, but did not choose to be held responsible for a positive statement, when we had no personal knowledge. All this is so simple and easy to understand that we should not have thought it necessary to say it, if it had not been misunderstood. Our readers will avoid all "injustice" of the kind referred to by remembering that we "indorse" only what we say we indorse; everything else stands on its own authority. We thank Mr. James for his disclaimer.—ED.]

DON CARLOS, the pretender to the throne of Spain, has promulgated the penal code which is to "be provisionally enforced under the present circumstances of war." It will be adopted by all the judicial tribunals in the part of Spain which is under his control. What this son of the Church intends as to religious liberty will appear from the following clauses:—

No. 124. "Any attempt to abolish or change the Roman Catholic apostolic religion in Spain shall be punished by temporary imprisonment and perpetual banishment, if the criminal be in public authority and be guilty of the crime of abusing it. If, however, the criminal be in other circumstances, the penalty shall be commuted to long imprisonment; and in case of repetition, temporary imprisonment and perpetual banishment.

No. 125. "Any person celebrating public worship, not of the Roman Catholic apostolic religion, shall be punished by temporary banishment.

No. 132. "A Spaniard publicly abjuring the Roman Catholic religion shall be punished by perpetual banishment, this punishment to cease from the moment he returns to the pale of the Church."

This is now the law in a part of Spain.—Investigator.

STOCK LIST OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION (UNPAID ASSESSMENTS).

In July last a copy of the following circular was mailed to the address of every stockholder of the Index Association:—

TREASURER'S NOTICE.

OFFICE OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
BOSTON, July 15, 1875.

Dear Sir,—At the last monthly meeting of the Directors of this Association, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the Treasurer be instructed to issue, as soon as may be convenient, a circular to all the stockholders of the Index Association, notifying them that a complete list of said stockholders, with the total amount of the assessments hitherto voted by the Board, the total amount of the payments thereon, and the balance (if any) now due in each case, set opposite their respective names, will be published next October in THE INDEX; and also requesting all of them who may still be indebted to the Association for unpaid assessments to remit the amount of such indebtedness before the first of September next, that they may be credited in said list with payment in full to date,—or to render such reasons for not so doing as shall seem to the Directors sufficient for omitting their names from the published list."

In obedience to the above order of the Board of Directors, I have mailed this circular to your address, and respectfully invite your attention to its contents. The enclosed notice will inform you of the amount of the stock assessments (if any) which stand charged to your name on the books of the Association; and it is hoped that you will be so kind as to remit accordingly. If all the stockholders shall do so, the continued publication of THE INDEX will be assured beyond a doubt; and it is greatly to be desired that those who have subscribed for this purpose to the stock shall all appear on the forthcoming list as having honorably discharged the obligation thus voluntarily and generously assumed.

Yours truly,

R. H. RANNEY,

Treasurer of the Index Association.

On September 22, the following resolution was passed by the Board of Directors:—

"Resolved, That the list as submitted be printed once at length in THE INDEX, with the appended note that so much of the list as relates to unpaid assessments will be hereafter published once each month in THE INDEX until the assessments are paid; and that the list be hereafter published in accordance with that note, except as to names for which a satisfactory reason for non-payment has been offered to the Board."

The list here published in accordance with the latter part of the September vote of the Directors is brought down to the date of October 5, 1875:—

Residence.	Name.	Assessments Voted.	Assessments Paid.	Assessments Unpaid.
Sacramento, Cal.	Henry Miller	200	100	100
Washington, D.C.	M. H. Doolittle	40	30	10
Chicago, Ill.	W. H. Overton	400	200	200
"	Jos. Singer	40	20	20
"	W. B. Billings	200	200
"	A. Van Der Nailler	40	30	10
"	R. M. Whipple	60	20	40
"	Mrs. Sarah F. Mills	30	10	20
"	G. N. Jennings	40	30	10
"	C. S. Burt	40	40
"	C. R. Woodward	40	10	30
"	R. S. Brigham	40	40
"	Chas. A. Scofield	40	10	30
"	D. R. Sparks	40	30	10
"	Wesley Best	30	10	20
"	A. L. Munroe	30	10	20
"	J. R. Weist	30	30
"	G. C. Glatte	120	90	30
"	G. M. Daussman	40	40
"	F. W. Cook	40	30	10
"	Mrs. J. J. Pillsbury	40	20	20
"	J. O. Martin	40	20	20
"	Ferd. Christmann	40	20	20
"	Henry Schull	40	20	20
"	Gust. Zschech	40	20	20
"	Herman Lieber	40	10	30
"	Jas. Snelser	40	40
"	John H. Popp	40	40
"	Chas. Live	40	20	20
"	E. S. Barrows	40	20	20
"	Wm. H. Ellery	40	40
"	S. S. Wemott	40	20	20
"	D. B. Henderson	40	10	30
"	Henry A. Dean	120	100	20
"	Chas. M. Wetherbee	40	20	20
"	Sam'l T. Durkee	40	10	30
"	J. M. Hadley	40	30	10
"	Frank Prather	40	10	30
"	Lewis Kurtz	40	10	30
"	J. T. Brady	40	30	10
"	M. S. Beach	40	40
"	C. S. Bacon	40	30	10
"	C. Robins	40	30	10
"	John McDuffie	40	30	10
"	A. Folso (Trustee)	200	100	100
"	John F. Mills	40	20	20
"	Miss Rebecca Bowker	40	10	30
"	M. Luce	80	40	40
"	Henry N. Stone	80	60	20
"	S. H. Pearce	40	20	20
"	F. H. Henshaw	40	20	20
"	E. B. Loring	40	20	20
"	Isaac Ames	120	60	60
"	Frederic Coffin	40	10	30
"	Chas. H. Coffin	40	20	20
"	E. G. Burnet	80	20	60
"	C. W. Eastbrook	40	30	10
"	Clark Jilson	40	10	30
"	G. H. Briggs	80	20	60
"	Edward A. Brown	80	30	50
"	John A. Hawes	80	60	20
"	Jas. Purinton	30	10	20

Residence.	Name.	Assessments Voted.	Assessments Paid.	Assessments Unpaid.
Lexington, Mass.	W. J. Currier.....	30	30
	Geo. W. Robinson.....	30	10	20
	W. H. Gilmore.....	30	10	20
Chicopee, Mass.	James Damon.....	20	10	10
Ipswich, Mass.	E. B. Ward.....	800	400	400
Detroit, Mich.	M. H. Isbell.....	40	20	20
"	John J. Bagley.....	1200		1200
"	B. F. Stamm.....	40	10	30
"	Fred. Stearns.....	40	10	30
"	Geo. Jerome.....	40	10	30
"	D. J. Davison.....	40	10	30
Battle Creek, Mich.	Wm. Newman.....	40	20	20
"	John Harper.....	40	10	30
"	C. M. Stiles.....	40	10	30
"	".....	40	10	30
Ionia, Mich.	".....	40	10	30
Union City, Mich.	J. D. Zimmerman.....	40	30	10
"	Phebe A. Zimmerman.....	40	30	10
"	Geo. Hubbard.....	40	10	30
"	S. H. Nye.....	40
"	Chas. H. Spring.....	40
"	D. D. W. Rodgers.....	40
Castine, Me.	".....	40	20	20
Ft. Fairfield, Me.	R. L. Baker.....	40	20	20
Minneapolis, Minn.	S. C. Gale.....	400	100	300
"	R. E. Grimshaw.....	40	20	20
"	Marshall Bros.....	40	20	20
Long Lake, Minn.	S. Lydard.....	40	30	10
Lake City, Minn.	D. K. Boutelle.....	40	20	20
Palmyra, Mo.	S. C. Eastman.....	40	30	10
St. Louis, Mo.	Henry Stagz.....	40	20	20
"	J. C. Rooney.....	80	20	60
"	".....	40	20	20
"	E. G. Windeger.....	40	40
St. Joseph, Mo.	Jacob Sprinkel.....	40	30	10
"	P. V. Wise.....	40	40
"	C. Murat Masterson.....	40	40
New York, N.Y.	Asa K. Butts.....	1280	340	940
"	E. F. Dinmore.....	40	20	20
"	M. L. Holbrook.....	40	20	20
"	S. Sexton.....	40	20	20
"	Henry H. Richardson.....	80	20	60
"	Mrs. M. R. Van Rensselaer.....	40	20	20
"	".....	40	30	10
"	W. E. Booraem.....	40	30	10
"	J. Lienau.....	70	50	20
"	J. P. Dinmore.....	80	40	40
"	B. W. Pierce.....	400	100	300
"	".....	200	100	100
"	D. Throne.....	40	30	10
"	Lewis G. James.....	40	40
"	J. J. Nichols.....	120	30	90
"	J. W. Bigelow.....	80	20	60
"	E. Namberg.....	40	20	20
"	".....	300		300
"	".....	30		30
"	John Cowan.....	30	20	10
"	John Mills.....	30	30
"	W. C. Russell.....	80	60	20
Ithaca, N.Y.	".....	40	30	10
Peekskill, N.Y.	J. Whitaker.....	40	30	10
Kerkonkson, N.Y.	J. Goldmark.....	30	20	10
Brooklyn, N.Y.	".....	60	40	20
"	".....	150	100	50
Hornellsville, N.Y.	D. F. Sweetland.....	40	10	30
Binghampton, N.Y.	Titus L. Brown.....	40	40
Buffalo, N.Y.	H. G. White.....	40	20	20
Syracuse, N.Y.	J. N. Stearns.....	40	10	30
"	Gno. M. Price.....	40	20	20
"	J. Henry Clarke.....	40	20	20
"	".....	50	7	43
"	E. B. Waldo.....	40	20	20
"	M. Schlessinger.....	40	20	20
"	L. T. Osborne.....	40	20	20
"	".....	40	30	10
"	W. J. Lewis.....	40	10	30
"	Harvey Hakes.....	40	20	20
"	Louis Bristol.....	40	20	20
"	Mrs. M. A. Wright.....	40	10	30
"	".....	30	10	20
"	".....	40	20	20
Rutherford Park, N.J.	Jabez Elverson.....	30	30
Newark, N.J.	S. H. Dame.....	40	40
Dover, N.H.	J. H. York.....	40	30	10
"	Jos. Hayes.....	40	30	10
"	G. P. Folsom.....	40	40
"	".....	80	5	75
Omaha, Neb.	David R. Locke.....	800	300	500
Toledo, O.	".....	400	50	350
"	".....	400	100	300
"	".....	400	200	200
"	E. P. Bassett.....	120	60	60
"	Jas. M. Ritchie.....	120	30	90
"	Victor Keen.....	120	60	60
"	Alanson Wood.....	200	30	170
"	Wm. Kraus.....	120	50	70
"	J. G. Holzwarth.....	40	10	30
"	".....	40	40
"	Wm. Clarke.....	120	60	60
"	C. L. Smith.....	40	10	30
"	Frank J. Scott.....	400	300	100
"	Henry Kiest.....	80	60	20
"	Otto Klein.....	40	20	20
"	H. G. Neubert.....	80	40	40
"	".....	40	20	20
"	H. Heyerman.....	40	10	30
"	L. Von Blessingh.....	200	100	100
"	".....	600	300	300
"	".....	400	50	350
"	".....	200	390	1610
Cincinnati, O.	Max Pracht.....	40	20	20
"	D. K. Innes.....	20	10	10
"	Peter H. Clark.....	40	20	20
"	J. T. Sutton.....	40	20	20
"	Chas. Churchill.....	40	40
"	Mrs. Mary Pracht.....	40	20	20
"	Wm. Bismark Pracht.....	40	20	20
"	J. J. Stevens.....	40	20	20
"	Geo. T. Alpress.....	40	20	20
Defiance, O.	Wm. Blackmore.....	40	10	30
Painesville, O.	A. D. Wilt.....	40	20	20
Dayton, O.	W. F. Heikes.....	80	60	20
"	L. S. Bryant.....	40	40
"	".....	40	30	10
"	Chas. Bonnell.....	40	30	10
Salem, O.	C. W. Farciot.....	40	20	20
Kelley's Island, O.	J. A. Simon.....	40	20	20
Kryan, O.	S. F. Woodward.....	80	60	20
Osborn, O.	H. E. Parsons.....	20	10	10
Ashtabula, O.	W. F. Ewing.....	40	40
"	".....	40	30	10
Oberlin, O.	W. C. Head.....	30	30
Philadelphia, Pa.	A. Loos.....	30	10	20
Pittsburg, Pa.	Walter F. Austin.....	40	30	10
"	".....	40	30	10
Allegheny City, Pa.	Val. Ludwig.....	40	30	10
"	Mrs. Nancy Gebhart.....	40	40
"	O. A. Nicholson.....	40	40
Newport, R.I.	Jas. B. Brayton.....	40	10	30
"	".....	40	40
Providence, R.I.	J. D. Frost.....	40	30	10
"	Geo. L. Clark.....	20	40	20
"	".....	40	40
"	A. Reymann.....	40	10	30
Wheeling, Va.	R. B. Smith.....	40	40
Madison, Wis.	W. H. Dyke.....	40	15	25
Prairie du Chien, Wis.	A. Mc D. Young.....	40	20	20
Milwaukee, Wis.	C. T. Hawley.....	40	20	20
"	Wm. Becker.....	40	20	20
"	E. C. Spencer.....	80	40	40
"	C. M. Lawler.....	40	10	30
"	Mrs. G. D. Norris.....	200	50	150
"	D. G. Chittenden.....	40	10	30
"	C. D. Kendrick.....	40	10	30
"	Thos. Hoover.....	40	40
"	Mrs. Mary C. Davis.....	80	40	40
"	E. R. Ireland.....	40	40
Eau Clair, Wis.	H. E. Mann.....	40	10	30
Fond du Lac, Wis.	B. B. Smith.....	40	40
Not known.	W. L. Ratho.....	40	10	30
"	Jas. R. Stone.....	40	20	20
"	James Fischer.....	80	50	30
"	J. L. Taylor.....	40	40
"	M. M. Pratt.....	40	5	35
"	M. E. Dayton.....	40	40
"	A. E. Whitmore.....	30	10	20

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "	" "	" "
" 26 " 51 "	6 "	" "	" "
" 52 "	5 "	" "	" "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—"as Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address,

THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

F. W. NEWMAN, England.

CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School, A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses, Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	1.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasie Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Moutions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skeltons for Stories.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Day. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by W. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. V.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.00
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Elkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrow and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy. The Scenarios of Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHellen (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomers.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip.....	1.50
Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.25
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies: A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS, IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00: per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48.00: " " 16.00.
Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.
Five " 55.00: " " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.
Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-wood Reade$3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham..... 1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd..... .75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.
By Frederika MacDonald..... 1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By
Joseph E. Peck..... .75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LECTURES

CHAS. D. B. MILLS

Will answer calls during the coming winter for

Public or for Conversational Lectures,
On the following subjects:—

1. THE EARLY AGES OF MANKIND, so far as yet known: Prehistoric and Prisco-historic.
2. ANCIENT RELIGIONS: Egyptian, Chinese, Indian, and the relations of these and other Faiths to Christianity.
3. SOCIAL REGENERATION: or, The Idea of Pythagoras.

Any who may wish to secure these or any portion of them will please address MR. MILLS without delay, at SYRACUSE, N. Y. Oct. 23, 1875.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Gems of English Song.

75 Songs, each a true Gem, and undeniably Popular.

Among the attractive titles are:

Nazareth.
King on, Sweet Angelus.
Esmeralda.
Little Maid of Arcadec.
Weary.
By the Blue Sea.
Rose Marie.

THE GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG is a book of 232 pages, all of full sheet-music size.

Among the authors are:

LADY SCOTT, CAMPANA, LINDSAY, GOUNOD, HATTON, HOWE, TOPLIFF, BAENBY, CLARIBEL, ART.

THE GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG will be sent, post-paid, to any address, for the Retail Price, which is, in Boards, $2.50, in Cloth, $3, Gilt, $4.

Do not forget our other Recent Books:
SONG MONARCH, 75c., for Singing Schools.
SHINING RIVER, 35c., for Sabbath Schools.
HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR, $1.00, for High Schools, etc.
LIVING WATERS, 30c., for Praise Meetings.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 3 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WALTHAM, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, OWNER, COLUMBIA, S.C.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address

THE INDEX,

Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1875.

WHOLE No. 307.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 23, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

ACCORDING TO Comptroller Green's statement, the debt of New York city on October 1 amounted to $131,113,906.74—the result chiefly of the alliance between Catholicism and Democracy.

NOTICING the absence of all open opposition to the Moody and Sankey revival in Brooklyn, and also the "small number of converts," the Sun inquires: "Why this barrenness in the Brooklyn vineyard?"

THE NEW Constitution of Alabama, to be voted upon November 16, explicitly exempts church, charitable, and school property from taxation. This is more than a "straw." Unless our political framework is made more secular, it will gradually be made more ecclesiastical. The moral is too obvious to be pointed out.

MR. BRADLAUGH is lecturing in America this season with unabated success. He has all the engagements he can fill, despite an undercurrent of opposition from Orthodox opponents who are shrewd enough not to put themselves on record. His power and eloquence as an orator are conceded even by those who most dread his influence as a freethinker.

ALAS for the inconsistency of human nature! In September President Grant earnestly counsels the people of the United States to "keep the Church and the State forever separate." In October he himself mixes the two together by solemnly recommending the people, in an official proclamation countersigned by the Secretary of State, to go to church on Thanksgiving Day.

IT HAVING been stated in a New York daily that Rev. Mr. Chadwick was "signalled" by Mr. Moody to "give the benediction" at one of his revival meetings, Mr. Chadwick denies the charge with refreshing frankness, saying that he was not present, and that "this whole revival movement, with all its works and ways, is utterly distasteful and abhorrent to my feelings, as I believe it calculated to do very little good and almost infinite harm."

DEPRECATING the appointment of Mr. Chandler as Secretary of the Interior, Harper's Weekly of November 8 boldly declares that "a national Republican majority can not be marshalled under the leadership of the remains of the late Senatorial group under which the party has been shaken and shattered"; that "the fact must be plainly stated that the new Secretary of the Interior is not a representative of the political character or intelligence or practices which can secure a Republican President in 1876"; and that, unless the Republican party takes up civil reform in good earnest, "the country will take the risk of a Democratic Administration." If this is "partisanship," we do not object to it.

MRS. EMMA C. MOULTON has been expelled without a hearing from Plymouth Church, under circumstances which make the act appear a grave mistake, to say no more. She protested against it in these dignified terms:—

"My absence is an enforced one, and is caused by the crime of adultery committed by Henry Ward Beecher, pastor of this Church, with one of his parishioners, which I know to be a fact through Mr. Beecher's confession to me, and through the confessions of Mrs. Tilton's, and through conclusive evidence of the crime from other sources. I appear before this church in loyal obedience to the summons which I have received, and I hereby declare my disposition and desire to discharge all the duties devolving on me as a member that are consistent with my knowledge of the adultery of the pastor and his false swearing with regard to it.

"Very respectfully, EMMA C. MOULTON.
"BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1875."

THE GREAT unfinished Roman Catholic Cathedral in Fifth Avenue, New York, was sold on the last day of September for unpaid taxes amounting to $780. These were assessments for street improvements. The Tammany Ring used to remit these taxes in return for political support, but this ceased under the Reform régime, and Cardinal McCloskey pleaded lowness of funds to avoid payment. In the Cardinal's absence, however, payment was pressed, and the property was at last sold for the unpaid taxes of the last seven years. The buyer is a Catholic, however, and will undoubtedly hand it over to the Church again. But conclusive proof of the falsehood of the excuse given for not paying these taxes is the telegraphic announcement on October 11 that Cardinal McCloskey "has ordered at Rome a splendid marble altar for the Roman Catholic Cathedral of New York, costing $40,000!"

THERE WAS a significant scene in one of the public schools of Newtown, Connecticut, not long ago. Father McCartin entered the school and ordered the Catholic children not to listen to the Bible-reading. Teacher Day violently ejected him from the room, tearing his clothes, for which the teacher is to be prosecuted. The school committee uphold him in his course, and have voted that "there is no impropriety for a teacher to open the morning session by reading a portion of the Bible without making comments, and maintaining order while the same is being read; and any interference therein will be regarded as an intrusion." In other words, it is just to make the public schools Protestant in character, and to tax the whole people to sustain Protestantism in them. The priest did wrong to interfere as he did; but what just person will say he had no grievance? The school system is doomed, if it cannot be purified from this iniquitous violation of the rights of conscience.

"H. H.," WRITING in the New York Independent, lamented the death of the "dear old adjectives" of affection, slain by the Brooklyn "pestilence"—"so bedraggled have sentiment and its language become together." She said: "The hurt is irreparable. We shall go hungry for years for want of an epithet or two which a decent and well-balanced affection can venture to apply to its object. Yea must be bare yea, and nay, nay, for us, forever; 'whatsoever is more than these' has come to such terrible evil! There is one more of Love's sacred possessions which has been slain by this pestilence. It is the most terrible death of all. We cannot speak of it. More sacred than any words, more significant than any phrases, if they had left it to us, we might have done without the words! But now, alas! we cannot even kiss each other without remembering the part that the kiss was forced to play in the pestilence. To think that it should have survived Judas Iscariot, to be slain now!" No! All the vileness of all the ages has not been vile enough to degrade the tender words and innocent caresses of a pure human love. They cannot be spoiled while love survives. Let us be too strong in our integrity to concede such power to evil. Mankind cannot afford to have the affectionate intercourse of the pure-hearted tainted by the impurities of the foul. The guileless will be guileless still; and the beautiful old song will be sung forever to the same exquisite, immortal music.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSOBLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Day, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Life and Death.

AN ESSAY READ TO A SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY IN LONDON, DEC. 4, 1873.

BY JOHN BADCOCK.

What is life? This is a very old question, and one that seems to have puzzled mankind in all ages.

Man, from his superior abilities, has regarded his life as something essentially different, both in its origin and termination, from that of all other beings on this globe, and hence, in the absence of positive knowledge, has invented a number of theories to account for the same.

In Christendom we are all familiar with the old Jewish story of Adam, the first man, having been formed in earth and then breathed into by God; and of Eve, the first woman, being made out of one of Adam's ribs, and how they became mortal by eating of a certain fruit which had been forbidden them. "Thus by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin."

Other nations besides the Jews have traced back their ancestors to a similar fabulous origin, and they have also their sacred books believed in by millions.

Now I will not insult the intelligence of a scientific society, by discussing the truth or otherwise of stories such as these, for I cannot imagine any scientific person worthy of the name who can seriously believe them.

Dr. Carpenter* thus expresses the position and views of scientists and others in relation to this question. He says: "All unprejudiced Biblical critics have now come to accept these narratives, not as truthful historical statements, nor, on the other hand, as forgeries, but merely as expressions of the early belief of the people whose sacred literature they constituted." And further: "We must agree that the more they are investigated by scientific minds, the more we come to feel that they cannot be received as more than a record of the early ideas of this very ancient people." Again: "The revelations of science as to the history of the earth and its successive inhabitants can no longer be screwed and twisted into conformity with a set of writings which, however ancient, can only be taken as representing the beliefs of the ancient people whose sacred literature they constituted."

What then does science teach us in reference to life and death?

The essential nature of life we cannot define. We find, however, that when certain forms of matter are placed under certain conditions relatively to other forms, that life is the result; but whether this is occasioned by any chemical combination of atoms thus placed in special relation to each other, or whether there is made a deposit of some of those infinitesimal germs which pervade the atmosphere, seems as yet impossible to decide. The experiments of some seem to prove that a spontaneous generation of life is possible under given conditions. Here, however, we are treading on the border-land of discoveries yet to be made. Let us wait. Enough, however, has been discovered whereby we know that innumerable forms of life have for countless ages existed on the earth; that what we call the "crust" of the earth is mostly composed of the remains of animals and plants; that animals and plants exist of such minuteness as not to be recognized by our ordinary senses of sight and feeling, while what we call "germs of life" are still, if possible, more minute; that disease itself is in many cases only another form of life, its minute, floating germs ever present and waiting only for favorable conditions for development into life.

Life, consequently, may be defined as latent force in all matter, and co-existent with the same and inseparable from it. Life is thus the normal condition; and what we call death would thus seem to be only a temporary or transitory state, not even involving a cessation of life; for as matter is never absolutely at rest, there would of necessity be a constant change from life to life through the apparently quiescent state which we call "death."

But what we are concerned mostly with, is not life and death in general, but as regards ourselves in particular, i.e., human life and death. Is there any difference between man and the brutes, or is he under the same general laws as all other animals? I am not aware that anything is known which would warrant us in excepting man from the operation of any natural law; at the same time it must be admitted, that we may not as yet know all of law or laws which relate to this special question; and consequently there is this uncertain ground for presuming that the shadowy forms which our fancy paints in this dim twilight may possibly have a certain tangible reality in that region "whence no traveller returns."

We know that, under the operation of the laws of growth and decay, we have already passed through several phases of life. Death has never been absent. He has carried away body after body, and yet our conscious existence remains. We can remember the events of early youth, though not a particle remains to us of the bodies we then possessed. And this consciousness, combined with the instinctive longing for immortality and the horror of annihilation, begets in us a hope which is capable of inspiring us with the highest aims and the loftiest efforts. Man under the influence of this faith becomes a hero, and thus renders himself fit for, and worthy of, a continuation of his individual existence.

The most recent discoveries of science, though they scatter to the winds every vestige of superstition, furnish also, to my mind, at least, the strongest argument yet known for "the hope that is in us" of "immortality and eternal life." I allude especially to the discoveries of Darwin and Spencer as expressed in the doctrine of natural selection or the "survival of the fittest."* For if Nature in grosser operations, so to speak, preserves and continues on through countless ages, the best and highest forms of life, while it allows others to become extinct, i.e., if she thus acts with merely physical organisms, is it not probable that a similar law exists in the higher region of mind, by virtue of which those great moral intelligences whose characters are the adornment of our race shall be preserved in their conscious individuality, and rising hence into other spheres inherit that immortality which has been the grand inspiration of their noble lives?

You will observe that this immortality differs from the popular notion of the doctrine, in that it is not a necessity, or rather the inevitable lot, of every human being; and in this difference lies its grandeur and beauty. For a necessary immortality preserving every individual of our race who has ever lived or ever shall live is to me the most repulsive idea that can well be conceived, and is out of all harmony and analogy with natural law, as is, alas, the extermination of grand and noble characters which it has taken countless generations to produce.

Nature preserves that only which is worth preserving; and destroys, or uses up as material for fresh effort, those forms of life which so far have proved worthless or unsuitable.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE FUNCTION OF GOVERNMENT.

What is the function of government? This is really the most important and difficult question of the day. Herbert Spencer is inclined to curtail the province of government, and so make it but little more than the exertion of a police force. Huxley, on the other hand, argues for its enlargement. Paine seems to think that government is an evil, while Locke affirms that it is a good, and that it is to be benevolent, not simply in a negative, but in a positive way. It seems to me that government, like all other forces, is an evolution. It has sprung out of the needs of humanity, and is the result of centuries of growth, and is not to be lightly thrown away. It has been achieved through toil and suffering. Government, also, if the result of evolution, grows more complex with the advance of the race, and so will attain greater power and prominence. It seems to me, then, that its function will become larger; that, being in itself a good and not a bad thing, and one of the most precious inheritances of the world, it will in the time to come and on this new continent be a vaster and more beneficent energy than ever. While individuality is to be maintained, and indeed made more profound and persistent, it must still be kept in subjection to the progress of universal humanity. We must advance by association, by consolidation. Solidarity is the law of our growth. The whole race must go on together. Hence the governing capacity of the people must be made larger; the collective authority of the nation must be increased.

I will not point out all the directions in which this

*Since this was written I find the following remarks in an anonymous work entitled Supernatural Religion, in two vols. Longman, Green & Co., London, 1874. In Vol. I., page 54, the author says: "In the spiritual as well as the physical sense, only the fittest eventually can survive in the struggle for existence."

increased function of the government must find play. I will only revert to that point touched upon in my last article, "The Catholic Conspiracy." I still maintain that a democratic form of government has a right to make democracy the method in every organization throughout the land. This must be done eventually in order to save ourselves from the encroachments of the Papal Church. The government must claim the right to forbid any Church from being in itself a despotism. It must insist that the authority of the organization be located in the whole body. How else can we defend ourselves from Romanism? The mere separation of Church and State is not sufficient. The Church only submits to that for the time being. It does not acquiesce in the separation, but means, whenever the chance presents itself, to exert the power over the State that it once did. In order to do this effectually at the favorable moment, it makes its own organization a compact despotism, locating all authority in the hands of a few. It commits no "overt act," being too shrewd, but gathers within itself, year by year, enormous power and influence. When that becomes of sufficient magnitude, then it strikes the decisive blow, and the State is at its mercy. Have we no defence, I ask, against this insidious and ever-advancing enemy? The "Demands of Liberalism" are not enough. They must be vastly more aggressive.

Not only must the Church and State be separate, but the State must insist that the Church be a democratic institution. Religion is not too sacred a thing to be allowed to do what we permit no nationality to do—set up a monarchical form of government upon the soil of this new world. The Monroe doctrine is applicable to the Roman Church in our midst as well as to Mexico. No matter if the people of Mexico want a monarchy, we say they shall not establish one. Can we not say the same to Rome?

Is this "persecution"? I care not whether it is or not, it must be done.

Has not Mr. Abbot himself declared that a "conflict of consciences" is inevitable? I do not see how we can help it. Mr. Morse has shown that any form of government is a violation of conscience to a certain extent. So, then, if we are to respect every man's conscience, we must simply give up the exercise of all collective authority whatsoever. Is there not a direct conflict of conscience on the school question? Are not the Catholics and many of the Protestants conscientiously opposed to a "godless" or secular school? Yet we compel them to support such a school. If, then, we can compel a man to support by the payment of taxes a "godless" school that his conscience loathes, can we not by the same plea of State necessity insist that his Church shall be a democracy? The persecution in the one case is just as great as in the other. If we cannot insist upon democracy in the Church for conscience' sake, how can we insist upon a "godless" school to which the conscience is just as bitterly opposed?

The plea of "persecution," it seems to me, will not avail. The individual conscience is not to be respected, when its dictates are opposed to universal progress. The good of the whole transcends the most sacred conviction of the individual, for the individual is not supreme, but humanity. Harmony cannot come by respecting each and every conscience, but by the triumph of the best conscience. We must accept the issue. There is not simply a conflict of ideas, but a conflict of consciences. What is an idea good for, if there is no conscience in it? My conscience is in my liberalism, and they who oppose my liberalism oppose my conscience. Shall they cease opposing because I am conscientious in the matter? Of course not. Conscience must not then be a bar in the way of doing what we think best for all. We must either, as Mr. Morse says, do nothing, or, if we do, do all that is necessary, whether conscience suffers or not. If we do, let us not do half. If we must violate conscience to keep up our common schools, let us also violate conscience to make democracy the perfect law of the land. Why "persecute" in one case, and not in another? Is not democracy as necessary as education?

S. P. PUTNAM.

[We are glad that somebody, at least, has discovered that the "Demands of Liberalism" are not "aggressive." Indeed they are not: they are simply defensive of liberty and justice. But if the State is to "insist that the Church be a democratic institution," it must persuade Jesus to declare that he is no longer the Christ, and induce his followers to organize all over again on this inverted gospel. It is needless to say that this is impossible. The State cannot make the Church "democratic," for it is by its very nature despotic. In proportion as it makes itself democratic, it unchurches itself, and commits suicide. The upshot is that the State cannot reform the Church, and should only make open war upon it when it openly attacks the government. The "conflict of consciences" may yet lead to political (we trust not military) strife over the State's right to support schools by taxation; the State must meet the consequences of enforcing this right, which is only the right of self-preservation.—Ed.]

A NEWSPAPER can drop the same thought into a thousand minds at the same moment. A newspaper is an adviser, who does not require to be sought, but comes to you without distracting your private affairs. Newspapers, therefore, become more necessary in proportion as men become more equal individuals, and more to be feared by tyrants.—De Tocqueville.

*"Ancient and Modern Egypt." A Lecture delivered by Dr. W. B. Carpenter, at Manchester, Feb. 19, 1873.

SENATOR KERNAN'S SPEECH.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

To the admirable speech of President Grant on our public school system, and the brave words of Prof. Swing, quoted in your current issue, I would add the following plea for secular education, from the speech of Senator Kernan, of this State, a Democrat and a Catholic, as respected and influential as any man of that faith in this State or country. No one who knows him doubts his sincerity or good faith.

NEW YORK, Oct. 29, 1875.

LEWIS G. JANES.

"While we are employed in trying to choke off from the treasury the plunderers of your money, why, opponents, or a portion of their press and some of their speakers, say, 'Oh, don't mind about these thieves that are robbing the people; but here there is danger to the public common schools,—let us look after them.' I want to say a word about that. This attempt is either, in my judgment, an attempt to divert the attention of the people from this question of reform, or it is an effort to stir up sectarian hate among our people. Now, there is no other question involved in this election. There can be none touching your common schools. The Constitution of 1846 provides that the Common-School Fund shall be preserved inviolate, and that the income therefrom shall be applied to no other school. Your Supreme Court and your Court of Appeals more than fifteen years ago decided that the common schools (the common schools as used in that provision meant the ordinary public schools) would be supported by the State at its own expense, for the benefit of the children of the State; and a provision of the Constitution adopted last year goes further, and was only applied to the Common-School Fund and its income. But the people of this State adopted provisions amending the Constitution last year which provided that neither the money nor the property of the State, nor of any city, county, town, or village, shall be given to any private institution; thus money shall not be given to any private schools, whether sectarian or non-sectarian, and that they shall not have a share in any of the school fund in any other money that could be raised for that purpose by taxation. Therefore there is nothing—no sort of danger to your public schools. The common schools of this State are imbedded in your Constitution beyond the power of any legislature to interfere with or change them. (Applause.) And, my fellow-citizens, they must be maintained as common schools, in which all the children of the State may obtain a good secular education, and as common schools in which the religious prejudices or feelings of no one—child or parent—shall be wounded. (Applause.) Supported by the funds of the State, and the State composed of people of different views, they are to be maintained for the purpose of secular education alone; and while I recognize the duty and the importance of every parent and guardian giving religious teaching to his child, yet he cannot have that religious teaching at the expense of the State; it must be done in the family, in the church, in the Sunday-school, in the private school, because there are the proper places where we can have views peculiar to ourselves and our children taught. (Applause.) My fellow-citizens, I have another word on this subject. If, on the contrary, this attempt to bring the common schools into the canvass is for the purpose of stirring up sectarian discord among our people, then every patriotic man, every real Christian man should condemn it. Why, my fellow-citizens, sectarian discussions and religious bigotry—these have been a curse to every people among whom they have been allowed to take root. (Applause.) They are at war with the glorious Constitution of our common State. This attempt to have man persecute man in reference to his creed or his religion, I repeat, is in violation of, and at war with, the letter and spirit of the Constitution of this glorious free State of New York. (Applause.) I desire to read to you the language of your own Constitution as it is written down for our government and guidance: 'The free exercise and enjoyment of religious professions and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind.' (Applause.)

"And yet, unless these gentlemen on the other side fear—as I cannot believe they do—there is real danger to your common schools (there can be no danger to them under the Constitution), then they are seeking to stir up this hatred of man against man. This hatred, this religious bigotry, this religious bitterness towards our neighbor on account of his creed, on account of his doing that which he should do, following his own convictions, is at war with the great principles of American constitutional liberty, and it is at war with the doctrine of Christian charity, the foundation almost of Christian religion as it is taught by every denomination to those who believe in Christ. (Applause.) No, my fellow-citizens, let us early, not in passion, not in excitement, but let us early, when we see any attempt made to get up bitteresses among our people on account of creed, let us calmly, firmly, and temperately do all that we can to prevent it. Why, it is the right in every land where they have real liberty, it is the right and it is the duty of every man, to worship his Creator according to the dictates of his own conscience and judgment, and not according to what may be the views of some other man. (Applause.) Mark my words. Look at all history for its verification. The man that will fail to do conscientiously and openly and in the proper spirit in his worship that which he honestly believes is his duty to his God will never be truthful to his fellow-man. (Applause.) Let us always remember that no man is accountable to me for the creed which he believes, or which he practices. I am accountable to no other man for mine. Each of us will be accountable only to our Maker, to be judged by him, not according to the errors and judgment of men, but according to our sincerity, our unanimity and purity in trying to worship our Maker according to the dictates of our own consciences. (Cheers.) I rejoice to see this unanimity of sentiment in favor of this great principle of mankind, and one which is imbedded in our constitution; and, thank God, I have lived more than fifty years up and down in my daily walks among men of all creeds, and with pride I say it, there never was so liberal, so Christian a people in spirit and in charity as this American people of ours. (Applause.) There may be—I know there are—honest men who have very strong prejudices; but, my friends, you will never get rid of prejudice by prejudice; you will never get rid of bigotry by reviling each other. Oh, no; let us cultivate that which would make a heaven upon earth compared with the bitterness of sectarianism as it exists in other countries than our own. Let us cultivate charity and good will; let us remember we are not accountable to others or they to us. Let us remember that it is the right and duty of another to enjoy and practise that which he believes to be true; let us cultivate this charity and this good will, and we will blot out all the bitterness and bigotry that may stir up in us ill-feeling, and in so doing, believe me, we will best discharge our duty to our neighbors and to our glorious free government, and we will also best discharge our duty to that God whom we profess to worship, and who will judge us according as we judge in charity and good will towards our fellow-men. (Cheers.)—Speech of Senator Kernan, of New York, in New York City, Oct. 28, 1875.

[Mr. Kernan's excellent plea for secular schools is so good that he stands in marked opposition to the Catholic clergy and Catholic press. He is not a representative Catholic. It is simply preposterous to treat the school question as a false issue foisted on the people as a mere party trick. Read candidly the subjoined authentic record, with facts and figures, of what Catholicism and Democracy have actually done by conspiring together against the public treasury. Mr. Kernan is too much ashamed of what his Church and his party have done even to mention it; but we supply his omissions by quoting a full account of it from the New York Times.—Ed.]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.

HOW THE PEOPLE OF NEW YORK SUPPORT THEM.

TAMMANY HALL GIVING MILLIONS TO CATHOLIC INSTITUTIONS—A FEW HUNDREDS TO PROTESTANTS AS A BLIND—OFFICIAL FIGURES FOR NON-SECTARIAN TAX-PAYERS.

Senator Kernan tells us that the public schools are in no danger from the Democratic party or their Romanist allies; that the Constitution prohibits the diversion of the school fund from its legitimate use; that the Supreme Court has affirmed that there is no power in administrative or legislative officers to make sectarian use of the people's money; and, in fine, that all talk about danger to the schools, or sectarian favoritism, is nonsense.

The Senator is right in saying that the Constitution prohibits sectarian appropriations. He should have added that such a provision only went into effect last January, and that at the election in November last he and his party did their utmost to defeat the clause to which he now points as our safeguard. It is not there by consent of the Democratic party, but in spite of them.

What is that party's record in this matter before the amendment put a stop to sectarian gifts? Let us take the jubilee years of Tammany, when Hoffman was Governor, and Tweed was "Boss," and Connolly kept the cash-box, and Barnard and McCunn were on the bench, and Samuel Tilden was Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, dispensing the stolen money of the Ring. In 1869, 1870, and part of 1871, the following sectarian appropriations were paid out of the money raised by tax on the property of New York City:—

ROMAN CATHOLIC INSTITUTIONS.

	Amount.
Convent Sacred Heart.....	$10,000
School Academy Sacred Heart.....	6,170
House Good Shepherd.....	70,292
House Mercy, Bloomingdale.....	5,000
Sisters Mary.....	437
Sisters St. Dominic.....	15,000
Sisters St. Dominic Asylum.....	11,000
Church Dominican Fathers.....	5,550
Dominican Church, Lexington Avenue.....	7,000
School St. Nicholas, Order St. Dominic.....	11,800
St. Nicholas Church.....	365
St. Patrick's Orphan Asylum.....	8,152
St. Patrick's Cathedral.....	17,858
St. Patrick's Cathedral School.....	15,000
St. Patrick's Orphan Asylum, Mott Street.....	5,000
St. Bridget's School.....	30,512
St. Bridget's Church.....	5,000
Sister Helena.....	4,318
Sisters of St. Joseph.....	5,000
St. Joseph's Church.....	5,271
St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum.....	15,000
St. Joseph's Parish School.....	9,768
St. Ann's Parochial School.....	5,984
St. Joseph's Parochial Male School.....	7,090
St. Teresa's School.....	17,415
St. Teresa's Church.....	1,280
St. Teresa's Chapel School.....	5,000
School attached to St. Teresa's Church.....	5,000
St. Ann's Parochial School.....	6,920
St. Ann's Church, Eighth Street.....	2,172
St. Peter's Free School.....	14,096
St. Peter's Church German School.....	1,500
German-American Free School.....	18,459
St. Lawrence Church.....	12,500
St. Lawrence Parish School.....	12,445
St. Mary's School, Grand Street.....	46,368
St. Mary's Church, Grand Street.....	400
St. Mary's Church, Sister's Charity.....	140
School Most Holy Redeemer.....	31,800
St. Francis Female Parochial School.....	4,250
St. Francis Male Parochial School.....	3,750
St. Michael's Parochial School.....	8,056
St. Michael's Church Schools.....	10,000
St. Gabriel's School.....	23,380

Church of Transfiguration.....	388
Transfiguration School.....	34,310
St. James' Parochial Schools.....	35,410
St. James' Church.....	800
School of Our Lady of Sorrow.....	19,700
St. Columba Week-Day School.....	18,370
Church Holy Innocents.....	1,125
St. Andrew's Church.....	2,014
Church Immaculate Conception.....	5,182
School of Immaculate Conception.....	32,104
Church St. Paul Apostle.....	10,004
School St. Vincent de Paul.....	6,628
German School, Nineteenth Ward.....	5,859
Church of St. Nifose.....	963
St. John Evangelist School for Girls.....	6,880
Church Nativity Parish School.....	640
Second Avenue Catholic Church.....	645
Church of Holy Cross.....	8,565
Parochial School of Holy Cross.....	1,272
Church of the Holy Name.....	463
Church of the Assumption.....	918
Church of St. John Baptist.....	535
St. Vincent's Hospital.....	26,000
St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum.....	15,000
Catholic Protectory.....	15,000
St. Stephen's Orphan House.....	310,168
Lots for church property.....	8,000
Free German School.....	505
German Mission Association.....	13,680
St. Francis Xavier College.....	15,000
St. Peter's Church.....	7,272
St. Columba's Church.....	1,043
Church of the Covenant.....	1,987
Sisters of Mercy.....	652
Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum.....	436
Church Nativity.....	30,762
Church Epiphany.....	645
St. Vincent de Paul Orphan Asylum.....	766
St. Joseph's Home.....	15,000
Shepherd's Fold.....	6,000
School of Bethlehem.....	10,000
St. Boniface's Church School.....	770
St. Patrick's Free School.....	2,270
St. Francis Xavier School.....	7,384
Sacred Heart Female Academy.....	13,826
Church Annunciation.....	3,000
Church Annunciation School.....	3,174
St. Gabriel's Schools.....	2,240
St. Alphonsus' School.....	12,000
St. Vincent's Free School.....	5,240
Church of Holy Redeemer.....	2,500
School St. Francis Assisi.....	3,000
School Holy Cross.....	2,820
School Nativity.....	5,520
School St. Chrysostom.....	700
Orphan Asylum, Prince Street.....	1,129
Sisters of St. Mary.....	10,000
Roman Catholic Foundling Asylum.....	1,000
School Sisters St. Dominic.....	9,173
School Sisters St. Dominic.....	5,600

Aggregate to Catholics.....$1,396,389

PROTESTANT SECTS.

Episcopal Churches.....	$25,216
Episcopal Schools.....	10,500
Episcopal Hospitals and Homes.....	14,257
Episcopal Miscellaneous.....	7,333

Aggregate.....	$56,957
Reformed Dutch Churches.....	$22,210
Presbyterian Churches.....	13,961
Baptist Churches.....	5,326
Methodist Churches.....	7,271
Lutheran Churches.....	3,694
All other Protestant institutions.....	2,874

Total to Protestant institutions.....$112,293

To Hebrew institutions.....$25,852

Grand Total.....$1,534,534

Catholics got 91 per cent., and Protestants a little over 7 per cent.

And what were the donations put in for Protestants? They were mainly fictitious, and purposely so. It would not do to give millions to Catholics without making a show for the other side. To make this show the Tammany tax officers levied assessments upon Protestant churches—assessed property that always went free as a matter of course,—and thus made parade of impartiality, afterward reimbursing the churches for assessments that they could not, and never meant to, collect. Take, for instance, the Methodists. Here is the whole list:—

M. E. Church, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street.....	$434
M. E. Church, Bloomingdale.....	205
M. E. Church, Yorkville.....	621
M. E. Church, Sullivan Street.....	416
M. E. Church, Bedford Street.....	612
M. E. Church, Forsyth Street.....	500
M. E. Church, Greene Street.....	315
M. E. Church, Jane Street.....	129
M. E. Church, John Street.....	1,328
M. E. Church, Second Avenue and Forty-fourth Street.....	1,322
M. E. Church, Sullivan Street.....	221
M. E. Church, Willet Street.....	316
M. E. Church, Second Street.....	247
M. E. Church, Lexington Avenue.....	1,130
St. Paul's M. E. Church.....	274
Church of Evangel Association.....	390

Total, with odd cents.....$7,291

Not a cent for Methodist schools or asylums, for not a cent was asked or expected by that denomination. It was a cheap and very mean trick, but quite characteristic of the party. Yet the conspirators were themselves ashamed of it, for the sums named were levied only in 1869 and 1870; in 1871 no tax was charged, because the truth was too manifest, and the Ring was falling to pieces.

Let us go back a little toward the beginning of this sweetness on Roman Catholic schools and churches. In 1867 the following sectarian donations were made from the money levied upon the people at large:—

School.....	$10,000	School.....	$5,000
St. Bridget's.....	5,000	St. Peter's.....	5,000
St. Stephen's.....	5,000	St. Mary's.....	5,000
St. Gabriel's.....	5,000	St. Teresa's.....	5,000
Holy Innocents.....	5,000	Transfiguration.....	5,000

And in the tax levy for the next year (1868) are these items:—

School.....	$5,000	School.....	$5,000
St. Joseph's.....	5,000	St. Dominic's.....	5,000
St. Lawrence's.....	5,000	St. Michael's.....	5,000
St. Teresa's.....	5,000	St. Joseph's Asylum.....	5,000

For the operations during the Ring's palmy days see the full table above. Before Tweed broke down the public Treasury was not only available for the Ultramontanes, but, ever fertile in resources, they managed to get a percentage of the receipts for liquor licenses set apart by the law of 1869 (smuggled into tax levy), and out of that they made a good thing. For instance, in 1869, out of $214,960 of excise money, the Roman Catholics got $178,672, or eighty-two per cent.; Protestants only about $6,500, or less than three per cent., the remainder going to Hebrew and non-sectarian institutions.

In 1870, out of $217,300 of excise money, the Catholics got $182,295, or eighty-four per cent., and the Protestants about two per cent., the rest going, as before, to Hebrew institutions and non-sectarian missions and schools.

When this last grab became known, there was some agitation of what Mr. Kernan would call the "unimportant" school question. Mr. Nathaniel Jarvis, who was getting $6,000 a year as Clerk of the Common Pleas, had been selected by Tweed to divide the excise money, and had taken for his trouble in the two years nearly $10,000. Meddlesome Protestants "wanted to know" why the "established church" of Tammany Hall should get $8 where outsiders only got $2, and why Mr. Jarvis should get more for distributing the money than all the Protestant sects got of it. The result was the Legislature, in the tax levy of 1871, enacted:—

"SECTION 8. It shall not be lawful for the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New York, or the Board of Supervisors of the County of New York, or the Board of Apportionment herein created, to appropriate or apply any portion of the tax herein authorized to be raised, in aid of any private or sectarian school, or to any institution or enterprise that is under the control of any religious denomination; or to borrow any money on the faith or credit of the city, to be applied to any such purpose; but the foregoing restrictions shall not be held to prevent any appropriation by the said Board of Apportionment from the tax herein authorized of $1 per week in addition to the amount now provided by law for each founding taken charge of and supported in the founding asylum under the charge of the Sisters of Charity, which additional amount is herein authorized and directed to be hereafter raised annually in aid of such asylum, or to affect the provisions exempting free libraries, hospitals, charitable institutions, and churches from assessments as provided in section 117, of chapter 137, Laws of 1870, nor shall said restriction prevent appropriations in aid of the following charities; namely:—

The charities named included all or nearly all of every denomination, except those actually under public management. The law provided that:—

"Money derived from licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors since the organization of the present Board of Excise Commissioners, and the moneys hereafter received for such licenses, shall be appropriated for charitable purposes by the Board of Apportionment herein provided for, as they may in each year determine from time to time as to objects, purposes, and amounts, and the proper officers shall deposit such excise moneys with the Chamberlain, who shall hold it subject to the disposal of said Board of Apportionment."

Under the distribution in 1871, the various schools got $179,088, of which Roman Catholics had $155,140, or eighty-two per cent., and everybody else, sectarian and non-sectarian, $23,948, or eighteen per cent.

The glaring unfairness of this distribution created some remonstrance, and an effort was made in 1872 to have the list of institutions made up by one Catholic and one Protestant; but it failed, and two Ultramontane Romanists were chosen to decide how little they could give Protestants, and how much they could grab for their own side. The result was that of $142,890 distributed, the Infallible Church got $119,111, or very nearly eighty-three per cent., leaving for everybody else $23,778.

Thus it appears that even after the Ring's downfall, under this apparently fair distribution, the Romanist schools have got about fifteen dollars to every one dollar for all other church schools.

We need not pursue in detail the succeeding distributions. In 1873, under the heading of "Asylums, Reformatories," etc., the Comptroller paid out $601,661, and among other items are these:—

Foundling Asylum, Sisters of Charity.....	$62,760
Catholic Protectory.....	139,767
House of Good Shepherd.....	49,214

There goes $301,741, more than one-half the whole pile, to three institutions, whose work is provided for by regular State and city organizations, except in the case of the House of the Good Shepherd. By the way, the Catholic Protectory, which was established solely because the Romanist religion was not to be taught in the Juvenile Asylum, has taken already more than one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars from the City Treasury. In the donations for 1873 it gets nearly one hundred and ninety thousand dollars, while other really lawful institutions of which it is a rival get only $67,300.

In 1874 the distribution was in like proportion, and in the required statement of the Comptroller for 1875, published two months before the election, the charity distribution is as follows:—

ROMAN CATHOLICS.
Foundling Asylum.....	$223,052
Catholic Protectory.....	246,168
House of the Good Shepherd.....	14,979
Total Catholic.....	$484,199
HEBREW.
Hebrew Benevolent Society.....	$25,293
PROTESTANT.
Episcopal House of Mercy.....	$4,461
GENERAL—NON-SECTARIAN.
Deaf and Dumb.....	$35,540
Blind.....	4,750
Idiots.....	250
Female Guardian Society.....	25,000
Children's Aid Society.....	70,000
State Hospital.....	423
Magdalen Benevolent Society.....	5,328
Juvenile Asylum.....	76,976
Infant Asylum.....	20,241
Lunatic Asylum.....	1,810
Epileptic and Crippled.....	24,937
Nursery and Child's Hospital.....	4,937
Union Home, and others.....	30,203
Total—general.....	$390,560
Aggregate.....	$874,448

Percentages: Roman Catholic, 52; Hebrew, 3; Protestant, about one-half of one per cent.; general, about 44.

Consider carefully these figures. See what the Church that denounces our system of public education as "Godless" helped itself to—using the claws of the Democratic party to pull the money out of the Treasury,—and ask yourself how soon they would have stopped if the people had not put an extinguisher upon them in the shape of the Constitutional Amendment, which prohibits the State, or any county, town, or city, from loaning its credit or giving its money in aid of any association, corporation, or private undertaking, provision for the education and support of the blind, deaf, and dumb, etc., being excepted.—New York Times, Oct. 30.

FREETHOUGHT IN AMERICA.

In a land so full as is America of young and vigorous life we naturally look for advanced thought, and we expect to find religious, as well as civil, liberty. The land where Thomas Paine found welcome and favor; the land where Channing thundered against slavery; the land where Theodore Parker struck at superstition blows whose force made the ancient fabric totter to the very foundation; the land where Emerson teaches to-day, culturing all wide and noble thought; from such a land we have surely a right to expect much, both in depth and in boldness of theological investigation. The position of Freethought in America is very similar to its position among ourselves, except that its advocates fight at less disadvantage than they do in England. Religious bigotry is strong there as well as here—as witness the case, to which we drew attention a short time since, of the expulsion of a Hicksite Quaker from a State Legislature,—but it is not buttressed by a State Church, and therefore "dissent" carries with it no social stigma. The rapid interchange, so to speak, which goes on amid the various classes of society, appears also to prevent any one form of religious creed from becoming a badge of social elevation. There being no State standard of orthodoxy, "dissent" is, strictly speaking, impossible, and each faith stands on its own merits, without artificial brilliancy being cast upon it by the sun of State favor and support; it is quite as "respectable" to be a Baptist as to be an Episcopalian. The wide prevalence of forms of Protestantism other than Anglicanism is, of course, favorable to the spread of Freethought. Protestantism is a mixture; it is the strong wine of private judgment—which is Freethought—diluted with the impure water of superstition and dogma. The more authority is thrown off, the more obvious becomes the claim to independence of thought, and the more crushing becomes also the blow of the Rationalist: "If you have the right to reject that authority, why have not I the right to reject yours?" Once acknowledge the right of private judgment, and no logical exception can be taken to the claim for fullest liberty. The free clash of opinions in a fair field, where no favor is shown to one more than to another, is also favorable to the evolution of Freethought; and these conditions of the theological atmosphere, have all aided the growth of American Rationalism.

The various schools of Freethought in the States differ each from each much as we do in England. There is the Unitarian body, rather narrower—on the whole—than the same body among ourselves, as it appears to insist more upon its Christian character, and to keep its ministers within stricter bounds. From this body has broken away a more rational school, similar to the party represented here by Professor Newman, Miss Cobbe, and the Rev. Charles Voysey. This Theistic school is, fortunately, far less narrow and bitter against Rationalists who think further than it does than is its confrere on our side the water. It is more fearless, more brotherly, and far more ready to show kindness to the Atheistic party; its special organ is THE INDEX, most ably edited by Mr. F. E. Abbot, and its most eloquent teacher is Mr. O. B. Frothingham, to whose sermons we wish to draw the special attention of our readers. Before dealing with them, however, we must speak of our own brethren, the Atheistic division of the Freethought camp. All our friends know something of that brave little paper, the Boston Investigator, which has ever shown the National Reformer so much courtesy and attention; the London friends will have probably seen the large print of the Paine Hall, which owes its existence principally to the gallant and arduous exertions of Messrs. Seaver and Mendum, and in which are now established the offices of their journal. Unfortunately, the party has lost the services of one of its bravest and most eloquent platform advocates, the Mrs. Ernestine Rose who worked with so much intrepidity and power. Now and then we notice an article from her pen in the Investigator, but ill health prevents her from using her tongue in the cause. Others have, however, caught up the flag she carried so gallantly, and bear it on in the forefront of the battle, clearing the way for those who follow, and braving the shock of the odium which always falls on the advanced guard of the Freethought army.

We turn to a more detailed notice of Mr. Frothingham, whom we are bound to respect, however much we may on some points differ from him. A cultured scholar, a generous-hearted gentleman, at once liberal and fearless, outspoken and charitable, he thoroughly deserves the high position he has won, both as speaker and as thinker. His published sermons strike one at once with admiration for the beauty both of thought and of style, noble ideas clothed in noble words, gems of imagination and feeling set in the rich, chaste gold of purest eloquence. To set clearly before our readers Mr. Frothingham's theological position, we quote from his sermon, "The Radical Belief," the word "radical" being used in a religious, not in a political, sense, and being, in fact, synonymous with rationalist. He states the various points of his creed in order, and we quote them, one by one, regretting that lack of space obliges us to leave out his amplification of each:—

"1. In the first place, then, we affirm the existence of the religious sentiment in man. We declare that man is a religious being, worshipping from an impulse of his nature, believing from the necessity of his constitution, yearning, hoping, loving, aspiring, because an instinct within him prompts him to do so.

"2. The religious sentiment throws out the thought of God. The Radical believes in God in the most positive, cordial, and determined manner. Not in the God of any particular church or confession; not in the God of the Romanist, the Protestant, or the technical 'Christian'; not in any special or individual God; not, let me say, in a God, but simply and only in God. He has no thought; he cannot think of a God who is in time and space; who consecrates temples, or sanctifies exceptional hours; who lurks behind altars, nestles in creeds, or inspires officials; who created the world in six days, and had to make it over again, and at last died himself that it might not finally perish; who peeps into his earth through holes in a concealing curtain; tears up his own roads and mines his own bridges in order to visit his own children in the city he has provided for them; throws into confusion his own press-work, and breaks up his own forms, in order to make himself more intelligible than he was when every letter was in place; who appears to an individual Moses, Samuel, or Isaiah; haunts the dreams of devout men, and rises upon the vision of pious women; a God who listens to private prayers and takes an interest in private fortunes, and selects tribes or nations for special favors, and vouchsafes his witness to this or the other generation, and prints books for his favorite tribe of men. The God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob the Radical knows not; he knows only God.

"Of this Being he does not attempt, he does not dare to attempt, a definition; rather, he tries to break through all definition that he may be absolutely without bound or limitation, pure spirit, pure intelligence, the fullest ideal of possibility, the fairest dream of the soul. . . .

"The Radical's God is simply a dream of all conceivable perfection, the perfect thought, will, care, providence, in whom none die, but in whom all who live at all, live and move and have their being.

"3. Next we say that God reveals himself. The Radical believes in revelation. . . . It is a necessity of the Divine Being that he should reveal himself."

"4. The Radical believes in Christianity as he understands it; not as the only religion, by any means; not as the absolute or final religion; not as the best religion for all men; not as the finest expression of the religious sentiment, but as the most worthy form of it yet manifest.

"5. The Radical believes in Jesus. Not in 'the Christ,' but in Jesus as the highest expression of the religious sentiment in human form; yes, on the whole, the highest manifestation of God.

"6. The Radical believes in immortality.

"7. The Radical believes in as much of the Bible as answers to his cultured reason and his matured conviction, and in no more. He takes what nourishes him, and leaves the rest. He reads it as he reads other books, and judges it."

Such is Mr. Frothingham's creed, boldly stated. That our readers may judge how he teaches it, we append one brief extract from his explanation of Revelation:—

"The spiritual eye opens last, and lo! the Godhead widens on man's view; regions of benignity lie all about us; flowers of tenderness bloom on the bleak spaces of the universe; tendrils of pity and graciousness twine around the iron clamps and rods of law; there is a loving radiance in the sunbeam; there are soft tears in the rain; a sweet purpose is seen gliding through the domains of Nature and life; footprints of a boundless good-will are detected in all the first and latest formations, and God is recognized as Father and Mother, as Savior and never-forgetting Friend."

We have not space to review in detail the number of sermons which lie before us. One of the best, in our opinion, is that on "The Suppression of Vice," showing how vice can only be "suppressed" by pure outlets being provided for the passions which now break out in evil. Similarly sensible is his "Plea for Amusement," in which he pithily remarks that "labor is not a curse; but to have no relief from labor is." All through his teachings, in spite of their extremely religious tone, we find running the golden threads of sterling common-sense, and of glowing human sympathy, sympathy that is really human, in its loving fellow-feeling for the needs, the sorrows, the pains, and the hopes, of humanity; it is Man he loves, simply because he is man; human nature, to him, is glorious and beautiful; and even in its lowest degradation his eyes see the dawn of a coming day; on the edges even of the clouds of vice he catches glimpses of the transforming rays of the rising sun. Such, very roughly sketched, is Mr. Frothingham, the leader of the American Theistic party, and its tower of strength. He is doing much to spread liberal views, and so, indirectly, he is our co-worker, because when the fetters of dogma are broken, and men are set free to walk forward in the path of inquiry, they oft-times walk further than their deliverers intended, and carry the Freethought flag higher up the Mount of Truth. What we all desire is that we should follow Truth; it is not any new creed we wish to impose, nor any new dogma we want to enforce; we only long that we may aid each other in the struggle to be free, each proclaiming the light he sees, and living up to the highest he can reach, and all bearing as badge the words that we English Freethinkers have graven on the banner of our Secular Society, "We seek for Truth."—Mrs. Annie Besant, in the London National Reformer of Oct. 10.

THIERS AND HIS WORK.

At Ouchy the waters are not particularly famous, but the scenery is fine and life there agreeable. A French correspondent has just had an interview with M. Thiers at this place, and he gives some interesting details. He met the ex-President coming from Beau Rivage, where he had been for his morning walk, hastening back to resume his literary labors. "I am in a hurry," said M. Thiers, "for I mistrust my memory. I do not want to lose the ideas that have been floating loosely in my mind for forty years. I must write at last the work in which they will assume shape and consistence. It will be my testament." Then, remembering that they were then upon the soil which was once trod by the author of Julie, M. Thiers continued: "Rousseau said that he wrote his Emile to repair his fault of not having reared his children. I do not have to reproach myself for the same thing, since I have never been the father of a family; but how many times have I asked myself what I should wish my son to learn from me, at the moment when I should have to help on his intelligence and transmit to him the fruit of my own long studies." The youth of France is like a child of my own. It is going astray in the midst of the bad lessons that are given it. To escape from religious ideas that are little better now-days than the instruments of a detestable politique, it allows itself to run into other ideas which serve no better turn. It is not well that youth should wander in this chance way between the syllabus and systematic materialism. I shall try to recall it to reason and to retain it there. It was for the youth of my country, as well as for myself, that during the past few years, before I was obliged to take the pilot's post after the terrible shipwreck of France, that I was so happy to study with the best masters, what it is possible for man to see at the summits of all the sciences. I read chemistry, medicine, geology, astronomy, with an ardent love for the truth. I wished to draw nearer to the light in everything. Because I had long been in politics, did that prevent me from so doing?"

The correspondent here made a remark upon the skeptical and materialistic tendencies of the age, saying that in all ages probably youth had doubted, and admitted the courage of those who mocked at the supernatural, but that when age came those doubts were gradually effaced to a certain extent. At least one no longer took pleasure in doubting, but in feeling that one doubted less frequently. "But the task is by no means an easy one," pursued M. Thiers, "for we must only believe that which good sense approves. I am not, you can readily fancy, for the supernatural of M. Guizot. It is at least very strange that we should imagine a mountebank God, who performs all sorts of tricks to draw the crowd to Him. In our ideas of God, miracles are de trop. He has no need of petites finesses to make his creatures believe in Him." "And the title of your new work?" the correspondent abruptly asked. "I do not know yet," replied M. Thiers; but he went on to give an idea of its object, showing that we may expect something like the books that Cicero wrote at Tusculum, when he was there to repose his mind after his family chagrins and his civic disappointments. A De Natura Deorum from the pen of M. Thiers would be interesting indeed. I fancy, however, that only one or two chapters will be devoted to theology, and that the rest will be devoted to philosophy and art. The very evening of the day upon which this conversation occurred a number of delegates from the French Societies of Geneva came across the lake and gave M. Thiers a serenade. A silver pitcher bearing the inscription, "A Thiers, Libérateur du Territoire," was presented with an address. M. Thiers in returning thanks said that the efforts to establish a monarchy in France had proved fruitless on more than one occasion. Seeing that it was useless to attempt gaining liberty in his native land through constitutional monarchy, which he preferred, he had counselled his countrymen to frankly accept the Republic.—New York Times.

DEATH OF A GREAT PONTIFF.

The Delai-Lama of Thibet died recently. We presume scarcely a person who reads these lines has any very intelligent idea who the Delai-Lama was, or cares who he was; and yet he was the spiritual and infallible head of the Lamaists, offshoots of the Buddhists, who number over 400,000,000 souls. There are Lamas and there are Delai-Lamas, and the Delai-Lamas are recognized as incarnations of God, and worshipped as the Deity is worshipped. The Kublai-Khan, the great conqueror of China, first established the Lama in power, and gave him both temporal and spiritual sway, and a throne where he could sit as high as the emperor in temporal matters, and a good deal higher in spiritual. His most noteworthy successor was Sonkapa, who was immaculately conceived by his mother's falling upon a Buddhistic inscription. By his immaculate birth he was endowed with many very remarkable characteristics. He had a white beard, and could talk before he was a day old, and from his hair grew a tree producing leaves which were covered with sacred inscriptions. He died in the fifteenth century, and although he ascended into heaven, his body is still preserved, floating in the air, in a monastery which he founded.

The first of the Delai-Lamas, however, was born in 1389, and the one who has just gone to meet Buddha was the tenth of the line. Their lives have not always been very peaceful, for three of these pontiffs have suffered death by violence at the hands of the emperors, who were jealous of their power over the Mongolians. Their position, however, is an enviable one. They have no end of palaces and temples richly adorned with gold and silver ornaments. They have endless ceremonies, pageants, and music. They run prayer-wheels which are very profitable, and make a handsome thing out of helping the release of dying rich men's souls, which they accomplish by the neat little surgical operation of tearing the skin from the skull and boring a hole in it. Religious services are held for the comfort of departed souls, but their effectiveness depends greatly upon the manner in which the friends of the relatives come down. The bodies of ordinary common people are made into meat balls and fed to the Delai-Lamas' sacred dogs.

They derive immense tribute from mines, lands, and flocks, and manage also to eke out a living by the sale of holy textures, fumigations, relics, and idols. When engaged in official business, the Delai-Lama is an object of envy to all persons who love their ease, for on such occasions he sits cross-legged, like a statue, on five elegant cushions, arrayed in his best attire. He is not obliged to say anything or notice anybody. He simply waves his hands, which is equivalent to blessing, and sometimes he distributes little balls of paste or clay. As everything which emanates from him is considered to be omnipotent, there is great demand for these dirt-balls, and the profits are correspondingly large. In addition to this, annual tribute is carried every year to him by caravans. In point of fact, there is very little to do and most excellent pay in the position, the most onerous duties being to sit cross-legged, look wise, and say nothing.—Chicago Tribune.

AN INDUSTRIAL EXPERIMENT.

There is an association of young persons at Springfield, Vt., known as the Industrial Works, that furnishes all its members with constant work at fair wages and a pleasant home at small cost, which is meeting with a success so marked as to attract the attention of all thinking people. The members of this association are all young people who are willing to rid themselves of all bad habits, work steadily, dress economically, and save a portion of their wages; no others are taken. All the men who join are required to furnish a small amount of capital, and to save one-fourth of their wages, which must be invested in the capital stock of the association. Women are not required to furnish any capital in the outset, but must save one-sixth of their wages and invest it in the business. Those who do not comply with the requirements of the association are expelled, and those who wish to leave can do so at any time, and can withdraw their capital by giving six months' notice. The wages paid to each member is fixed by a board of directors, and is proportioned to their skill and ability. They have a large dwelling or home where the members live and enjoy many privileges and comforts not usually found in families or boarding-houses. All pay a moderate price for their board from their wages. They have two new factory buildings, and a good water privilege and considerable machinery, and are engaged in the manufacture of toy and house-furnishing goods, for which they find a ready sale. They commenced business a year ago with five hands and are now working forty-five; their sales for last month were over three thousand dollars, their pay-roll for the month was over twelve hundred dollars, and the saving of wages which was added to the capital of the company was more than three hundred dollars. The average amount saved from the wages of each man in a year is one hundred and fifty dollars, and of each woman fifty dollars. Many of the members have saved much more than this during the year, but this is all that is required of them. The aggregate amount saved by the present company in a year will be nearly five thousand dollars. By continuing in this course a few years the capital of the company must become very large, and the savings of each member a respectable competency. The advantages of belonging to such an organization as this to young persons just starting in life are numerous and valuable, and are appreciated by those who enjoy them. It is the purpose of those engaged in the enterprise to increase their numbers and business as rapidly as their accumulating capital will permit with safety, and they expect to be able to employ a hundred hands by the close of another year, and to grow up an institution where every intelligent young person of good habits who wishes can find constant work at good wages, a comfortable home, good associates, and a place where they cannot fail to save money, and where they will learn to live in accordance with the laws of health and Nature, and thus secure permanent happiness and contentment. When every town in the country has an establishment like this, much will be done towards solving the problem of how shall panics, prostration in business, and poverty among the working classes be avoided.—Woodstock (Vt.) Standard, Oct. 8, 1875.

THE TEXT of the circular sent by the Papal Nuncio in Spain to the bishops has come out by the last mails, and it would be useful, if the matter needed any further elucidation, in illustrating what Catholic prelates mean when they talk about "religious liberty" and "equal rights." The Nuncio claimed peremptorily the execution of the Concordat of 1851. By the new constitution, freedom of religious opinion and religious worship is allowed; but the Catholic religion retains its place as the religion of the State, and all public ceremonies or manifestations on the part of other denominations are forbidden. The Nuncio is not content with this, and claims the execution of the first clause of the Concordat, which forbids the open profession of any other creed; also of the second clause, which provides that "all instruction in public and private schools shall be in conformity with the Catholic faith, and the bishops shall be charged with watching over the purity of faith and morals in the schools"; also of the third clause, which provides that the bishops "shall have the help of the secular power every time they shall have either to oppose the malignity of men who try to pervert the souls and corrupt the morals of the faithful, or to stop the printing, introduction, or circulation of bad and perverted books." This, it will be perceived, gives the bishop the use of the police in exercising a censorship over all literature, and enables him to prescribe the mode in which every child shall be taught; for it makes him supreme in private as in public schools. Yet if this Nuncio were transferred to the United States, and were to engage in the school controversy here, he would put on a bland, liberal, and "broad" look, pretend he never had heard of the Spanish Concordat or the Inquisition, treat the stories of Papal intolerance in European countries as mere inventions of infidel and Protestant writers, and declare that what the Church sought was only fair play and "equal rights"; that what she sought here was not the right of interfering with the education of the Protestant children—God forbid,—but simply and solely the right of using the Catholic share of the school-tax in her own way. The circular closed with something very like a threat that if the Concordat was set aside, the Church might have to throw in her lot with Don Carlos—that is, give him her blessing, and begin cursing Don Alfonso.—Nation, Oct. 7.

Poetry.

ONLY A BABY.

TO A LITTLE ONE JUST A WEEK OLD.

Only a baby
'Thout any hair,
'Cept just a little
Fuz here and there.

Only a baby!
Name you have none,—
Barefooted and dimpled,
Sweet little one.

Only a baby!
Teeth none at all;
What are you good for?
Only to squall.

Only a baby,
Just a week old;
What are you here for,
You little scold?

BABY'S REPLY.

Only a baby!
What should I be?
Lots o' big folks
Been little like me.

Ain't dot any hair!
'Es I have, too;
S'pose'n I hadn't,
Dess it tood grow.

Not any teeth!
Wouldn't have one;
Don't dit my dinner
Gnawin' a bone.

What am I here for?
'At's pretty mean.
Who's dot a better right,
'T ever you seen?

What'm I dood for,
Did you say?
Eber so many things,
Ebery day.

'Tause I squall sometimes,
Sometimes I bawl;
Zey dassent spant me,
Taus I'm so small.

Only a baby!
'Es, sir, 'at's so;
'N if you only could,
You'd be one, too.

'At's all I've to say;
You're most too old;
Dess I'll det into bed,
Toes ditin told.

—Autumn Leaves.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 6.

F. D. Edwards, 20 cents; S. H. Barton, $3.20; T. A. Hanson, $3.20; K. L. Green, $3.20; H. M. Redington, $3.20; Abraham Payne, $8.70; John Hammond, $3; Rob't Clarke, $3.20; Henry Schnull, $3.25; Lizzie Martin, $6.50; J. W. Frank, $3.60; E. L. Saxon, 25 cents; S. Donaldson, $1; Alex. Foster, $3.20; Henry Lantz, $1; Alan Greenwell, $4.21; Benj. Breed, $1; E. W. Seigman, $5.75; Geo. Graham, $4.75; D. Hays, 25 cents; W. M. Fahnestock, 20 cents; E. P. Walton, 10 cents; A. B. Morse, 10 cents; John Campbell, $3.20; E. Bryant, $5.65; Norman Weir, $5.75; J. H. Bosworth, $3.25; W. E. Parmenter, $5.50; Wm. Merritt, $3.20; Chas. Doolittle, $3.50; W. P. Wesselhoef, $4; O. B. Vose, $5; Lee & Shepard, $4.99; J. Birdelhough, 20 cents; Matthew Luce, $20; Nichols & Hall, $2; S. M. Whistler, 10 cents; Samuel Fish, $5; E. B. De Gersdorff, $6; Joseph Barnsdall, $1.20; Henry Appleton, $3.20; Conrad Wesselhoef, $6; Gabrielle Bachem, $3.20; F. H. Buchanan, $6.40; J. W. Truesdell, $6; T. McWhorter, $3.20; Emily J. Leonard, $3.25; Abner Forbes, $3.35; J. Vaughn, 10 cents; P. R. Johnson, 25 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 11, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

F. R. A. CONVENTION.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Worcester, Mass., at the Horticultural Hall, beginning on Tuesday, the 16th November, at 7.30 P.M., and holding through the 17th.

On the opening evening an Address will be given by O. B. Frothingham, President of the Association, on "The General Religious Outlook of our Time."

The Sessions on Wednesday, the 17th, will begin at 10½ A.M., 2½, and 7½ P.M. In the morning an Essay will be read by David H. Clark, of Florence, on the question, "Is it to be Peace or War in Religion?" In the afternoon the subject is to be, "The Secularization of the State and the Public School,"—the discussion to be opened by F. E. Abbot. In the evening an Essay will be given (probably) by John Weiss.

Speakers expected to be present besides the above-named are Dr. Bartol, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Wm. C. Gannett, E. S. Elder, W. J. Potter, and others.

A cordial invitation is extended to all persons interested, for or against, to attend.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will speak at Arenzville, Ill., Nov. 8, 9, 10; Yates City, Ill., Nov. 14; Auburn, Ill., Nov. 15, 16, 17; Clayton, Ill., Nov. 18, 19, 20; Du Quoin, Ill., Nov. 24 to 28 inclusive; Oskaloosa, Iowa, Dec. 1 to 5, inclusive; Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, Dec. 7, 8, 9; Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 12.

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

IF THERE is anything satisfactory in life, it is to find those with whom one has necessary dealings to be worthy of absolute confidence. For over two years we have enjoyed this great satisfaction in our intercourse with Mr. George H. Ellis, the printer of THE INDEX. His compositors are all women, and, as our readers must have perceived, are equal to the very best male compositors in the accuracy of their work; and if (as sometimes happens) our subscribers fail to receive their papers, we are sure that the trouble must be in the Boston Post Office, of which great complaint has been made by many parties. Mr. Ellis himself is one of the most energetic, active, and enterprising young business men of the city, and even in these hard times is reaping the deserved success of which such qualities are the seeds. But it is his probity, his high sense of honor, and his invariable kindness and gentlemanliness to which we feel impelled to render a special tribute of appreciation and thanks—which it will probably surprise him not a little to see in print. During these two years and more we have had not the slightest cause of complaint, but on the contrary great cause to feel indebted for uniform urbanity, fidelity, and obligingness far beyond technical limits; and we make this little notice simply and solely to relieve our own mind by a due acknowledgment of sterling merit, at a time when so many things are happening to pain those who would fain see high ideals carried out in the world of affairs.

"CRUSHING" THE LIBERAL LEAGUE.

It is well for those who delight to point out the gradual amelioration of public sentiment on the subject of religion, and who are in consequence liable to be seduced into oblivion of facts which do not minister to the gratification of their taste in this respect, to come face to face now and then with the manifestations of a certain brutal religious bigotry which still exists in the world to-day, ready to rush forth like a wild beast from its lair, and to rend with savage ferocity whoever ventures to draw too near its lurking-place. Human passions remain the same from age to age; and it is no proof of wisdom to conclude hastily that the day of danger from outbreaks of blind religious fury has passed away forever. While we are exulting over the progress of mankind in knowledge, freedom, and catholicity of sentiment and thought, we are apt to forget that the tendencies of modern society are exceedingly complex; that the course of civilization is the resultant of a social "composition of forces," and by no means of movement in the line of a single force; that there can be no current without its counter-current, so long as it is a law of Nature that water preserves its own level. Every sect thinks that the entire world is travelling towards itself; and liberals, though no sect, too frequently fall victims to a similar conceit. Catholics expect to see the race simultaneously bowing to kiss the Pope's toe; Protestants anticipate a millennial supremacy of the gospel according to Wesley or Williams, Knox, Fox, or Channing; Spiritualists are persuaded that mankind must become all spiritualistic; Materialists that they must become all materialistic, and so on through the catalogue. This is childish. The philosopher is satisfied with studying the numberless conflicting tendencies of modern thought and life as so many facts of the present, manifesting so many active forces which contribute each its own quota of influence to produce a future that cannot be foretold. He will not infer that a volcano is dead because it has had no eruption for a century; so long as it smokes, he knows it is not extinct. He will see in such utterances as the one we quote below, from the Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, Daily Telegraph, of October 30, a great deal more than the insignificant fuming of a solitary fanatic; he will see in this tiny curling wreath of exasperated bigotry a proof of the continued existence of that terrible subterranean ocean of fanaticism which has so often belched forth in fury to lay waste a world; he will know that the essential beliefs and purposes of which it is apparently a single writer's surly soliloquy underlie the whole extent of our American civilization, and that the crust which confines them is perilously thin. See what sort of teeth a daily secular paper, published in the capital of the great State of Pennsylvania, dares to uncover before its audience, without fear of being put into a cage:—

MORE CHAMPIONS OF "UNSECTARIAN" SCHOOLS.

There is in this country, and especially in New England, a growing number of men and women who claim immense credit for their perfect freedom from the "degrading mental slavery" of the general public, and who call themselves the Radical Club. This club has its head-quarters in Boston, and it is merely a coterie of Infidels. Chief among them, a sort of apostle in fact, is a well known writer of fiction named Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Here and there among these "Radical" Infidels we find unsexed women who shock public opinion by appearing in that most unwomanly character. For unless it be a woman drunk, there is no spectacle so humiliating and unnatural as an Infidel woman. At a late meeting of these half-crazy fanatics the following "demands" were put forth, and we can see from the most careless perusal of them the whole character of those who make the demands. It is not an inspiring spectacle to see the New York Tribune and the Hartford (Conn.) Courant lending their influence to one of the crazy demands of this Infidel club. The Tribune does this by quoting, with approval, this man Higginson as a high authority approving the recent expulsion of the Bible from the public schools of Chicago, and upholding the same outrage in New York, Buffalo, Poughkeepsie, Cincinnati, East St. Louis, and numberless other places where the Jesuits have managed to work their vengeance on that sacred book. The Courant chimes in with the following agreement:—

"The school question has been forced upon the friends of the schools by the antagonism of the Catholic Church, and it must be settled, first, by additional constitutional guarantees, which will effectually remove the question from politics; and, second, by the complete secularization of the schools, so that no just complaint can be made from any source of proselyting tendencies, or of denominational bias."

And the Infidel club to which we have referred put forth their scandalous manifesto, under the belief, doubtless, that they—like the newspapers aiding them and the Jesuits to degrade the Bible into the category of books unfit to be taught to the coming generations of Americans—are engaged in "emancipating the human intellect from the slavery of creeds," and all that. Here is their "platform":—

"1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

"2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

"3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

"4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

"5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

"6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

"7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed."

Their devotion to their pet folly it would perhaps be harsh to deny. But, after all, it is nothing more or less than the devotion of a set of fanatics, who blindfold themselves in the search after truth by assuming their own intellectual superiority over all other minds, and so, failing to reach a solution of deep problems by the exercise of humility, come at last to rely on a stolid denial of all truth which does not begin (and end) in their own disordered brains. The pity of it all is that these people dupe themselves, in the first instance, and so render useless to humanity culture capable of positive good; and, in the second place, they give to the enemies of our schools the authority of some names that have come to be regarded with respect in literature. But apart from all sentiment, and in vigorous application of the logic of the case, these people must be brushed aside as mere auxiliary forces to the Church which they detest quite as much as that Church detests the common schools. No force, be it a half-Infidel press, an Infidel club, or a venerable Church, or all of these with a great political party as their steadfast ally, must be permitted to drive the Bible from our schools, as a mere preliminary blow to invite the total destruction of that noble institution. Whatever foe assails the schools as the nurseries of the morals of the people will be crushed. And the bitterest foe that can assail the school system is the combination which seeks, under the plea of making it unsectarian, to make it irreligious, pagan, and worthless.

It is really unnecessary to point out the blunders of fact which are contained in this tirade; yet justice to Col. Higginson requires at least a brief statement that the fulminator of the above has confounded the Radical Club with the Liberal League, and attributed to Col. Higginson radical utterances which probably (though we have not seen the articles of the Tribune and the Courant) originated in THE INDEX. He does not take any such radical ground as he is here declared to take; on the contrary, he is opposed to the absolute exclusion of the Bible from the public schools. As a matter of justice to him, we simply call attention to these blunders.

The points of importance in the article quoted, setting aside all the enveloping trash, are (1) the startling avowal of a determination to "brush aside" and to "crush" those who lift a finger in advancement of the objects of the Liberal League, and (2) the avowal of a determination to defend the Bible in the schools at all hazards. We have no desire to meet these threats in any such spirit as pervades them throughout; we only say that nothing on this side of the grave, short of forcible suppression of THE INDEX by the government or voluntary desertion of it by its own supporters, shall cancel a syllable or enfeeble a tone of our pleading for the solemn enactment of equity, freedom, and universal good-will through the triumph of State Secularization. Bigots may oppose, lukewarm liberals may belittle or misrepresent, the movement for these just and generous "Demands of Liberalism"; but it will grow in strength and power till the victory is won, despite all the "brushing aside" and "crushing" of a thousand Telegraphs, if there is strength in justice, power in truth, or love for either in the hearts of the American people.

HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN.

Two articles in the Daily Advertiser of Oct. 28, one over the signature of Henry F. Durant, and the other appearing as editorial, calling the attention of the public to the claims and needs of Wellesley College, have led me to ask the attention of your readers to a few thoughts in regard to the existing opportunities for women's higher education, and to the direction in which greater improvement is desirable. It is always good to know where we stand, and what are the exact facts on any subject. From the report of the Bureau of Education for 1873 (the last one issued, so far as I know) the statistics of the higher education of women are thus given:—

Number of institutions.....	205
Number of instructors.....	2,120
Number of students.....	24,618

This includes the academies and so-called colleges and universities devoted exclusively to women. Besides these, we have 536 high schools, with 33,430 female pupils in them; and 102 co-educative colleges, with 5,410 students in the preparatory departments; and 1,947 in the regular college course, or 7,357 female students. Added still to this, are the pupils in various agricultural and scientific schools, making a total of 8,141 female pupils in co-educative colleges; so that we have a grand total of at least 66,189 women in schools and colleges above the rank of grammar schools.

Now I do not mean for a moment to say that we have enough women in such schools, or sufficient provision for such pupils; but I think, in view of the great cost to the public (for it is ultimately just as much at the expense of the public, whether endowed by private munificence or by State taxation) of this array of institutions, we ought to scrutinize very carefully the claims of any school which asks for assistance from the public. Almost everyone of these colleges is crippled in its efforts for excellence by the want of means. Is it not far more important to strengthen the hands of long-tried and proven institutions than to help to increase the number? The benevolence of Boston has for a few years past been aiding a college in a distant Western State which now turns out to be almost entirely a private speculation for money-making. When shall we learn that, if to give liberally be a virtue, to give discriminatingly is no less a duty?

Three new institutions for the higher education of women have been lately opened in Massachusetts. One is the Smith College at Northampton, which, as far as I know, has not yet made any appeal to the public for funds. The Wellesley College was also established by the munificence of an individual; and it was with great surprise that I found an appeal in the public papers for it.

Mr. Durant is well known to hold very positive religious views, and to be a decided proselyter, and no one objected to his using his wealth to carry out these views by means of a college. In fact, holding the opinions in regard to the infinite importance of regeneration, faith in Christ, and so forth, which he is supposed to hold, it seems the only logically consistent thing that he can do to use all his strength, talents, and money in forwarding this object. But when he asks the help of the public, they should inquire whether the constitution and management of the college are such as are best calculated to advance education.

While aiming to give tuition at so low a rate as to be within the reach of all classes, the magnificent building and appointments of the college seem out of keeping with the tastes and habits of those for whom it is intended, and to tend towards encouraging love of display and extravagance. Secondly, the entire restriction of all the offices in the college to the female sex is, in my view, a very unfortunate and wrong principle to act upon. It is cutting off the influence of one side of human nature, and narrowing the growing minds of the pupils within false limits. It is no more good that women should be shut out from all masculine influence during three or four years of their lives, than that men should be debarred from the society of women. If they are alike in all respects, her influence can do no harm; and, if they differ, it is important that all differences of human nature should be represented in education. There may be circumstances which require that schools should be devoted to either sex; but to emphasize this monastic principle is to destroy the harmony and balance of social life.

Again, every arbitrary restriction in the choice of teachers renders one liable to the necessity of taking the second best. The best attainable teacher of chemistry, mathematics, and so forth, may be a woman, but is just as likely to be a man; and, if the man must be rejected because of his sex, the chances of getting the very best instruction are lessened by one-half.

Again, the avowed object of the college is to make the pupils Christians. Here is another limitation. Christians have again and again found learning and science at war with Christianity. This conflict may be only illusory, but so it often appears. Now what is the teacher to do? If her Bible lesson says the earth was made in six days, and the geology says it took millions of years, must she not subordinate the authority of science to that of the Bible?

The Advertiser says that in a certain sense the college is "unsectarian," but "no liberal preacher has yet been invited there." In what sense is it unsectarian? We all know that it is in the sense of the Evangelical Alliance, which unites several minor sects under its banner that it may war the more vigorously on all those outside. More than half of Christendom are excluded from this non-sectarian company; the Roman and Greek Catholics on the one hand, the Quaker, Swedenborgian, and Universalist on the other. Mr. Durant has a perfect right to establish a sectarian college, if his conscience prompts him to do so; but it is the duty of all who think differently to point out its evils and let the public know what they are asked to aid.

The third institution is the Boston University. I have not space to go into a full discussion of its plans; but it aims at equal advantages to both sexes alike in the classes and in the government of the college; at unsectarianism in all the departments (except in the theological school, which was endowed by a special fund); and at great economy in the use of means by making arrangements for their pupils to have the advantage of libraries already established, of scientific and industrial laboratories, and other helps to a full education.

While I cannot undertake to indorse all the methods adopted by this university, and while it is still crude and vague in its plans, it yet seems to me that its aims are in the right direction, and that a liberal and intelligent public ought rather to strengthen its hands than to raise up a rival of narrower aims and a lower standard of education. E. D. C.

THE REVIVAL.

The revival is under full headway in Brooklyn. The rink is crowded with people; hundreds, thousands sometimes, are turned away; prayer-meetings are instituted in churches, chapels, public halls, and even stores. A retail merchant on the Sixth Avenue, New York, a Scotch Presbyterian, clears his counting-room at noon every day in order that the spirit, summoned by Mr. Talmage, or some other son of Æolus, may blow through the spaces usually occupied by dry goods, not so much haunted at present by buyers. Mr. Hepworth's corrugated iron tabernacle is thronged by people drawn thither by the singing of Mr. Weeks, the next best to Mr. Sankey.

There are great expectations among the Evangelicals. The papers do what they can to increase the excitement. Even papers not commonly thought to be religious in purpose or opinion, the influence whereof is believed to be quite adverse to Evangelical if not to every kind of religion, and conducive rather to scepticism and unbelief, are careful to say nothing that can be construed as hostile to the movement. Infidel editors pelt infidels with gibes; and atheistical editors indulge in flings against "cold, passionless theism." In fact, the daily press is, as usual on critical occasions, doing what it can to expose its insincerity, and make thoughtful persons wish that its power of evil might be diminished. But there are indications that the movement has not yet received the impulse from the most prevailing sources that is needed to make it wholly satisfactory.

It is intimated in the Herald that the "Evangelists" may not come to New York at all this winter; the cause of their absenteeism being the want of co-operation and conspiracy among the clergy, and the consequent uncertainty of the welcome to be expected. The Evangelists venture on no doubtful ground. The victory must be guaranteed before they take the field. The citadel must be surrendered before they begin the assault. The alleged difficulty of securing the hippodrome would probably be removed, if it was really wanted. Brooklyn is a sound Orthodox city, with three or four men in it whose word is of great potency with the multitude. But New York is a great metropolis which cannot so easily be put under dictation.

Last week the Herald sent interviewers to great numbers of the clergy to obtain their judgment on the revival. The result appeared in the issue of Sunday, October 31. And very interesting it was to note how few gave in their full, cordial, unqualified approval of what was said and done; how many spoke guardedly and timidly; how much willingness was expressed to wait and see. On the whole, of course, the sentiment was favorable to the "Evangelists," because the clergy, by an immense majority, are Evangelical. Dr. Chapin was cautious; Dr. Bellows frank but moderate. There are plainly misgivings and questionings of soul; and while that is the case, the spirit will rush towards its vacuum elsewhere.

Another thing caught my attention yesterday. The Tribune, which from the start has shown a fervid interest in the revival, presenting its leaders, its aims, and its achievements in the most engaging aspect, printing sermons and even prayers in full, and commenting on the proceedings in a tone of sympathetic admiration which at least showed what the editor desired that people should think he thought,—the Tribune in an editorial warned the revivalists against exaggerated statements, extravagant figures of rhetoric, and wildness of speech that could have no other effect than to bring reproach and ridicule on themselves and their work. The Herald, which has given them a fair chance, contained also a long editorial, characteristic in tone of the paper, the first half of which admitted the power and success of the movement, the last half of which led the reader to think that the power was mechanical and the success apparent. Mr. Moody was described as a man destitute of extraordinary ability, and his sermons were spoken of as thin and worthless. Mr. Sankey was accused of resorting to the tricks of the cheap concert-room and the "minstrels" to produce his effects. Neither of these papers would have spoken as they did, had they not felt that it was safe and even necessary to do so,—that there was a public opinion that must be recognized, a taste that could not wisely be offended, a judgment that even people who spoke in the name of the Lord must respect. When such papers make such admissions, we may be sure they are called for. The sentiment they recognize is very much deeper than they allow. They express only its mildest form. The revival is still at its commencement. A week or two more will reveal the justice or the injustice of these comments.

O. B. F.

MURRAY AT MUSIC HALL.

The recent sermon of Mr. Murray at Music Hall, introductory to his new church enterprise, apart from its intellectual merit, and the circumstances of its delivery, possesses a peculiar interest. It exhibits the drift and tide-mark of the most advanced Orthodoxy of the time. There could be no better demonstration of the perpetual change to which religious ideas are subject, and their inevitable conformity to the common laws of progress,—those of Christianity no less than others. Mr. Murray reminds us of a skilful and venturesome driver who tries how close he can shear, with his carriage wheels, the edge of a precipice without tipping over. He is recognized as an Orthodox clergyman in full and regular standing by everybody. Thus far, we believe, no formal charge of heresy has ever been preferred against him; nor is there anything, perhaps, in this discourse that would support such a charge as an actual issue; though why an actual issue has not been made, when we recall the case of Prof. Swing and some others, is not clear to us. It may be his turn has not come. A reflective and thoughtful reader of the discourse under consideration, remembering what has passed for Orthodoxy in the Church, will be disposed to ask: "Is this Orthodoxy? If so, what of that which has hitherto passed under the name?" What a contrast between these utterances and those of the theological school to which their author belongs of fifty years ago,—between them and those of Jonathan Edwards, or those even of a large portion of its pulpit representatives to-day! Those whose impressions of Mr. Murray have been derived to a considerable extent from his reputed devotion to horse-flesh and the race-course, and who have no special predilection for these pastimes, or sympathy with these tastes (and we confess we are of the number), will hardly be prepared for the truly elevated moral sentiment of this opening sermon, its manifest sobriety and sincerity. It indicates imagination, but more subordinate to the exercise of the rational faculty, and of a more refined and subdued quality, than is common to the average popular preacher—a power to evoke choice and striking similes when needed; a dexterous and telling application of the facts of life; a fluent expression, and a philosophy which, if not profound, is for the most part cheering and quickening. With a few passages stricken out here and there, and an occasional slight alteration of phraseology and the manner of "putting things," the discourse would be acceptable to almost any radical congregation.

Yet, with all these excellences, there is running through nearly all of it a vein, more or less distinctly perceptible, of something which seems very much like cant—the stereotyped expression of a mere mental habit, as if to meet a customary expectation rather than fresh conviction,—a free and familiar way of referring to God, or presumption of acquaintance with his nature and purposes, and a tendency to make everything fit to certain foregone conclusions, which renders his production quite vulnerable to rational criticism.

Mr. Murray designates his theme "Christian Education," though we cannot see why it might not have been, nearly as appropriately, entitled education, or culture. It is easy enough to see, of course, from his stand-point, since it is the habit of the Christian preacher to credit all moral worth and high attainment to Christianity.

Mr. Murray begins with the proposition that the Bible "presupposes that we are intelligent and ambitious after good, and desirous of higher attainment"; "that we can be educated and desire to be." What strange doctrine is this, Mr. Murray, which thou, as an Orthodox teacher, bringest to our ears? "Ambitious of good?" Does not the Bible declare that the heart of man is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked"—"prone to evil as the sparks to fly upward"? That in our nature there is no good thing? That we are in enmity with all that can ennoble us? That has not this ever been a distinctive doctrine of all the creeds of the Church? Do you repudiate it? Does it not then become one in your position, in order to be frank and honest, to say so openly, and would not this initiation of your new Church enterprise be especially opportune for the avowal? You are pledged to the effort to lead men to higher life, and what virtue is just now in greater requisition than honesty? "Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself?" If the preacher practices evasion and double dealing, is given to the concealment of his convictions, suffers himself to be misapprehended in respect to what others have a right to know, and it is important they should know, is not his influence upon those he addresses likely to be less exalted and ennobling than it might be?

Mr. Murray defines education, according to its literal significance, as a "leading forth of the natural capacity of the man." But "who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?" Has not the Church always taught, nay, and does it not still teach through its accepted and unrepudiated creeds, that man has no "natural capacity" for improvement until he is supernaturally changed to a new creature? Does Mr. Murray mean this? Why not tell the world openly and directly what he does mean in regard to it? If mankind have been given over to "vile affections" and a "reprobate mind"—are "shapen in iniquity"—"conceived in sin"; if "by the offence of one, moral death passed upon all men," as the Scriptures teach; if all are by nature "bond slaves of Satan," as the Westminster Catechism expresses it; if some men and angels, for the "glory of God," are "foreordained to everlasting death" (and these have been and are still the fundamental doctrines of the system of theology with which Mr. Murray is identified), what hope is there of leading forth the "natural capacity" of such a being to anything good or excellent?

"The worst thing that any man can do," we are told by Mr. Murray, "is to think of himself as a creature of little value." But the Church has always taught that this is precisely how he should think of himself, and such is the tendency of a no small measure of its influence at present. Does not a very large and important division of the Church declare in its devotions every Sunday, "that we have erred and strayed like lost sheep"; that "there is no help in us"; that we are "miserable sinners"? It is very gratifying to a radical mind to see one who has the power of drawing people to him and enlisting their sympathies that Mr. Murray possesses, turning his face from these dismal conceptions; but we should prefer to see it done in a more unequivocal way, with greater candor and courage.

The view of the material universe presented in this sermon corresponds with the cheering and hopeful one that is given of man. One would hardly infer it is a "ruin," or had been scourged by a blasting and withering curse. On the contrary, it is implied that it is a very good world to live in, and full of grand opportunities and inspirations,—so good, in fact, that it has been wholly devised and arranged with all it contains, for the sole benefit or education of man. "It is safe to say that there is not a creation of God, there is not a combination permitted by him, the object of which is not man's education. We are to look upon the whole world in all its growths, in all its ever-revolving changes, as ordained for your instruction and assistance. There is not a tree, there is not a spire of grass, there is not even a daisy head that you passed this summer in the fields, that was not created and put in growth and bloom for you." But is not this stating it rather strongly? What warrant has any one for declaring (in the present state of knowledge) why this or that thing was created? We may discover the laws of their existence, the process of their evolution; but who can tell why they exist? Does not this world exist, so far as he is capable of using it, as much for the insect of a day, the toad or reptile that crawls upon the earth, the bird that soars "on pinions free," the bison of our American prairie, the tiger or elephant of an African jungle, the huge leviathan of the deep—in a word, for any creature in the long chain of animal existence,—as for man? And is not the opposite assumption—this idea of man's right to monopolize the use of all things as if expressly designed for his service—calculated to foster arrogance and selfishness? Ask Mr. Bergh what he thinks about it.

Mr. Murray assigns a high value to the knowledge of material things as well as to things divine. "To understand the catechism," he says, "and not know anything of the tree that shades your door, or the shrub or the flower in your garden, is to be imperfect as to knowledge." Sensible, that! At the same time he appears to attribute results to the attainment of knowledge which facts tend to disprove. "Not to know things, not to feel them, is to lose that fine sense of connection with God which every child of his should bear." Does Mr. Murray imply by this that knowledge necessarily leads to religion in any such sense as he holds and teaches it, by increasing belief in a personal deity and a supernatural providence? If so, the facts seem quite otherwise. Our scientific men, who are supposed to know as much about Nature as any class, are not noted for their positive convictions in these respects, but rather for their seeming lack of them.

"The end of all Christian education," Mr. Murray maintains, is "Christ"—"the subjective Christ whose personality is in you, and with which you grow into oneness of state, and word, and being." All true leading forth of the faculties tends to this result; renders one fit at last "to stand in that great choir around God, comprised of saints and seraphs, and of the spirits of just men made perfect; able to reach the highest keys, and contribute our part to that endless melody which swells in praise of him who redeemed us with his blood, and made us kings and priests before God."

There are in this sermon some passages which have a real radical ring, and are, were it not for a certain sense of inconsistency with others which they excite, not unworthy of a greater preacher who once stood where they were uttered. The following will serve as specimens:—

"Whoever attempts to fence in truth fences more out than he fences in. No segment of the sky will hold all the stars. You cannot include the truths of the Divine nature and administration in any theological segment. These truths are everywhere, and they are not revealed to any one body of men. They are not comprehended by any one class of minds; they are not discovered by any one particular generation of searchers."

"I urge you all to keep growthful, therefore. Live always in anticipation of knowing more to-morrow than you know to-day. Let no new truth, no new discovery, be a surprise to you. Live expecting them to call on you as expected friends, any day. Do not cling to your last year's growth. Be as wise as the trees, and shed your leaves when they begin to wither and grow old. Do not perpetuate stupidity; do not transmit ignorance to your children; do not impose bigotry upon the next generation by cherishing the bigotry of this. Feel that there is room enough on all sides of you to expand; that you can no more touch the boundaries of knowledge than a tree can thrust its branches out until they touch and are doubled back upon themselves by contact with the horizon wall."

Now all this is very fine, if Mr. Murray really means what these words import, and is bound in all events to stand by them. But we suspect they are uttered with a certain "mental reservation." That the truth in these passages refers to certain preconceived ideas of it, and that, in an issue between these and new knowledge, rather than surrender them, these fine glowing sentences would be cancelled. Examples enough there have been among preachers and sects distinguished for their advanced positions. If the author of the sentences we have quoted is prepared to carry them out in fact, he should respect the sincerity of every class of thinkers, and should be as ready to speak in Paine Hall, or at a conference of the Free Religious Association, as at Music Hall. We should be as eager for the latest word of THE INDEX or INVESTIGATOR as of the THEOLOGICAL REVIEW. Be this as it may, we rejoice in the preaching of Mr. Murray, though it is not what we should like to see it in all respects, nor what we hope it yet may be. In the words of Mr. Jefferson in the play, we are ready to say, "May he live long and prosper."

D. H. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—It is not a pleasant, but I believe it to be a very profitable, task to "show up" from time to time the principles which lie at the root of prevailing systems.

This may be done, and always should be done, without any animosity or bitterness. It is enough simply to confront a speaker with his own words, and ask him plainly, Do you really mean what you say? If the speaker still remain impervious to this kind of rebuke, at all events it does some good to direct to his utterances the attention of the good people whom he is supposed to influence, among whom some are surely to be found earnest and honest enough to see and repudiate the obnoxious statement.

I see by some of your American papers that so-called "church principles" are spreading and taking deeper root in your country than I thought likely or possible. If THE INDEX does not reach church people directly, it may do so by roundabout means; and so I proceed to my subject, hoping that some of them may see what I am about to write.

The present Bishop of Peterborough, Dr. Magee, who owes his present dignity to his support of Mr. Gladstone in Irish Church politics, is now going through his diocese delivering his triennial charge.

He begins by congratulating his clergy on the fact that "Ascension Day is now kept in four hundred and sixty-five churches in the diocese"; that week-day services are also increased in number; and that "the sad list of churches in which the Holy Communion is administered less frequently than once a month has decreased from one hundred and eighty-seven to one hundred and twenty-three."

"The number of churches having weekly celebrations of Holy Communion had risen during the last three years from thirty-five to fifty-two."

"As far as he could gather, the number of communicants approached (only) twelve per cent. of the church population."

"It appeared to him to be very desirable that every clergyman should keep a careful record of the number of communicants at his church. Such a record would be a guide to a clergyman of the success or failure of his ministrations. A well-attended church and well-attended schools might be evidence of the zeal or popularity of a clergyman; but a record of the number of his parishioners who were habitual frequenters of the Lord's table would show a clergyman how far he had drawn his people closely to himself, and how far his ministrations had really succeeded."

We cannot suppose that, when off his guard, the Bishop of Peterborough is one whit less anxious about virtue and integrity of life than you, or I, or any one else professing to be religious.

When off his guard, I say, and in the work-a-day garments of a busy man. But in the lawn sleeves, and speaking literally ex cathedra, he must forsooth give vent to a sentiment utterly at variance with the most ordinary regard for virtue! We cannot blame him for thinking much about the Holy Communion, and desiring a little more than a shabby "twelve per cent. of the church population" as the number of communicants. We cannot wonder at his calling the list of scanty celebrations a "sad" one. But we do wonder, with not a little indignation, that he should in this solemn and official manner deliberately mislead the already too-benighted clergy who were hanging on his words!

Confronted with his lordship, we would ask:—

Do you, my lord, really mean what you say? Do you in your inmost heart believe that the only test of the "real success" of your clergy is to be found in the frequency of their visits to the Lord's table?

Nay, after a moment's reflection, would you not yourself bitterly deplore that this should be made the only or even the chief test of the value of clerical ministrations? Are not your words the most subtle and insidious encouragement to formality, hypocrisy, and self-delusion? Would it not have been a thousand times better to have warned your clergy against the very natural temptation of accepting this observance as a sign of success, instead of the holier, more gentle, more loving lives their parishioners may lead? It is not as if your clergy were ministering to people whose character and virtues left nothing to desire, and who only wanted religious fervor and devotion to crown their perfection; but, my lord, you know full well that the "church populations" everywhere are full of human faults; are as untruthful, mercenary, covetous, uncharitable, and selfish, as any populations outside the pale; and that the first and last duty of a minister is to try to raise their moral standard, to purify their lives, and elevate their motives. If this be the true aim of a clergyman, the test, the sole test, of "real success" is the moral improvement of his parishioners, and not any outward compliance with religious observance, however sanctioned, or however beneficial as a help to virtue.

I would not rail at one who thinks himself to be "God's High Priest"; I only ask you to confess how you have—at this solemn time and place—forgotten yourself; forgotten your heart's loyalty to what is really good and true in the sight of the Lord; forgotten your first and highest duty to your clergy; namely, to teach them to be less worldly, less formal, less hollow, less hypocritical, than by nature and position they are likely to become.

The "Lord's Supper," under the guidance of your mistaken rule, would be a commemoration indeed of a dead Christ, and of the Burial of his words. Dangerous would it then be to remember how he warned the priests of his time saying, "Ye tithe mint, and rue, and all manner of herbs, and pass over justice and the love of God." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."

If ever this deplorable slip of the Episcopal tongue should come to be the deliberate conviction of the hierarchy and clergy of any church, I think we may say without hesitation, That Church is doomed. When men begin to put means for ends, they lose sight of the real good for which they started, and having once taken the wrong path pursue it with increasing rapidity to their own ruin.

I say nothing against your Holy Communion; I only deeply and sorrowfully protest against the clergy being taught to regard its observance as the chief duty of their flocks, or to look upon it as a test of their success, in place of real progress in all virtue and godliness of living.

I am, sir, very truly yours,
CHARLES VOYSEY.
CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., Oct. 23, 1875.

Communications.

THE INJUSTICE OF CONTRACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

IN THE INDEX of Oct. 14, R. P. H. says: "We steal when we pay a creditor seventy-five cents and pretend we have paid him one hundred cents." Granted; but if a creditor exacts one dollar and fifty cents for a dollar promised, what is that? How is it that men looking at this question from the moral side see stealing and wrong only when the creditor is cheated, or when it is proposed that he shall be cheated, by inflating the currency, so that the money wherewith he is paid shall be worth less when he is paid than when the debt was made? Why do they see nothing wrong on the other side, when by lessening the volume of currency a dollar is made worth more, and the creditor still exacts the same number of dollars for his debt?

R. P. H., as well as Carl Schurz, Mr. Bradlaugh, and others, seems to miss, or ignore, this side of the question.

Now, no one, I take it, proposes to justify an inflation that shall enable a debtor to pay in money of less value than he promised; such a step could only be justified by the necessities of war that would, at the same time, justify taking men and putting them into the army to fight battles on such terms as the government might dictate.

But when pressing men into the military service can stand justified, then, I apprehend, no one would quarrel with a government, on moral grounds at any rate, for changing values by issuing paper money and making it a legal tender.

Granting, then, at once, all that is urged against changing values by an inflation of the currency, does that justify changing the value of money by a contraction of the volume already in existence?

Look a moment at the workings of the policy of trying to appreciate paper up to gold. No one supposes that can be done but by forcibly contracting the volume of paper on the one hand, and storing up gold on the other, preparatory to exchanging gold for greenbacks.

But as gold is stored in the Treasury, it becomes scarcer and dearer; at the same time the demand for it continues, and, as paper substitutes are lessened, may even become greater. We must keep on paying our interest in gold, while we seek to accumulate. Hence, as the volume of paper lessens, we may even find the premium on gold going up, as is the case now. More and faster contraction will then become necessary to keep up the appreciation of paper.

What is the necessary result of this course on business, and upon those who have debts to pay?

It is absurd to suppose that the volume of currency can be thus contracted without tending to reduce greatly the prices of all commodities.

This is now fully understood and expected. Hence production, beyond the calculated immediate consumption, stops. No one can continue to manufacture and put out goods, if what is produced this year will sell for less next year.

It is not at all strange that money accumulates in banks. Who wishes to exchange money now for property, or commodities, beyond present necessities, if next month or next year the price of that for which he exchanges his money will be worth less in money than he pays for it?

They who manufactured cotton or woollen goods, or iron, or steel last year, find their products worth less this year than when produced; and, if the process of contraction is to continue, they must expect to find that what they produce this year, beyond the demand for immediate consumption, will be worth still less next year.

The result is, our industries languish, labor is unemployed, and, instead of gaining in wealth, we lose, and are compelled to fall back in part on former savings, to live and pay our debts.

The debtor, to be sure, has no more dollars to pay, but he must pay a great deal more for his dollars.

We pay debts with what we produce, and, if what we produce, by means of forced contraction of the money at any time in use in a country, is made less valuable, so that more of it has to be taken to procure the same money, it is equivalent to an increase of the debt.

I can point to many cases where an industrious and saving laborer has put his savings for a series of years in a little home, until half or more of the purchase price has been paid; but the mortgage that is left unsatisfied takes it all now, and his annual savings are swept away. Yet Mr. Schurz can only see, from his super-eminent moral stand-point, the iniquity of changing the value of money so that creditors are cheated!

As long as the change is downward, and only the debtor is robbed, it is to him but the natural reaction of too great an expansion of credit! Any arbitrary alteration of the value of money works unlimited wrong; but it is just as wrong to rob a debtor as it is to cheat a creditor. I say rob, because I believe already the limits of equity have been passed, and any further change of values, per force of law, is positively wicked. As to the effect of such a course as has been marked out in the Sherman Resumption Act, let those who have seen the result of similar legislation in other countries testify.

James Mill, who wrote immediately after the resumption of specie payments in England, and with a full knowledge of the effect on British industries, says: "When a considerable proportion of the medium of exchange is withdrawn from circulation, the evils of a scarcity of money are immediately felt; the prices of commodities fall; the value of money rises; those who have goods to sell, and those who have debts to pay, are subject to losses, and calamity is widely diffused."

Another writer says: "In 1815 the bank began to get ready for a resumption of specie payments by cutting down discounts and reducing circulation. It thus reduced the currency by £12,000,000,—a mere trifle as compared with the money value of the nation's property; but the whole circulation for a time stopped, and an artificial panic was produced. In 1819 it resumed specie payments, after a suspension of twenty-five years, thus altering at once, and greatly, the terms of all contracts made in the interval, and not yet executed. All who had land, labor, or produce to sell, or contracts to fill, were placed at great disadvantage. Creditors, i. e., the wealthy, capital-holding class, gained greatly, except where their debtors were absolutely ruined. Mills stopped, land fell in price, labor was thrown idle, and in peace men suffered more than the calamities of war." And in peace men suffered more than the calamities of war! And these calamities we are just beginning to pass through, if we undertake to follow the Sherman Resumption Act through to the end!

Without approving the teachings of the circular quoted by R. P. H., I think the reviewer, however, will need to revise somewhat his presentation of the National Bank question, and, at some future time, if permitted, I may refer to this again. A. J. W.
MARIETTA, O., Oct. 20, 1875.

REVIVALIST RHETORIC.

At the Tabernacle, Wednesday, Oct. 27, at a great Moody and Sankey meeting, the following remarks of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage are reported in the Tribune:—

"Dr. Talmage arose to say that the prayer for his sick wife had been answered. 'It flashed to the Throne of God, and from there to Charleston,' from whence a telegram came from her after three hours delay, saying: 'I am a great deal better. On Saturday I sail for home.'"

The Sun reporter writes as follows of the same remarks:—

"When the preacher closed, Mr. Talmage desired to tell the people how their prayers the previous morning for the recovery of his wife had been answered. 'That prayer went up to God for a woman who was lying sick in Charleston. It was flashed from here to heaven on angels' wings, and from heaven to Charleston without the loss of a moment's time. The only delay was in the telegraph line that brought me a message that my wife had suddenly improved, was almost well, and would sail for home on Saturday.'"

We may presume the report is correct. Comment is unnecessary.

Says the Sun, Oct. 29:—

"The Brooklyn revivalists must be particularly careful to avoid such expressions, figures of speech, and illustrations as are offensive to true taste or reverential feeling. In his discourse of Tuesday morning, Preacher Moody labored to show that the Almighty 'keeps all his best things locked up,' so that they can only be had by 'knocking'; and in doing so, these words were used:—

"He [God] keeps the Holy Ghost locked up, and when we want him we have got to knock, and knock, and knock. And if we will keep knocking, we will get him.'"

"Now this sort of language cannot be tolerated by right-thinking people. It reduces to pettiness one of the most awe-inspiring mysteries of the ancient Church. Instead of inducing solemnity, it leads to levity by putting the Godhead in a grotesque attitude. The statement itself, as made by Mr. Moody, we would rather not argue about, though it is not warranted by anything that can be found in the Scriptures. According to the Orthodox belief, the Holy Ghost is the Third Person of the Trinity, and as such is of the essence of the Father and the Son, coequal with them, and inseparable from them; and it is far outside of the province of proper and reverent imagination to speak of any one of the Three Persons of the Trinity 'locking up' either of the other Persons. In no part of the Scriptures is there any example of any such way of speaking of the Deity. Neither Moses nor the prophets ever spoke thus, and never did the Christian apostles so speak. It is Mr. Moody's duty, on these and other grounds, to cease from straining after such expressions. He is not as fond of queer or strange figures as some other revivalists have been; but his use of them had better be checked at once."

Am glad to see you notice so earnestly President Grant's grand words on the school question and sectarian matters. "A."

THE CENTENNIAL OF FREE THOUGHT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The year 1876 will be Centennial year, and the city of Philadelphia will be the centre of the Centennial. The occasion will be an interesting one for the exhibition of relics of the old, in comparison with the active life of the new. These, however, will be its surface indications. Its deeper significance will lie in the moral forces that will be set in motion around it as a common centre. What political combinations will gather there, and what policies will they evolve? What is to be the influence of the Old World customs that will be represented there, more especially as related to governmental science upon American parties and politics? What the combinations among religious bodies, both American and foreign? We know that the competition of human thought and conflicting interest is ever active and alert, and we cannot expect that so great an occasion will be allowed to pass without an effort to improve it to the advantage of particular interests. It is by this very friction, in fact, that social progress is made.

I do not know whether the subject has been agitated or not; but the question suggests itself to me whether any concerted effort is to be made by the liberal sentiment of the country (and of the world) to represent itself at the Centennial. It ought to have a centre there where liberal literature should be on sale, and, if possible, a hall or halls where liberal thought could find free expression. Superstition will be preached from a thousand pulpits. Rationalism ought certainly to have its rostrum. Especially should works bearing upon the relation of the government to religion be accessible. The churches will reiterate their groundless plea that this government has Christianity, or some undetermined and indeterminate religious hebdomadal, as its basis. Rationalism should be able to oppose to this claim authentic facts. If a volume could be prepared showing the preponderance of liberal thought, as represented by some of the leading minds of the time, in the formation of the government, it would be of great value, and would tend greatly to restore a correct opinion on a subject relative to which a false opinion has obtained, through the uncontradicted claims of ecclesiasticism.

S. B. McCracken.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 25, 1875.

MASONRY IN THE BIBLE.

A prominent lecturer on Free Masonry declares that, when Jesus told Nicodemus he must be born again, he was simply advising him to join his lodge. Another defender of the "mystic tie" has stated in print that, when Paul says he was caught up to the third heaven and heard words not lawful for a man to utter, he merely meant that he took the third degree.

This method of interpretation may be applied to the Old Testament with equal success. The first lodge was called the Garden of Eden, and was broken up by the Grand Master, because a man of such bad character that he was nicknamed "Serpent" had got initiated. The need of Masonic institutions soon became so plain, that a second lodge was founded by Noah, and called the Ark. Its members were thus preserved from the wickedness which prevailed, like a deluge, around them. Envious people, who could not get in, started at Babel a rival lodge called the Tower; but this failed on account of internal dissensions. The difficulty of getting initiated in old times is symbolically told in such stories as those of Jacob wrestling with Jehovah; Moses and his proselytes wandering in the wilderness; Sampson slaying the Philistines with the jaw-bone of an ass; Daniel in the lion's den; the three holy men in the fire; Elisha and the two she-bears; and other stories easily explained Masonically. Jonah may be supposed to have been unjustly expelled from his local lodge called the Ship, and to have been restored to fellowship by the Grand Lodge, which was appropriately called the Whale. This method is, however, so easily applied that I need only add, that the story of Balaam and his ass is perfectly comprehensible, on the supposition that they were both of them Masons.

AN OUTSIDE BARBARIAN.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 60 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents; singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE
 INDEX ASSOCIATION,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT A. BRONSON. Tablets. Concord Days. Records of a School. A new edition.	1.50 1.50 1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols. Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories. An Old-Fashioned Girl. Little Men. My Boys, &c. Shawl-Straps. Work: A Story of Experience.	3.00 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.75
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW). Essays in Criticism. Literature and Dogma.	2.00 2.00
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine. Edelweiss. German Tales.	1.50 2.00 1.00 1.00
BACON'S Essays.	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution. Physics and Politics.	1.25 1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science. A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy. Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.	1.75 1.75 1.75 5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.	2.00 2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. Phyllis. The World-Priest. The Tall Student.	1.25 1.25 1.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.	1.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 2 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	2.25 2.25 1.75
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.	1.75
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist, With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of games for Parties, uniform with Patience. Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.	1.50 1.50 1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religious. Common-Sense in Religion.	2.00 2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. C.). Sex in Education.	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.	1.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays. The Religious Demands of the Age.	3.00 5.00 1.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces. A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The Village Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship. Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	2.50 1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species. The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	2.00 4.00
Journal of Researches. Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.	2.00 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols. Illustrated.	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols. Middlemarch. 3 vols. Wit and Wisdom of the Spanish Gypsy. How Lisa Loved the King.	3.50 1.25 1.50 1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series. Essays. Second Series. Miscellanies. Representative Men. English Traits. Conduct of Life. Poems. With Portrait. May-day and Other Pieces. Essays. Blue and Gold. Poems. Blue and Gold. Prose Works. 2 vols. Society and Solitude.	2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger. The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	1.50 5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.	6.00 2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity. Beliefs of the Unbelievers. Child's Book of Religion. Life of Theodore Parker.	1.50 2.00 1.00 4.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 4 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol. Elective Affinities. Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols. Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	5.00 1.25 3.50 1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life. Literary and Social Judgments. Criticism of Christendom.	2.00 2.00 7.00
GROE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Groe. Second Edition. With Portrait.	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France. Thoughts about Art. The Edinburgh River. The Intellectual Life. Chapters on Animals.	1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.	1.50 1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures. 2. Logical Lectures.	3.50 3.50
HAWTHORNE'S NATHANIEL. Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol. Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Out of the Home, and Septimio's Father.	2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers. Malbone. An Oldport Romance. Army Life in a Black Regiment. Atlantic Essays. Oldport Days.	1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50
HOWELL'S WILLIAM D. Their Wedding Journey. Suburban Sketches. Venetian Life. The Journey. A Chance Acquaintance.	2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses. Hints of Travel.	1.25 1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature. On the Origin of Species. More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism. A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrates. Lay Sermons. Addresses, and Reviews.	1.25 1.00 1.50 1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems. The Monitions of the Unseen. Songs of Sorrow.	2.25 1.50 2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Griefs Sketched. Studies for Stories. Story told to a Child. First and Second Series. A Sister's Bye-Hours. Mopsa the Fairy. A Story. Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.	1.75 1.25 1.25 1.25 1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. A.) The Gods and Other Lectures.	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and glaciers. By John Tyndall.	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance," to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols. History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	4.00 6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings. Confucius and Chinese Classics.	2.00 4.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols. Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.	3.00 1.00 3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols. Prose Works. Portrait.	4.00 4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols. The Biglow Papers. First Series. The Biglow Papers. Second Series. Among my Books. My Study Windows.	4.00 1.50 1.50 2.00 2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.	.75
LUTBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.	2.00 5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols. Elements of Geology.	3.00 3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife. Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1843. Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.	3.00 3.00 1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire. Conversion of the Northern Nations.	1.50 1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each. The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each. The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition. The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol. Representative Government. Autobiography. His Life and Works. Three Essays on Religion.	2.25 2.25 1.50 2.50 2.50 2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Land.	1.50 1.50
MIYART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire. Rousseau. 2 vols.	2.00 5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series. The Science of Language. Second Series. Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. First Series. Lectures on the Science of Religion.	2.50 2.50 3.50 2.50 2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle. Sickles from Kentucky.	1.50 1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy. Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of our Creed. The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy. Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.	4.50 2.00 2.00 1.75 4.25 1.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion. Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols. Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Dissemination of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence. The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLVI.—A Christmas Story.	1.50 4.50 3.00 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar. The Truist Book. Men, Women, and Ghosts. Hedged In. The Silent Partner. What to Wear?	1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Natural Phenomena: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts. The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc. The Expanse of Heaven.	2.50 1.75 4.50 5.00 2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.	2.50
SCHellen (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S. 2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe. 3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations. 4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.	.50 .50 .50 .50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition.	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. First Principles. Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers. Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed. The Principles of Biology. 2 vols. The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols. Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition. Sociology.	1.25 2.50 2.50 2.50 2.00 2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus. 2 vols. Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	.25 4.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny. Uncle Tom's Cabin.	1.50 1.00
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New. New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	2.00 12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols. The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.	7.50 2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 4 volumes. Per vol. Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovell the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25 1.25 1.25 1.25 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with new additions, making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon. Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges. Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.	1.50
THOREAU'S H. D. Walden; or, Life in the Woods. Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods. Cape Cod. Letters. A Yankee in Canada. A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind. Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	2.50 5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer. Fragments of Science for Unscientific People. Light and Electricity. Hours of Exercise in the Alps. Heat as a Mode of Motion. On Sound. Radiant Heat. Force of Water. Lectures on Light. Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.	1.00 1.00 1.25 2.00 2.00 2.00 1.50 1.50
TYLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures. Modern Painters and their Paintings.	1.50 1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each. Vols. II, IV, and VI., each. The Voysey Appeal. Voysey's Defence at York.	3.75 3.75 3.75 1.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden. Saunterings. Back-Log Studies.	1.00 1.00 1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion. Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	1.50 6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life. Essays and Reviews. Characteristic Men. The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth. Success and its Conditions. Washington and the Revolution.	3.00 1.50 1.50 1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life. We Girls: A Home Story. Real Folks: an Indian Tale. The Other Girls. Pauses. A Volume of Poems.	1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50 1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols. Child Life.	1.50 3.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place Boston.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S PAINE.
PHOTOGRAPHS
For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER
A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 cents.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE VATICAN DECREES,
IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S
FRENCH LESSONS,
IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.
One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00; per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48.00; " 16.00.
Four " 52.00; " 13.00.
Five " 55.00; " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.
Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.
THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-wood Reade$3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham 1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald 1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LECTURES
CHAS. D. B. MILLS
Will answer calls during the coming winter for

Public or for Conversational Lectures,
On the following subjects:—
1. THE EARLY AGES OF MANKIND, so far as yet known: Prehistoric and Preco-historic.
2. ANCIENT RELIGIONS: Egyptian, Chinese, Indian, and the relations of these and other Faiths to Christianity.
3. SOCIAL REGENERATION: or, The Idea of Pythagoras.
Any who may wish to secure these or any portion of them will please address Mr. MILLS without delay, at SYRACUSE, N.Y.
Oct. 23, 1875.

JUST PUBLISHED.
Gems of English Song.
75 Songs, each a true Gem, and undeniably Popular.
Among the attractive titles are:
Nazareth.
Ring on, Sweet Angelus.
Esmeralda.
Little Maid of Arcadec.
Weary.
By the Blue Sea.
Rose Marie.
THE GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG is a book of 232 pages, all of full sheet-music size.

Among the authors are:
LADY SCOTT, CAMPANA, LINDSAY, GOUNOD, HATTON, HOWE, TOPPLIFF, BARNEY, CLARIBEL, ABT.
THE GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG will be sent, post-paid, to any address, for the Retail Price, which is, in Boards, $2.50, in Cloth, $3, Gilt, $4.
Do not forget our other Recent Books:
SONG MONARCH, 75c., for Singing Schools.
SHINING RIVER, 35c., for Sabbath Schools.
HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR, $1.00, for High Schools, etc.
LIVING WATERS, 30c., for Praise Meetings.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway, New York.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN
Religion and Science,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS
—OF—
THOMAS PAINE.
Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON
English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

TWO NEW BOOKS.
MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.
THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.
The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.
G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.
Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.
The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.
On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!
THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!
FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP
IN RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.
I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.
Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WAT-HALLA, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.
Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.
By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.
It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.
Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.
An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.
Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.
Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES
OF THE
FREE LOVE THEORY:
OR,
Love Considered as a Religion.
BY J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:
A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.
An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.
The New York TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."
Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1875.

WHOLE No. 308.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needed guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

"Bosses" are going out of fashion since the election. Schoolmaster Quackenbos is abroad.

THIS PAPER goes to press before the opening of the Worcester Convention. Our next issue will have a report of it.

NEW YORK CITY is crowing over getting "rapid transit" at last. But what will become of its morals, if everybody deliberately sets out to be "fast"?

MOODY AND SANKEY are reported by the New York Sun of November 6 to have "got out an injunction to prevent another party from printing and circulating their hymns."

THE PROPOSED French-American statue of Liberty in New York Harbor will be pleasingly suggestive of international good-will; but why not also erect a statue of Honesty on the City Hall?

BAVARIA is distracted with the Catholic question, from which the King unavailingly tried to run away. The Pope tugs at one of his arms and the Emperor at the other, and the poor prince will soon be reduced to a "magnificent torso."

ELIPHAZ THE TEMANITE thought that the Almighty's bucklers had "thick bosses"; but if he were alive to-day, he would think that the "bosses" who are so "thick" in the neighborhood of New York belong to the bucklers of a totally different personage.

AN AMERICAN subscriber to this journal, writing from Nantes, under date of November 6, says: "May success attend your efforts to uproot 'ignorance and superstition'! The complete secularization of our public schools, and the just taxation of all church and other property, are very necessary to prevent our having in the future a Guibord to bury. In this country [France] that 'animal' is not a 'kitten,' neither is it a 'tiger's cub,' but a full-grown, roaring beast. Be careful, or it will grow on American soil."

IN FORT MADISON, Iowa, there are two Catholic parochial schools directly supported out of the public school fund. One has about three hundred scholars, and the other eighty; both are sustained in connection with the two Catholic churches of the place; the teachers are Catholics, employed and paid by the School Board; from 8 to 9, A. M., and from 4 to 5, P. M., these teachers give instruction in the forms and doctrines of the Catholic Church; and no Protestant teachers have ever been employed in these schools.

A COMMITTEE of the Congregationalist Association of New York has been appointed to investigate the charges against Mr. Beecher. The trial satisfied nobody who reflected on the evidence, and the Congregationalist body finds it necessary to take the painful matter up once more. It may or may not be true that "Christianity is on trial" in that case; but it is certainly true that the Protestant public are on trial for the way in which they have treated it. The action now taken is a new proof of the power of the public opinion which does little public talking.

THE METHODIST BISHOPS have just been publicly entertained at Horticultural Hall, in this city, by their fellow-believers, and Bishop Haven made this remark in the course of his speech: "Boston needs more Methodist churches near the centre of the city. This Horticultural Hall has obtained a reputation for desecration by Sunday atheistical lectures; and now, after this entertainment, it will be regarded as having been redeemed." Of course! What would sanctify it anew, if not Bishop Haven with a mug of coffee in his hand and a mouth full of lobster salad? Lobsters and bishops, well mixed, constitute a powerful spiritual disinfectant.

IN 1807, Moses S. Wheeler was sentenced in this State to imprisonment for life for the crime of arson. He was convicted on the positive testimony of his sister and her husband, who now are proved to have perjured themselves from revenge. So the Governor and Council pardoned him out on November 6, 1875—conditionally! The invariable condition is that, if ever again found in prison, the pardoned man is to serve out the original term; and this condition must be signed by a man known and proved to be innocent! Alas for the imperfection of human justice! What could compensate the poor prisoner for eight long, weary years of false imprisonment? The State owes him more than it can ever pay; yet it frees him conditionally!

THE FOLLOWING SLIP has just been received for publication: "The National Association, organized to maintain existing Christian features in the American government, and to secure the Religious Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, met in Philadelphia on the 9th instant, for the transaction of its annual business. The Hon. Felix R. Brunot, of Pittsburgh, President of the Association, occupied the chair. Steps were taken to secure articles of incorporation, under the name of the National Reform Association. The maintenance of Sabbath Laws, the retention of the Bible in the common schools, the defence of the Judicial oath, and other Christian features of the government, and the securing of suitable religious acknowledgments in all new State Constitutions, were expressly recognized as among the objects of the society. The next National Convention was appointed to be held in Philadelphia during the last week in June, 1876."

THE Nation of November 4 argues that in only two ways can the re-appearance of "bosses" be rendered impossible: (1) the conversion of the municipality into a business, instead of a political, corporation, and (2) the administration of its finances by those who pay the taxes or think they pay them. The latter plan being judged impracticable (probably because it would involve a pretty high property qualification for suffrage), the Nation favors the former. But since this favored plan is to "involve, of course, very great concentration of power and responsibility," the Nation in fact simply proposes a responsible "boss" instead of an irresponsible one. We do not see how this is to get rid of "boss government." On the contrary, it is an almost undisguised retreat from the evils of ignorant suffrage into what have been proved by experience to be the still greater evils of imperialism. Why not resolutely recognize the fact that "ignorance and superstition" are, as President Grant has pointed out, the chief foes of the republic, and concentrate the public energy on the task of abolishing both by "compulsory" or guaranteed education? It is too late to be saved by "bosses," whether responsible or irresponsible; the people have got the power into their own hands by universal suffrage, and it will take more than editorial articles to get it out; and the only possible way out of the snarl is to make the people, by means of strictly universal and thoroughly secular education, an intelligent "boss" of its own affairs. This is a very short sermon, but it will bear very long thinking over.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gago, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; T. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSOOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATE, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

On the Regeneration of Sunday.

BY PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN.

Nothing can be more lovely and glorious than the ideal picture of Christian goodness, as we read it in the Apostolic Epistles. In how many Christians it was a living reality, it is impossible to judge. That it was exceedingly marred by violent doctrinal quarrels among themselves, and not a little also by the impure or rude habits which they brought with them out of Paganism, is made too plain by various allusions. Some Christians are even denounced as covering licentiousness by a form of godliness. Nevertheless, the sound-hearted believers set the goal of their moral aspiration high. When they talked of holiness, they did not mean an ecclesiastical, a formal sacredness—neither the outward washing of baptism (which Peter contemptuously calls, "The putting away of the filth of the flesh") nor attendance on church ordinances, maceration of the body, subjection to priestly rule, or any other artificial sanctity. At least their chief and most honored teachers esteemed holiness to men the highest goodness of every sort appreciable to the mind, springing up from within the heart, and overflowing in love to man, in gratitude and devotion to God.

Accordingly the Church, its ordinances and its teaching, were regarded as an instrumental means of vitally quickening all the members; and of so elevating their characters, as to rise above duty and law into the spiritual region of love and freedom. No lower form of morality was for a moment disesteemed; on the contrary, the function of the Church was to cultivate in its converts all that elementary rectitude of mental or bodily habits in which under heathenism they had generally been very deficient. Regarding holiness as only the higher stage of moral development, we may say that the function of the Church was "to cherish moral excellence in its members." According to the phraseology of the Apostle Paul, his office was, to minister the spirit; and in the spirit was included holiness, liberty, and practical wisdom. The spirit was with him opposed to the flesh, or baser nature. In the works of the flesh he comprised every form of immorality; but the fruit of the spirit, he says, is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith [faithfulness?], meekness, temperance. So abundantly was the moral element expanded in his ideal.

But the Church of that day was in its own theory an exceptional body. It could not cohere or cooperate with so very corrupt a world as surrounded it, nor did it for a moment conceive the vast idea of converting the whole mass. To take out of the world an elect people was its sole ambition; and it was manifest that only certain temperaments (in their language, partakers of grace or God's special favor) were susceptible to conversion. From this antagonism to the world they shunned alike public posts, public amusements, and private company, thereby bringing on themselves dislike and suspicion. Thus they were kept in high tension, and by the persecution (small at first, soon severer) which followed, felt themselves to be a peculiar people, whose task was to promote good works and holiness. The whole life was to be holy. No distinction was made of working-day and Sunday. On the Sabbath, that is, Saturday, no common trade-labor was exercised by Jewish Christians; the Pagan converts met for worship, if able, on Saturday evening, when in Jewish computation the Sabbath was over, and the first day of the week was begun; but they had no day at all without ordinary work. Neither Romans nor Greeks had any week of seven days; hence the phrase "first day of the week" could only be interpreted from a Jewish sense. Gentile Christians (except when they had learned from the Jews to keep Saturday) counted no day of the week holy more than another.

Whether in the second and third century Christians collectively were really inferior to those of the first, it is difficult to know; but certainly the standard of holiness held up before them was constantly sinking, by ecclesiasticism growing up, and by controversy ever exalting the relative value of right opinion. In the fourth century, under Constantine, the first day became at last by the Emperor's edict a day of cessation from common labor; and from it our modern Sunday is derived. The Puritanical Sunday of England (falsely called Sabbath) dates barely from the reign of James I. Baseless as it is in matter of argument, the idea of it was noble in the mind of the Puritan. It was to be a day nationally devoted to teaching, learning, or meditation on holy things, to religious exercises of the heart in private and public, or to philanthropic action, with the least possible spending of minutes on the needs of physical life. The churches of modern England have adopted this theory, and the first question here arising is how far they have realized it.

I do not question that there is numerically a large body of persons who approximate to this ideal. But it must be remembered that the institution has been made national, and that the law forbids labor upon it, even so far as to fine severely those who deliver for pay scientific or literary lectures of the noblest and most instructive kind. Nationally the failure of the institution is enormous. With a great majority it is a day for lying late in bed, and other bodily indolence, a day for eating a more expensive and probably less wholesome dinner, a mere indulgence of "the flesh." With very many, the hours pass in stupid languor; with vast multitudes it is a day in which an extra quantity of intoxicating drink is swallowed. With others it is a day for rural excursions, in which, however innocent, no one can discover anything specially religious. Debauchery prevails in the evening so widely, that on Monday many an artisan is unfit for work, and the police offices show a great excess of crime. This is an eminently unsatisfactory Christian Sunday.

But even as to the portion of timespent in church, no very high account can be given. There are, I well believe, some who, happy in their minister and highly devout in themselves, find the attendance in church very profitable; but how slight is the efficacy on the great mass of a congregation! Weariness under long prayers, and listlessness under a sermon, is a widely applicable description; moreover, when we ask how often the pulpit directs itself against public immoralities, or exerts any appreciable effect against them, the reply is highly damaging. Moral topics are seldom treated at all from the pulpit. To preach (what is called) dry morality, would probably empty any church or chapel; nor are adults likely to get much benefit from a scholastic treatment of morals. To preach against the crying sins of the day, is quite a different matter. This is what Wesley, Whitefield, and their associates did; this is what Baxter and many Puritans before him did,—vehemently and successfully. If one asks why this is, on the whole, so very rare, now or formerly, the reasonable reply is, that the preacher has not sufficient weight of character, conviction, and earnestness of mind. Only exceptional men can do the thing well or usefully. A large number of preachers are too young; they are deficient in fire; they have not stern intensity and recklessness of man's judgment, where that of God is clear to them. Apostolic fervor in no age at all has been a common endowment. An underlying sense that, if the clergy collectively were to preach against the sins of the day, they would often become mere partisans and advocates in matters on which wiser men doubt, has led to a very prevalent disuse of such preaching. It is seldom that any widespread vice or injustice can be redressed without aid from the State; indeed, generally the State itself is guilty, perhaps is an accomplice. To preach against such sins is stigmatized as "political agitation." Even in the great movement against slavery, which began with Clarkson and Wilberforce, though some Episcopalian ministers and very many Dissenters were warm in the cause, I believe they seldom dared to bring the matter into the pulpit. They argued only on the platform, where their ecclesiastical character was merged; where they appeared, not as ministers, but rather as lay philanthropists. A long list of national sins, vices, injustices might be drawn up, as to which the pulpits have been utterly dumb. Even such scandals as bribery at elections, excess of drink-shops, immoralities of theatres, and other lower places, with ever-spreading social corruption, draw out from very few indeed (as far as I have heard) such preaching as in the movement of Wesley was prominent and fruitful.

It must not be omitted that another cause has greatly conduced to strip the pulpit of its moral functions; namely, the development of what we now call the platform. The essential difference is this: that from the platform many speak; and though they oftenest speak all on one side, yet opponents, if they are desirous to promote discussion and not confusion, will generally be welcome in any movement against injustice or other immorality. When a society has been formed to promote a definite object, its uniform difficulty, perhaps its greatest difficulty, is to get intelligent opponents to attend and argue against it. In general they disdain to come; friends only attend, and there are too few in the audience who need conversion. Yet room is open for debate. One man has it not all to himself in such dogmatic style, as needs in him a weight of character not often to be found. There is room also for taking a vote of the audience; and little as may be the value of the vote, it much conduces to attention. For when men have something to do as the result of listening, they listen far more earnestly. A sense of responsibility comes in. But if nothing practical is to come of listening, inattention more easily steals on them. Moreover, far greater interest is raised by a variety of speakers, even if many of them are inferior.

On the whole, the influence of the modern churches against precisely the worst evils of the day—those which are supported by State institutions, by interested politicians or office-holders, or by great vested interests—is almost as feeble as under Paganism itself. This was eminently seen in the United States as to the slave question; so too in England as to our Asiatic wars, our drink traffic, and a worse traffic in the souls and bodies of women. If the function of church organization is to promote that public morality without which religion is fanaticism or hypocrisy, their failure on a national scale is most lamentable. The clergy have not, even by indirect influence, guided or spurred the laity to contend in any vital matter. It is not reorganization merely that the churches need, but regeneration,—the infusing of a new vitality. Yet, believe this as we may, to us little else is open than to make such suggestions concerning possible new arrangements as may give freedom to a new spirit, trusting that it does exist among us.

Indeed, the defects of the new system which has arisen—that of voluntary societies and public meetings—are very grave. The waste of effort, time, and money is enormous, and too much is thrown on the same philanthropic persons. The number of such societies is in itself a serious embarrassment, and the expense makes it difficult for poor men to set them at work at all. In so far as such societies are philanthropic, that is, are disinterested as well as useful, it belongs properly to the church or churches to conduct them; for which they would have many facilities, and by the very fact the Church as an organization would recover her true position in society.

No national church attempts to imitate the form of the apostolic action. In every age a few eccentric societies attempt it, with devout self-sacrificing zeal; and they are a useful protest against our selfishness and luxury. But no one can take a broad view of history, with a heart embracing all mankind, and be satisfied with so limited an action on the millions of our brethren and sisters as alone was possible or imaginable to the apostles and their contemporaries. It is an axiom with us that God cares for the unfortunate many as much as for the happy few; and that a first duty incumbent on those who whether by inward or outward resources are favored is to employ their ability for the welfare of the less favored. An apostle who said, "Silver and gold have I none," could with equal truth have said, "Political influence have I none." A deputation of Christians to Galba, Vespasian, or Trajan, imploring a political change in the interest of morals or of humanity, would have been treated even by these respectable emperors as impertinently offensive. "Do you think that the Emperor and the Senate do not know their duties, without your instruction?" was the mildest reply they could expect. But the majority of our nation is contained in the churches, which, if united in any philanthropic aim, become politically all-powerful. With the vast increase of means, the scale of duty enlarges itself. Apostles could not dream of uprooting the causes of vice and misery, because these were political as well as social and personal; with us, to uproot the causes is just the primary duty, and is of course the only way of removing the effects.

Nor is it possible for the churches now, as in some measure then, to keep themselves apart from the contaminations of a guilty and foul world; for with us church and world are inextricably mixed. Only while a church is a small and special community, can it at all successfully isolate itself. Enthusiasm may for a while keep such a church in a high-strung frame of mind, which resists the world's corruptions; but such enthusiasm barely outlasts in purity a second generation; the evil world drags the Church downwards. No church can sustain its own higher life long, unless active to purify society which is outside of it, on its outskirts, or in general interfused with it. Every way, therefore, the enterprise of healing the world's ulcers and cleansing away moral pestilence is an essential duty of the modern church.

The Church has the pulpit entirely to herself; but the influence of the pulpit, by universal confession, has immensely declined. Why should she not try to attract the platform within her limits, and work it under her own auspices, so far as it purposes to promote justice, mercy, and moral goodness? The Church overlooks her own facilities for this. First of all, she has, all ready for use, the building in which a public meeting can be held. Next, the cost of advertisement and placards in a large movement would be immensely economized. One or two placards outside the building would make announcement to the congregation, and by mutual agreements the different churches would soon learn to help each other in such advertising. They would often work in harmony, debating the same subject simultaneously. Thirdly (what is by far most important, and is the matter to be here specially developed) every local church has the time at her disposal for philanthropic action, if Sunday, that ecclesiastical day, were duly digested. From the severe pressure of business, attendance at philanthropic meetings is impossible in the prime of a working day, and is a troublesome effort to most persons late in the evening. This grave difficulty would vanish, if the meetings were held at the church itself, and on Sunday. Fourthly, a meeting so gathered would not be packed from any select clique, but would take up more independent elements than now. Reasoning on both sides would be heard from the beginning. A futile project would be more quickly stopped; a good measure would more rapidly rise in public esteem. Fifthly, far greater solemnity would be maintained. Neither noisy excitement of applause, nor unseemly riot, would be endured. A more sober enthusiasm, a more earnest gravity, a greater general self-control, might be counted on. Sixthly, the clergyman or chief minister of the building would be the natural chairman, whose official character would certainly give him weight to restrain the meeting, if restraint were needed, and would be a full guarantee for decorum, in no small measure also for religious earnestness. Few clergymen have, or can have, the fire of a reformer or prophet; but a large majority of those in full maturity of life have the qualities needed in a vigorous and useful chairman or president. And every such president, if he had a word in his heart, would have a full right and a free opportunity to speak it out, at any convenient length. Each would earn the influence which his practical wisdom might deserve.

A secondary organization would be sure to rise. A committee of elders, similar to the deacons of many churches, would consult with the minister as to the desirableness of holding a meeting for the discussion of a certain subject. The initiation of the idea would rest with voluntary movement; that is, any individuals (or any amounting to a prescribed number) might make suggestion to the elders, who, if they pleased, would discuss it with the minister. If it seemed plausible enough to deserve fuller debate, it would be brought into a general meeting. If there it were disapproved, the matter would go no farther. No harm would have been done; no cost whatever would have been incurred.

As a result of holding meetings of philanthropic tendency every Sunday, on the one hand, persons who do not esteem the ordinary church ministrations enough to frequent them would be attracted by a service which they appreciate, conducted on the day which is least preoccupied. On the other hand, all the ordinary church attendants would learn that philanthropists are not a special class, but that philanthropy is the duty of every religious man. Owing to the severe engagements of business, a great majority of men now are apt to imagine that it belongs to others, not to them, to bestir themselves for the benefit of the world. If indeed they are rich, the pressure of others may get money out of them; but this is not at all so beneficial to them, as themselves to take part in good enterprises; nor does it so call out their liberality. The selfishness and materialism now dominant would receive a wholesome check, if Sunday, instead of being a day in which the laity are passive hearers and receptive of abstract truth, became a day in which kind, just, or merciful actions were promoted by their coöperation and advice.

To bring about the change which I imagine, a commencement must be made in churches really free. At this moment, the Episcopal or Anglican Church is wholly incapable of such development; but if that happen which to many minds seems fast approaching—that this Church should become free from the State, and able to reorganize herself,—she has in her cathedrals and other ample buildings, facilities far beyond all the rest. It would only be requisite to have courage to turn them to the best account.

With no small timidity, I proceed to state more in detail what changes would regenerate the Sunday; with timidity, because there are, of course, many ways in detail of applying the same principles, and those which I suggest cannot to all minds seem the best. I fear (for this often happens) that readers, instead of improving my scheme, where it may seem to them defective, will look on what they regard as its defects as a refutation of the fundamental idea. But unless I sketch a plan in detail, many readers will not get any vivid notion of the mode of action which I conceive. To fix ideas, I shall name definite hours and define other matters as well as I can.

Suppose that on Sunday the church doors were to open at twenty minutes past ten, and ten minutes were allowed for the congregation to assemble. I believe that an hour and a quarter amply suffices for what is called the ordinary church service, which might terminate at a quarter to twelve. The long prayers of the Anglican Church were never intended by the compilers of the Prayer-book. The modern system has been brought about by an arbitrary and hurtful accumulation of three liturgies,—namely, the morning prayers, the litany, and the communion, besides the sermon; in some churches and on some days the baptismal service, or the churching of women, or the communion is added. It is reasonable to believe that this will be reformed in a state of freedom. English Christians are morally unable to pray on so many topics as their ancestors. It is neither necessary nor profitable to open this remark more fully; but it is visible that a church no sooner becomes free than it much shortens its prayers. And is not this in close accordance with a precept of Jesus himself? In different modifications of religious theories the details cannot be the same; but there are many who will think it would suffice to allow twenty minutes for reading, ten minutes for prayer, fifteen minutes for hymns, and twenty-five minutes for sermon. An interval of nearly a quarter of an hour would remain before twelve o'clock, when the philanthropic meeting might begin.

But according to my ideal and prospectus of the future, perhaps in this same space of time (namely, from half-past ten to quarter of twelve), three other forms of service would either always or often go on in the wings of the same building,—namely, the youths, say from the age of thirteen to eighteen, would receive instruction, moral and religious, from an elder priest; also the girls of the same age similarly, but under a matron priestess; thirdly, the younger children would get school-teaching. Whether such arrangement may be possible, would depend on the available teachers. Here it suffices to insist on two things: first, that at present the moral instruction of young persons of both sexes on subjects of all others vital to them is perniciously omitted, and will be omitted, until they are taught separately by an older man and by a matron; next, that children are cruelly and mischievously tired out, by teaching them in school first, and bringing them into church afterward. It is an ingenious way of making them hate the church service, for which they are every way too young. But unless the school be simultaneous with the church service, what is to be done with the children?

How very defective is our teaching of morals, few appear to me to be aware. As the happiness or misery of life is made up chiefly of small things, so is its morality. The boys of England are, perhaps, as reckless and as rude as of any nation in the world. Nowhere is fruit exempt from their depredations. They break down palings, steal sticks, tear off branches, pick flowers. Gentlemen would often gladly plant in exposed places fruit-trees instead of barren trees; sweet chestnuts or walnuts for horse-chestnuts; cherries, damsons, or apples for thorns (which, if done generally, would make fruit cheaper in the markets); but they instantly draw on themselves an invasion of lads who, besides stealing the fruit, do much mischief. A gentleman who opens a path through his grounds for the greater pleasure of walkers, or to shorten distance for them, finds his trees and grounds instantly damaged. I have known one who, on giving an entertainment in his garden, had his beds so trampled down that he never repeated it. In a recent summer I knew the case of a clergyman's widow, living in a retired village with a family of children on a narrow income, who had all the fruit of her little orchard stolen as fast as it ripened. The thieves were not professional rogues from any town, but some neighbor or neighbors who well knew her circumstances. In my own case I have had vexatious experience of rude mischief from boys. Ringing bells and running away is a very ordinary practice. Servants in vain call to them and scold. Mine more than once have said to me: "Ah, sir! there is no one to teach them better." Here is the germ of the whole thing. See again (at least in the towns) the great incivility of our lads to those whose dress has anything not in the cut of the day, or unusual to their eye; observe the rudeness of their fun, the coarseness of their language and jokes, their excessive pertness. A Turkish boy, however poor, is a perfect gentleman in comparison to them. Look again to the sons of the gentry. Unless the school-boys of this generation are prodigiously improved, much of the same story might be told of them. Indeed the accounts given of our youths on their way to India, while passing through Egypt, and of their behavior on reaching India, exhibit them as not only disgraceful to our country, but a grave political mischief, by their illegal violence and excessive insolence. What are called "practical jokes," which are anything but jokes to the sufferers, prevail, unless put down with a high hand. Everywhere English names are cut on wood and stone (by grown men also), damaging even historical or antique monuments, and ruining furniture. Even if every offence were itself small, yet the total mischief to the character and to society is very serious. But it is hard for any one to preach from the pulpit on such things; they should be taught in the school.

And they can be taught well in school,—so taught as to be instructive to well-bred young gentlemen and ladies. Mr. William Ellis so teaches in schools the elements of political economy, as to make it a profitable lecture on morals. Conversely, lectures on all the small duties and graces of life, opening their moral grounds, would at once inculcate gentleness, politeness, and honesty, and also explain the laws of the market and the rights of every cultivator to the fruits of his labor. Surely such lessons are far more profitable to children than a premature inculcation of religion, the learning of a catechism, or even instruction in reading, if it is to be never used and soon forgotten. To be contented with simple food and avoid greediness, and many other matters would also be taught.

So elevated and mighty an idea as that of God cannot be received by a young child. To a mother endeavoring to inculcate it, her little boy replied: "Mamma is Charley's God." Another boy, taken to church for the first time said on his return: "Papa, I have seen the LORD!" His father on inquiry found, that what the boy had seen was the minister in a white surplice. After a child has learned to feel and practice universal kindness, it is quite time enough to begin upon religion. Until he loves man, whom he has seen, he cannot love God, whom he has not seen, or get any profitable idea of him at all. Much less is there any use in indoctrinating him with a creed, though it be the soundest and surest creed in the world. Let the flower set well, and hope for the fruit in due time, under the blessing of God's sun; but to expect autumn in spring, is to waste labor, and damage your tree. In general, by teaching confession of sin, or thankfulness for its atonement, you do but teach hypocrisy.

The instruction of youth and older girls of course cannot be solely and always on the topics on account of which it is desirable to have the sexes apart. Experience, and the ability or genius of teachers, would regulate details. There would not be, and need not be, uniformity in different churches. But there are other topics, ill taught from the pulpit, but well taught when young people are the audience; such as faithfulness in all small matters, the wrongfulness of petty stealing to indulge the appetite, and of all such rudeness and damage to others as were named above; the duty of politeness and distance between young men and women; the sin of waste; the value of economy; the delight of generosity out of our savings; to the young women especially, the folly and wrong of expensive dress. The excessive stupidity of "fashion," which, by dressing all alike, whatever their physical aspect, necessarily makes a large number ugly. They should be taught that the beauty of dress does not depend on the costliness of the material, but on the elegance of the form and suitability to the wearer. I have heard a gentleman say that, if a shawl, however coarse and mean, is given to a Hindu girl, she has half-a-dozen ways of putting it on, all becoming. Then, also, lessons of cleanliness, tidiness, and conscientious work have to be taught. The numerous evils of smoking—to the purse, to health, to furniture, and to other people's comfort—might here be inculcated with the greatest advantage to youths. I need hardly add, the supreme importance of implanting in them a hatred of intoxicating drink; but to teach them not to indulge the lust of the flesh by needlessly expensive food, approaches to it in importance.

What length of time the philanthropic meeting would take, must depend on its nature, and the eagerness of interest which it might cause. If such meetings were adjourned from week to week, one hour might ordinarily suffice; but in all such matters a free church would secure for itself flexibility, and would adapt arrangements according to the materials before it. Moreover, instead of adhering to a single routine of what is called the Lord's Supper, would it not be far more reasonable to revert to the freedom of the original institution? I think, that if Christians get more manliness of mind, and insist that traditional routine shall not impede that spirit of liberty in which Paul glories, some such development will even yet happen.

What is the exact relation between the Love Feasts (Jude 12) of the early Christians, and the Lord's Supper as described by Paul (I. Cor. xi., 20), I do not mean dogmatically to pronounce. But it is clear, that the Supper to which Paul refers was a real and solid meal; and the original supper (according to the three first gospels) at which Jesus founded the institution, was a meal upon the Paschal Lamb. The obvious inference is that this was originally identical with the Love Feast; but that in consequence of the abuses denounced by Paul, and indeed later by Jude also, a modification took place. Some churches probably adopted Paul's advice early, and destroyed entirely the nature of the supper as a true meal, making it a mere shadow or pretence of a meal; this is the form which has come down to our day, since ultimately the influence of Paul predominated in all the Gentile churches. While it was a real supper, its name (Charity), I suppose, implies that the expense was defrayed by one or more of the richer members. When rich and poor partook of it in common, it was a pledge of religious union. The tea-meetings of our Dissenters aim at the same mark.

It is not likely that any British churches will consent to lay aside the element wine, which has been made a sacred emblem; but some of them already interpret it (as do very many American churches) to mean the unfermented juice of the grape (Matt. xxvi., 29), and treat the use of fermented wine as a pernicious deviation from the original practice. If this interpretation were to become general, it would enable them to revert without danger to what none can doubt to have been the primitive idea—that the supper was a true meal. In any case, the rise of tea-meetings displays the desire of recovering the Christian agapé.

If, from any cause, a meeting or meetings in the church were prolonged, the agapé would conveniently and beneficially reappear. Indeed, when I consider what a weariness (by frank avowal) are the modern soirées to multitudes who attend them, how unnatural the hour, how unwholesome the crowd, how elaborate the coming together, the belief sometimes comes over me, that sensible people will ask: "Why not hold an agapé in church, where we are all gathered for other purposes, instead of a soirée?" After the ordinances of religion and the business of philanthropy, what more reasonable than to unbend the mind and refresh the heart by pleasant conversation. In a country parish and in fine weather, the open field would be preferred to the inside of a building; but our weather does not often permit this. Surely the time will come when that superstition will vanish which forbids the use of churches for a meeting on which the blessing of God can be asked. If bread and wine remain the type of that extreme simplicity which reduces a meal to its fewest elements; if that horrid notion be set aside, that Sunday is the day for gormandizing and that without roast beef and plum pudding neither dinner nor life are worth having,—the agapé might itself initiate a sounder idea of what a devout man's eating ought to be. To learn practically that hunger may be satiated and strength sustained on figs and bread, or other simple viands, without hot dishes, flesh meats, laborious cookery, or fermented liquors, would be in itself a more profitable lesson than many a long sermon can impart. The friendliness between different ranks, which is cherished by the participation of a common meal, is totally lost in the modern Lord's Supper, where each recipient is isolated and dumb, and is a communicant in a solitary sense only.

Let it be carefully considered what has to be aimed at when a meal is held in a church. On Good Friday, the ancient Christians, in their long prayers, sustained themselves on mere luns, setting a cross on them, as a reminiscence of the day. That to which I here point is how such a relief to hunger gets rid of vexatious apparatus, so unseemly in a church—cups, plates, knives, forks, spoons, salt-cellar and cruets, urns or kettles, change of plates, abundance of waiters passing to and fro. If each person brought his own spoon and cup, even various and very solid viands might be set on table in huge dishes only. "Those who dip their hands together in the dish," described the earliest communicants. A dozen Arabs sitting round a dish of rice pillau, need no other apparatus but the dish itself. Whenever the time comes, it will be found that there are plenty of viands, nutritious and pleasant, which can be eaten as simply. Some are now eaten only after a hearty meal, and are then called "indigestible," simply because they are nutritious. As to drink, if food be juicy and not high seasoned, very little is needed; but for those who must have drink, what is more delicious than the Oriental sherbet, of which the basis is barley water, and the flavor given by some exquisite fruit?

If then it be supposed that the congregation without dispersing took a simple meal of charity (call it luncheon, to appease elaborate and inveterate diners), another possibility would open. After they had sufficiently refreshed their heads from the tension of thought by the cheerful interchange of words, a lecture might be delivered by the minister on an instructive subject. Ecclesiastical history is the topic most pertinent to the churches, and most neglected. But if once larger views be taken, a wider survey of human nature will be seen to be appropriate, such as the history of human religion.—I mean in outline, not the tedious and repulsive groping into the details of human error, or any display of the airy fancies of theology, but a narrative of the efforts of the human mind towards truth, and its partial attainment; also the relation between religion in every age and the contemporaneous metaphysical or physical conceptions. It does not appear to me that metaphysics, any more than physical science, in its detailed or scholastic development is at all suited to the church, nor are church ministers likely to be competent to lecture upon it. But so far as these subjects are embraced in a concrete form, as embodied in this or that human religion, they are properly clerical. Another topic for lectures, also appropriate to the church, is scientific morals, which may be treated in various ways according to the knowledge and genius of the lecturer. Frequently the history of one particular branch of morals is highly instructive, or the treatment of specific questions of morals,—such as military service, war and its laws, pleading in law for fees; though, when these subjects admit much debate, it might be more satisfactory to discuss them in public meeting, with leave to speak on both sides. Another form of lecture is continuous exposition of sacred books, and other parts of what is called theological science, which, if expounded in the pulpit, are too argumentative to harmonize with acts of devotion. Minds unequal to receive such lectures would depart with the children before they began. This is but an outline of the developments which might make the Sunday less formal and more beneficial; the ministry more fruitful and more honored.

Certain dissenting churches, and probably (if I were well enough informed) some ministers of Anglican churches also, have lectures and popular teachings in their schools, where questions can be asked by members of the audience; but, as far as I ever heard, on week-days only. They do not take advantage of the fact that Sunday is the special day of leisure for such things, and that on Sunday the people are already assembled. In the suggestions here made, I have wished not to go beyond that which an educated and reasonable Puritan might approve. Philanthropic action, and debate concerning it, must, according to their strictest views, be appropriate to Sunday; so is an eminently simple meal, promotive of kind feeling between different ranks. The conversation during the meal would be in accordance with their own view of what Sunday conversation ought to be,—whether more strict, or less. The topics of lectures here named are such as harmonize with the ecclesiastical temperament Puritanically limited. Nevertheless, I see not how to doubt that the increased learning of the dissenting ministers through collegiate instruction cannot fail to open their eyes to the utter fatuity of identifying our first day with the Sabbath. The Italian language, the modern Greek and the Arabic, have no other word to denote Saturday but simply Sabbath. Thus is Baret's Italian Dictionary, you find: "Sabbato, Sabbato, s. m., Saturday, the seventh day. Sabbato santo, holy Saturday." This is, in all three nations, an undeniably unbroken tradition, coming down from the earliest times, and even singly is enough to disprove the arbitrary fiction—of which the first Protestant reformers had never so much as heard,—that Sunday is the Sabbath. Even the obstinate ignorance of the Evangelicals will have to give way. But it may be added that learned Jews emphatically protest against the notion that intellectual cultivation was ever forbidden on their Sabbath.

The social history of England more and more manifests the deplorable evils which have arisen from the ever declining influence of religion upon the action of the State. Statesmen and generals cannot be chosen for their religious or moral character. Though Admiral Lord Nelson had a daughter born of adultery, he was not the less buried in Westminster Abbey. A prime minister however virtuous, cannot be a despot; hence his measures of legislation or of execution are controlled and almost moulded by the morality prevailing among political men, with whom ambition and avarice have predominant sway. Under every constitutional government, be it monarchical or republican, wealth has enormous power, not only by direct influence on dependents, but by its easy command of tools which enable it to blind and pervert public opinion. However much a minister, or even a whole ministry, may desire to act for moral interests, these are almost always subordinated to political convenience, or the wishes of rich men. There is no one to moralize the action of the State, if the churches neglect it; hence the foul impurities, rank injustices, and besotted ignorances, equal to those of Paganism, which domineer among us. They never could have reached such a height but for the moral ruin of the Church which the restoration of Charles II. caused. We have not at all recovered from that deadly mischief. To go into the matter in detail, would carry me wide. Suffice it to say, that while Calvin, and perhaps the Puritans, wanted the State, in its care for public morality, to cripple individual freedom too much, since Charles II., the State has become reckless, and seldom takes cognizance of morality at all. Whether the churches can ever recover their social influence, so as to infuse morality into a State dominated by mammon, I cannot foresee; but obviously it is very much wanted; and no possibility of it opens, unless they will reorganize and regenerate their use of the Sunday.

THE INFLATION QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your issues of October 14, 21, and 28, R. P. H. published and reviewed certain financial statements which I have had printed on envelopes, for sale and circulation. I shall pass over what he says of the good results of being honest, as in this we agree; but in the rest of his article I find several points which demand a reply.

It seems to me that the principal assumption in his first article is answered in his second. The assumption is that the banks do not get $370,000,000 from the government,—that they do not get anything, because the government has "parted with nothing." In the second article, he says he knows a "wool firm that borrows largely of the banks." What does the firm borrow? Just what the banks get from the government! I will not dispute with him as to whether, when the wool firm gives its note for $100,000, it takes rags or money from the bank. Whatever the material, the firm pays interest for it, buys wool with it, and, to induce the bank to loan, leaves ten per cent. of the sum for the bank to retain. But I shall be surprised if R. P. H. does not reprimand that wool firm for promising to pay the bank $100,000, and then only handing the bank the firm's check, which, at best, commands either greenbacks or the "nothings" the bank gets from the government.

I do not object to the banking business, or to individuals combining to receive deposits and discount paper; but I do object to a law by which certain corporations can get from the government, for nothing, a material which has a purchasing power equal to United States Notes, and nearly equal to gold coin, and which can be loaned on good commercial paper, at from four and one-half to seven per cent. interest, and on other securities, for double these rates. I say they get this capital for nothing, because the tax that the banks pay the government is not peculiar to them. What business does not pay tax? Indeed what business does not pay a greater tax than the national banking business?

But admitting that the banks have paid the government a large amount in taxes—R. P. H. says $75,000,000; the comptroller of the currency reports less than $58,000,000 (see last report, page 138),—have they not made a much larger sum, by loaning at interest to the people, the notes furnished by the government. And it must not be forgotten that the interest paid to the banks by the government is in gold coin, while the banks pay taxes to the government in currency.

The fostering care of the government has too long been extended to the National Banks. Acting under one law, having one object, controlling over a thousand million dollars, their power is to be dreaded rather than eulogized. Their accumulation of wealth is alarming. After building palaces for offices, paying salaries so high as to "encourage extravagance"; paying millions in taxes; paying their stockholders nearly ten per cent. dividends, in 1874 (see report of comptroller of the currency), they still have (see same authority, report, Nov. 12), in "surplus funds and undivided profits," over $187,000,000!—$21,000,000 more than "the stock of specie in the whole country."

As the National Bank Act now stands, any combination of persons who can control at least $50,000 in United States Bonds can form a bank, and the Secretary of the Treasury will furnish them with about $45,000 in National Bank Notes.

If the law were so changed that any one having a $1000 or even a $100 United States Bond could get from the United States Treasury ninety-five per cent., or the par value of the bond, in a circulating medium, the law would be more impartial. It would be still further improved if the government should charge, say four per cent., for the loan of these notes; but a greater improvement would be to repeal the National Bank Act, and replace the $380,000,000 of National Bank Notes with United States Notes, made, not promises to pay, but full legal tenders, redeemable in bonds payable at the option of the government, as the "1881's" are.

In R. P. H.'s first article, he says, "The bonds are not placed with the government as a security for the notes." By referring to any National Bank Note, you will find printed upon it, "This note is secured by bonds of the United States, deposited with the United States Treasurer at Washington."

R. P. H. thinks the government dishonored because it does not pay the greenbacks on demand and in gold coin. Why does he overlook the National Bank Notes? A greenback that lies before me has on its face, "The United States promises to pay the bearer ten dollars." Neither "coin" nor "time" are named. A Massachusetts National Bank Note that I have just looked at, has on its face, "The Milbury National Bank will pay to bearer on demand five dollars." Now if the greenback is a "lie," with no time fixed for payment, what is the National Bank Note which promises to pay "on demand"? When the greenbacks were issued, those to whom the government paid them had the right to fund them in six per cent. United State Bonds at par. The money power had a law passed in 1867, depriving the holder of that right, and now insults the people by talking of honesty, and calls those "inflationists" and "repudiators," who are trying to get Congress to pass a law by which the holders of United States Notes may redeem them in bonds bearing 3.65 per cent. interest.

One of R. P. H.'s school, a correspondent of yours, in his reply to Mr. Werner Boecklin's question, "How can you resume with $800,000,000 of paper and only $200,000,000 of gold?" said, "We can have our government repeal the law which makes the greenback a legal tender." To do this would be more dishonest than taking away the funding power of the greenback. This party reads us homilies on integrity and honor, and yet, after the government has paid to its citizens hundreds of millions of its debts in this money, and has it in full circulation all over the country, they would have Congress change the conditions of the bargain, and take away the quality that made the notes acceptable when they were issued.

Pass such a law, and the difference between the greenback and gold would be as great as during the war, and the banks would have the whole advantage.

To illustrate: The banks have a deposit line, that is, money due to their customers, of about $665,000,000, and a discount line, or promises of their customers to pay certain sums at certain times, amounting to about $980,000,000. Now as neither party can pay gold to the other, when the individual customer refuses, he can and will be protested and sued; but when the bank refuses, it will neither be protested nor sued. The one may be ruined; the other will flourish.

As proof of this, see the action of the banks toward individuals in 1873. Every customer who could not pay was protested, and many were ruined. Every bank in the country failed, and forfeited its charter. But who protested, who sued them? It would be an unequal contest.

R. P. H.'s last article treats of inflation and repudiation. What is "inflation"? It is any issue of paper beyond the quantity of gold on hand. Two paper dollars afloat, with only one gold dollar to redeem them, leave one dollar floating without gold security.

Secretary Bristow, in his last report, page 22, estimates the "stock of specie in the country to be about $166,000,000," including not only the coin in the United States Treasury, but also all the specie and bullion in the country. The comptroller of the currency reports over $766,000,000 of paper afloat. Here is $600,000,000 without a gold basis, and this is admitting that the government can get possession of or control the $166,000,000, which is, judging from the official statements made monthly, for the last ten years, about $100,000,000 more than the government can control.

Now if R. P. H. proposes to withdraw these $600,000,000, the taxes must be increased just that amount; for if the United States Treasurer is "to burn to ashes" any portion over and above what he wants to pay out, he must increase the taxes just so much. This cannot be done without crushing our already languishing industries; but if it is attempted, and our currency is reduced from $766,000,000 to $166,000,000, the government could no longer pay interest on its bonds, and thus practical repudiation would be brought about.

The contractionists are the real repudiators; they, like others who demand the pound of flesh, institute plans that may end in their own destruction.

The theory that our money must have an intrinsic value is false; it will not work. It is not practical, if gold coin of the present weight and fineness is to be our only money. To-day we have two standards of value; and, although theorists and learned professors, persons who know but little of the practical application of their plans to business life, have decided that money must have an intrinsic value, and that gold coin only is money, the logic of events, the public opinion that precedes law, have made the greenback dollar the standard by which everything home-grown and home-made is bought and sold. It is the natural growth toward commercial freedom; the liberation from a money which, being limited in amount, can be monopolized.

Astor and Stewart have more than enough real estate and other security to buy and pack away all the "stock of specie" in the country.

What a monstrous doctrine it is, that our money, the life-blood of our prosperity, should be of a material that two of our citizens can control.

An increase of paper money does not necessarily increase the premium on gold. Carl Schurz shows in a speech in Ohio—portions of which you copied with approbation—that our paper money has steadily increased for the last four or five years; yet in spite of that the premium on gold has steadily fallen. Within six months it fell, in the course of thirty days, some four to six per cent., with the volume of paper money unchanged.

There is some other cause than more or less paper money that puts gold up or down. Increase our exports, and gold will fall, even if at the same time we increase our paper money. To enable us to increase exports, we must supply those who manufacture with plenty of money, and at a low rate of interest.

One other sentence. R. P. H. asks what would be thought of an individual who should refuse to pay a debt that is due, under the plea of saving interest. This is irrelevant, because it is a false assumption that the debt is due, and that a government should be bound as individuals are; for a government may do many things that individuals may not.

E. M. DAVIS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov., 1875.

[Any one who reads the articles reviewed in the above letter will see that, so far from assuming that the banks "do not get anything" from the government, I state distinctly that they "get" authority to incorporate as banks of issue. I say "the banks . . . are authorized to issue currency." The inflationists construe this authorization by the government as a loan of money, and I simply correct their mistake. Mr. Davis must stick to his text, and not substitute another, and a very different one, unless he wishes to confuse the mind of the reader, as well as his own. The question is not, whether the banks "get anything," or whether they "get anything" worth acquiring. The question is, Is it true, as Mr. Davis asserts, that they "borrow of the nation . . . $370,000,000, without interest, and are paid interest . . . on the securities deposited for the loan?" To a somewhat carefully prepared paper showing that they do not, and stating what their relation to the government really is, Mr. Davis replies with an irrelevant discussion of the value of bank-notes for banking purposes, a subject upon which there is probably but slight difference of opinion. Such discussion only serves to divert the reader's attention from the real question, and therefore I decline to join in it.

Mr. Davis says, "I do object to a law by which certain corporations can get from the government, for nothing, a material which has a purchasing power equal to United States notes." . . . So should I, if such a law existed. The fact is, the "law," by which a bank is authorized to issue currency, imposes "a duty of one-half of one per centum each half year upon the average amount of its notes in circulation" (sec. 5,214). Other taxes are imposed upon the banks, but this is a duty charged directly upon their notes, the "material" which Mr. Davis says they "can get . . . for nothing." He has entirely overlooked my reference to this "duty," in my article, October 21. I there say, "I do not approve the 'National Bank Act' in its entirety. Certain amendments, in my judgment, might be made with advantage to the government, and without injustice to the banks. I would, for example, advocate an increase of the present tax upon their circulation."

Mr. Davis asks the question, "If the greenback is a 'lie,' with no time fixed for payment, what is the National Bank Note which promises to pay 'on demand'?" The answer is, The greenback is a promise to pay in coin, which is broken as often as the greenback is presented for redemption. The National Bank Note is a promise to pay in greenbacks, which is performed whenever the note is presented for redemption.

If Mr. Davis had read with any care my statement of the amount paid by the banks to the government in taxes, he would have been saved the trouble of amending it. In estimating the amount at "more than $75,000,000," I say, "this amount includes assessments for the current year." My estimate is based upon the last annual report of the comptroller of the currency (page 19), and is correct.

If, in the articles reviewed, I emphasize one fact more than another, it is the fact that bonds are placed with the government as a security for the notes. I say, "The banks purchase government bonds, . . . and are authorized to issue currency based upon them." And again, "the bonds upon which the bank currency is based are placed in the custody of the government, not as security for a loan to the banks, . . . but as a measure of protection to the people. Their deposit in the United States Treasury is a guarantee of the redemption of the bank currency, as agreed." In the face of these direct statements of mine, Mr. Davis attributes to me the following remarkable assertion: "The bonds are not placed with the government as a security for the notes." He actually quotes this sentence as one of mine, and gravely proceeds to refute it. Of course no such sentence or statement can be found in anything I have ever written, and I am at a loss to account for such a startling substitution of language for that of the text.

To so much of the above letter as covers a statement of Mr. Davis's views, I do not propose to reply. His theories, as presented by himself, have already been examined, and I am content to let this more elaborate restatement of them pass without comment; but having shown how careless he is in his construction of my statements, and in his quotation of my language, I trust the reader will see the importance of a reference to the articles themselves, reviewed by Mr. Davis, in order to understand fairly the value of his objections to them.

R. P. H.]

HOLYOAKE'S NEW BOOK.

A curious and very readable volume is the first of George Jacob Holyoake's History of Coöperation. Although a first volume, it has a completeness in itself, representing the "Pioneer Period." There is little to interest those who think of coöperation in a purely commercial light; but the work is extremely valuable to those who care more for the discoveries of a principle than for its mere mechanical expansion or multiplication. After all, a romance will cling to Watt—sitting in his mother's chimney-corner, more interested in the tea-kettle than the tea—which all the railway system does not possess. Columbus in his little barque is a more picturesque figure than all the Cunard captains put together. Holyoake rightly sees that the power which coöperation has reached in Great Britain is less impressive than the moral enthusiasm out of which it grew. No man now living knows more of the men who pioneered this movement when it bore the various formidable names of Socialism, Communism, Heresy, and so forth. He was the friend and comrade of those brave, poetic seekers of a new moral world, and his friends will read on every page what he is too modest to write: Quorum magna pars fui. He dedicates his book as follows: "To Wendell Phillips, of America, a country where what is new is welcome; what is true expands: to him whose intrepid eloquence, confronting dangerous majorities, animating forlorn hopes, has ever been generously exerted on behalf of the slave, black or white, in bondage to planter or capitalist, this history of the Pioneer Period of Coöperation in England is inscribed, in gratitude and regard, by George Jacob Holyoake." There is a good deal of appropriateness in this association of radical social movements with America. There is in Bradford an old house, over the door of which is the Declaration of Independence cut in stone. It was put there early in this century by a radical Squire, Farrar, who built the house. The general impression was that the world recommenced about that time. But Mr. Holyoake dates the new-world makers farther back. He does homage to Sir Thomas More's "Utopia" (1516), and Harrington's agrarian "Oceana," dedicated to Cromwell (1656), who said that "what he had won by the sword he was not going to be scribbled out of by Mr. Harrington," though Hume said it was "the most valuable model of a commonwealth which had been offered to the public." Then came (1696) John Bellers, a Quaker, with his scheme for a College of Industry, which Robert Owen reprinted, regarding it as, in a large extent, an anticipation of his own aim. Then in the eighteenth century came Morelly, a Frenchman, trying "to find that state of things in which it should be impossible for any one to be deprived or poor." Mr. Holyoake gives a brief account too of Babeuf and his fellow conspirators in Paris (1796), who wished to establish equality by force, and found that the force was on the other side. They lost their heads, metaphorically and then literally. St. Simon and Fourier are also referred to. With the fourth chapter the author begins his real history with Robert Owen and New Lanark. Fifty pages are devoted to "The Enthusiastic Period" (1820 and 1830), when the mind of prosaic England was raised into glowing fantasy of dreams.

Besides Robert Owen, Francis Place, William Pare, William Thompson, the Combes (Abram, George, and Andrew), Allen Davenport, and many others, fairly bourgeoned out with theories and schemes, wise and otherwise. Among the notions is mentioned one which was to rectify the world by the science of "Somatopsychonologia," and I save the reader the trouble of looking into his Greek lexicon by saying that the compound refers to body, soul, and mind. The Coöperative Magazine in 1826 seems to have published many queer things, such as papers on the "Unhappiness of the Higher Orders," and the means of remedying the same. How close some of these enthusiasts were to fatuity is particularly shown by the fact that one Hamilton, a cunning satirist, wrote a burlesque of Robert Owen's marriage ideas, and sent it to the above organ, which printed it in simple faith as a serious scheme. Such caricatures as this would hardly have injured the Socialists had it not been for their religious radicalism. Many of the titled and wealthy were disposed at first to unite with Mr. Owen until offended by his infidelity, when one by one they forsook him.

The first London Coöperative Society was formed in 1824. In 1826 numbers of such societies were formed throughout the Kingdom. But it seems to have been a very long time before these men got out of their sentimental mist, and perceived that, if their idea was to prosper, it must be in coöperation with the great practical tendencies of the world that is, and that they could by no means evolve any other world. It is impossible to read such books as this of Holyoake's—and I may add the autobiographies of such men as Robert Dale Owen, Samuel Bamford, etc.—without feeling that the long agitation struck out a good deal of vigorous character, and stimulated much of the intellectual activity which the present inherits; but at the same time it is equally plain that a great deal of mental and money power was wasted. Coöperation was always the fundamental fact of human society; every stage-coach was, as every railway-train is, a coöperative institution. What these men had to do was to try and extend the existing plan, and that could be done only by showing that families could save money by uniting for other things than they now have in common. The coöperation movement as it is now spreading—and the London Times has this week devoted three columns to the subject, showing that it is the most growing principle in the country—really means the net result of all such dreams and enthusiasms, from Fourier and St. Simon to the fading glories of the Owens. It took so much on the long or poetic arm of the lever to lift the prosaic pounds which now begin to rise.—M. D. C., in Cincinnati Commercial.

MR. SPURGEON is credited with the following, which, if not true, is ben trovato. He is said to have been taken to task by some Sabbatarian since he has found it necessary to employ a brougham to take him to church: "But," he urged, "I only sit still in the carriage; I don't work." "Ah, yes, sir," said the other; "but your coachman—think of him!" "Oh, he is a Jew, and keeps the seventh day Sabbath." "But your horse?" "Oh," said Spurgeon, getting a little impatient, "he is a Jew, too!"

DERZHAVIN'S "ODE TO GOD."

[The author of this famous ode was a Russian, born in 1763. After serving some time in the army, he was made successively a Councillor of State, Ambassador of Senate, President of the College of Commerce, Public Cashier, and, in 1802, Minister of Justice. The poem has been translated into Japanese by order of the Emperor, and is hung up, embroidered with gold, in the Temple of Jeddo. It has been translated into the Chinese and Tartar languages, written on a piece of rich silk, and suspended in the Imperial Palace of Peking.]

O Thou Eternal One! whose presence bright
All space doth occupy—all motion guide;
Unchanged through Time's all-devastating flight,
Thou only God! There is no God beside.
Being above all beings! Mighty One!
Whom none can comprehend, and none explore;
Who fillest existence with Thyself alone;
Embracing all—supporting—ruling o'er—
Being whom we call God—and know no more!

In its sublime research, Philosophy
May measure out the ocean deep—may count
The sands, or the sun's rays; but God! for Thee
There is no weight nor measure; none can mount
Up to Thy mysteries. Reason's brightest spark,
Though kindled by Thy light, in vain would try
To trace Thy counsels, infinite and dark;
And thought is lost ere thought can soar so high,
E'en like past moments in eternity.

Thou, from primeval nothingness, didst call
First chaos, then existence. Lord, on Thee
Eternity had its foundation; all
Sprung forth from Thee; of light, joy, harmony,
Sole origin—all life, all beauty, Thine.
Thy word created all, and doth create;
Thy splendor fills all space with rays divine;
Thou art, and wert, and shalt be glorious, great!
Light-giving, life-sustaining Potentate.

Thy chains the unmeasured universe surround,
Upheld by Thee, by Thee inspired by breath!
Thou the beginning with the end hath bound,
And beautifully mingled Life and Death!
As sparks mount upward from the fiery blaze,
So suns are born, so worlds spring forth from Thee!
And as the spangles in the sunny rays
Shine round the silver snow, the pageantry
Of Heaven's bright army glitters in Thy praise!

A million torches, lighted by Thy hand,
Wander unwearied through the blue abyss;
They own Thy power, accomplish Thy command,
All gay with light, all eloquent with bliss.
What shall we call them? Piles of crystal light,
A glorious company of golden streams?
Lamps of celestial ether burning bright?
Suns, lighting systems with their joyous beams?
But Thou to these art as the moon to night.

Yet, as a drop of water in the sea,
All this magnificence in Thee is lost;
What are ten thousand worlds compared to Thee?
And what am I, then? Heaven's unnumbered host,
Though multiplied by myriads, and arrayed
In all the glory of sublimest thought,
Is but an atom in the balance, weighed Against Thy greatness—is a cipher brought Against infinity! What am I then? Naught.

Naught! but the effluence of Thy light divine,
Pervading worlds, hath reached my bosom, too;
Yes, in my spirit doth Thy Spirit shine,
As shines the sunbeam in a drop of dew.
Naught! but I live, and on hope's pinions fly
Eager toward Thy presence; for in Thee
I live, and breathe, and dwell; aspiring high,
Even to the Throne of Thy divinity!
I am, O God, and surely Thou must be!

Thou art; directing, guiding all, Thou art!
Direct my understanding, then, to Thee;
Control my spirit, guide my wandering heart;
Though but an atom 'midst immensity,
Still I am something fashioned by Thy hand,
I hold a middle rank, 'twixt Heaven and Earth,
On the last verge of mortal being stand,
Close to the realms where angels have their birth,
Just on the boundaries of the spirit land!

The chain of being is complete in me;
In me is matter's last gradation lost,
And the next step is Spirit-Deity!
I can command the lightning, and am dust;
A monarch and a slave; a worm, a God.
Whence came I here, and how? So marvellously
Constructed and conceived—unknown. This clod
Lives surely through some higher energy;
For from itself alone it could not be.

Creator! Yes! Thy wisdom and Thy word
Created me. Thou source of life and good;
Thou Spirit of my spirit, and my Lord;
Thy light, Thy love, in their bright plenitude,
Filled me with an immortal soul to spring
Over the abyss of death, and bade it wear
The garments of eternal day, and wing
Its heavenly flight beyond this little sphere—
Even to its source—to Thee, its Author—there.

O thought ineffable! O visions blest!
(Though worthless our conceptions all of Thee.)
Yet shall thy shadowed image fill our breast,
And wait its homage to Thy Deity.
God! thus alone my lowly thoughts can soar;
Thus seek Thy presence, Being wise and good!
'Midst Thy vast works, admire, obey, adore;
And when the tongue is eloquent no more,
The soul shall speak in tears of gratitude.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 13.

A. Loos, $3.20; H. G. Spencer, $3.20; S. Durell, $10; E. H. Warbasse, $3.20; A. A. Roberts, $6.75; H. T. Wright, $3; J. B. Stallo, $8.60; Junkermann & Haas, $3.20; F. H. Guivits, 30 cents; Geo. Iles, 50 cents; Mrs. H. E. Howe, 45 cents; Frederick Sargent, $6; Geo. Lewis, $3.20; A. J. Davis, 90 cents; Wm. Courtenay, $1.45; Faltin Olsen, $1; A. Darrow, $3.20; G. K. Hulier, $3.30; Geo. Iles, $3.20; C. A. W. Crosby, $3.20; Theo. Brown, $10; M. B. Bryant, $20; Jas. A. Dupee, $10; Geo. A. Bourne, $13.20; Chas. T. How, $30; John W. Chadwick, $13.20; J. W. D. Palmer, $10; Alex. Fix, $3.20; J. W. Braley, $3.20; G. G. Briggs, $9; F. W. Woodward, $3.20; J. Farnsworth, $3.20; H. S. Bancroft, $4.70; J. Vila Blake, $3.50; C. Hendee, $1.60; S. W. Coburn, $1; C. W. Story, $3.20; E. T. Grosford, $6; W. H. Rice, $2.50; Josiah Wilson, $1.90; H. S. Griggs, 75 cents; E. B. McKenzie, $3; Jas. Davison, $3.25; David Edwards, 50 cents; Chas. H. White, $2; Thos. Tasker, $2; New England News Co., $14.77; J. R. Hawley, $1.80; T. B. Skinner, $1.10; H. K. Oliver, Jr., $40; James Edly, $20; Seth Hunt, $10; John W. Bigelow, $20; H. L. B. Bostwick, $10; J. D. Zimmermann, $10; Phoebe A. Zimmermann, $10; Arthur M. Lee, $10; Benj. Hollowell, $10; Wm. Wiley, $10; H. D. Bennett, $5; F. Frothingham, $3.20; C. K. Matthews, $3.20; Leopold Goepfer, $3.50; P. B. Sibley, 10 cents; E. J. Holmes, $2.25; Carl H. Horsch, $20; Eliz. S. Miller, $10; G. Wolcott, $3; G. Chatterton, $1.50; Wm. Newman, $3.20; L. P. Babb, $2; R. H. Townsend, 75 cents; Mrs. M. M. Ballou, $10; Mrs. Benj. Ireson, $13.95; Cash, $2.25.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 18, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

WE ARE glad to report the contribution of one dollar to the "Holyoke Fund," sent by Mr. David Prince, of Jacksonville, Ill., and heartily wish we could report a thousand more.

ONE OF OUR subscribers, alluding to the declaration of the Orthodox clergyman at the funeral of Frederick Hudson that the dreadful accident by which Mr. Hudson had perished was a "dispensation of Providence," gently chides us as follows: "I read THE INDEX, and circulate after reading, and shall soon be able to send you some subscribers: my only fault is that you do not deal severely enough with such ideas as are spoken in just such cases as the one above referred to."

AN ANONYMOUS CORRESPONDENT informs us that the Mr. Chadwick "signalled" by Mr. Moody to "give the benediction" was "a good Methodist brother," and not Rev. John W. Chadwick of Brooklyn, as we had supposed. Our informant (whom we thank for his correction) adds of Mr. Moody: "Wouldn't the time be as wisely spent in imitating his zeal as in finding fault with his theology?" Yes! And we therefore hope to see a new Liberal League started forthwith by our zealous friend.

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

REV. T. B. FORBUSH, the Unitarian minister at Cleveland, Ohio, did excellent service in the late political campaign in the cause of secular schools; and he has just delivered a fine lecture on "Compulsory Education," on the invitation of twenty-five or thirty leading citizens, who also sent him a complimentary letter of acknowledgment. His county gave a thousand larger majority than Hayes had in the whole State; and it is said to have been due in great measure to Mr. Forbush's labors. Honor to all who are willing to join in the necessary work of explaining the secular principle to a nation which swamps justice in bibliolatry!

PROFESSOR JENNEY's report that gold in paying quantities is to be found in the Black Hills will provoke new attempts to violate our treaty with the Indians, who refuse to sell except at a fair price. The Boston Advertiser remarks with spiciness: "This report will cause a new impatience to arise in the breast of the hardy frontiersman, and the military authorities will find it more difficult to meet and turn back all the eager emigrants. But the negotiations for the purchase of the territory from the Indians, who hold it by treaty title, having proved ineffectual, the government is still bound to protect the legal owners in their wish to occupy the hills exclusively. Professor Jenney will probably have a report ready for submission to Congress when it meets, and that body will attempt to decide whether the necessity of pushing civilization into every region where money is to be made requires that the nation shall repudiate its solemn treaties with men who are not white, and who do not know the use of the table-fork. The perversity of the red men, as shown by their reluctance to give away gold mines for little or nothing, is calculated to make Christians grieve."

THE "LOVE OF NATURE."

For every one, however humble, the centre of the universe is his own soul. He must see and hear all things as they report themselves to his own eyes and ears; he must understand all things as they are cognized by his own mental faculties. Truth for him is what his own intellect discerns of the infinite multiplicity of existences and their relations; duty is for him what his own conscience commands to be done in the kaleidoscopic changes of situations and events. His perceptions are indeed limited and not unmingled with error; but they are his perceptions—he has and can have no others—he cannot possibly exchange them for the perceptions of another. His moral decisions are certainly fallible and dependent on the degree of his moral enlightenment; nevertheless, they are clothed for him with the supreme sanctity, and speak with an authority which overtops every other. To accept with blind submission the revelations or decrees of any other individual, or of any book or institution, is to unhinge his own intellectual and moral nature, and to extinguish his own individuality to that extent. How is it possible to evade the destiny which has made each one of us the centre of the universe?

The sea-shell which we have built out of our own being into determinate character receives the innumerable waves of air rolling in upon us from all quarters of the cosmos; and we give out from it exactly such resonant music as the structure we have made is fitted to render. The soul thus echoes back the multitudinous spiritual influences of the All, which have acquired audibility only by first becoming centralized and vivified, as it were, in the interior of some spiritual being. Universal Nature has for each of us its own centre in himself; it speaks through each of us an independent and original word to all the rest. This is the substantial truth which is contained in the theological statement that "God reveals himself in man."

These illimitable and confluent influences of the cosmos, when given a voice of music by being thus united and poured through a fine character, include a great deal more than the mere reciprocal influences exerted by one human character on another. What speaks to the world out of such an intellect as that of Shakspeare, or out of such an art-genius as that of Beethoven or Raphael, or out of such a life as that of Buddha, Jesus, or Socrates, is a great deal more than can be accounted for by the mere influence of man on man. Every great poet and artist, at least, has a susceptibility to spiritual impressions from external Nature which lies at the root of his divinest power to charm and to elevate; and the noblest triumph of his genius is not so much the poem, the picture, the statue, the symphony, as a heightened susceptibility to these same impressions in the minds of all who can appreciate him. It is his own profound communion with universal Nature, and his power to induce a profound communion with it in other minds, which really constitutes him a genius; and, since communion is impossible between two that are utterly unlike, the very existence of his art is a proof seemingly irrefutable of a certain spiritual likeness between Nature and Man which religion, in all its higher manifestations, has never ceased to affirm. The "love of Nature" which is vaguely recognized by the world at large as the indispensable mark of a great poetic or artistic mind is a veritable passion; it thrills, it exalts, it inspires, it masters; it is no figure of speech, but one of the surest and most wonderful facts in the history of the race; and it is a fact pregnant with great consequences which will inevitably come within the domain of science, when science herself shall have learned how vast her domain is yet to be. What is that in Nature which can excite such a passion? Is love possible where no spiritual likeness exists? If there is a spiritual likeness between Nature and Man, can Man boast wisely or truly that all spiritual being is circumscribed by the narrow limits of his own being? If spiritual being is vaster than human being, can it be any less vast than the universe itself? If the universe itself, in all its infinity, is kindred to the human spirit, can it be capable of exciting the "love of Nature," yet incapable of returning it? Such questions as these may seem bewildering or meaningless to many; yet none the less do we believe that, at some day not infinitely remote, they will be questions seriously and most thoughtfully pondered by those whose only path to truth is the path of science. We do not venture, even in our own mind, to answer them dogmatically; but we do think that the answers they suggest are corroborated by so many independent lines of thought that there is little room for scornful or flippant denials. Art, no less than religion, craves a unity in the universe higher than that of mere mechanics or physics; and she offers a field of inquiry in this direction which will not always be left untrodden by the wise and great. The pearl is worth diving for, even at the cost of difficulty and pain.

THE HINDU "UNKNOWABLE."

On a re-reading recently of the old Hindu Vedic Ode to Creation, of which Max Müller furnishes such a fine metrical translation, I was so freshly struck by the power of it that I wanted to recall it to readers of THE INDEX already familiar with it, and perchance introduce it to some who have not seen it. This is the translation from the ancient Sanskrit, which Müller gives, aided, as he says, by a friend:—

"Nor Aught nor Naught existed; you bright sky
Was not, nor heaven's broad roof outstretched above.
What covered all? what sheltered? what concealed?
Was it the water's fathomless abyss?
There was not death—yet there was naught immortal;
There was no confine betwixt day and night;
The only One breathed breathless by itself,—
Other than It there nothing since has been.
Darkness there was, and all at first was veiled
In gloom profound—an ocean without light:
The germ that still lay covered in the husk
Burst forth, one nature, from the fervent heat.
Then first came love upon it, the new spring
Of mind,—yea, poets in their hearts discerned,
Pondering, this bond between created things
And uncreated. Comes this spark from earth,
Piercing and all-pervading, or from heaven?
Then seeds were sown, and mighty powers arose—
Nature below, and power and will above.
Who knows the secret? who proclaimed it here,
Whence, whence this manifold creation sprang?
The gods themselves came later into being—
Who knows from whence this great creation sprang?
He from whom all this great creation came,
Whether his will created or was mute,
The Most High Seer that is in highest heaven,
He knows it—or perchance even He knows not."

This hymn is believed to be among the oldest portions of the oldest Veda. Perhaps it was written two thousand years before the Christian era. Though this metrical version in thought and phrase be so sublime, it corresponds very closely with what are given as literal translations,—more closely than metrical renderings into another language usually do. Indeed, both the spirit and melody of the Vedic hymns would doubtless be much better given by good metrical versions than by the ordinary prose translations of them. In this Ode to Creation, however, finely as it is rendered in the main, I have noticed that on one or two points a delicate shade of thought that appears in the literal translation is sacrificed to the metre in the poetical version.

But the most wonderful thing about it is the mental grasp of the poem. It is full of seed-thoughts, and contains the kernels of nearly all the philosophies that have since existed. There is a foreshadowing of Hegel in the first line. Another line suggests Spinoza. Pantheism, Gnosticism, Mysticism, pervade the ode throughout. One line of it is thoroughly theistic. Yet there are portions of it in which modern Positivists and Materialists would recognize a kindred spirit to themselves. It touches the very heart of the problem which is agitating both the scientific and the religious world to-day—the relation of matter to intelligence, of nature to will, of atoms to forces and life. Here is the doctrine of the evolution of the world from a nebulous, chaotic mass; here is protoplasm; here is the problem dividing modern scientists (if we may use the big words) of Biogenesis or Abiogenesis. Here is Tyndall's statement, that matter contains "the promise and potency of all terrestrial life"; and here, too, is the question which Tyndall has also asked impliedly, but which neither he nor any other has answered in any better way than it is answered here,—the question, Whence the "promise" and the "potency"?

The unexpected turn of thought in the last line to some readers, perhaps, may seem to spoil the climax. But to my mind it carries the climax to the sublimest height, and reveals the grand simplicity of a true artist; for it is not the necessary nor the most rational interpretation to assume that the last clause was intended to question whether the "Most High Seer in highest heaven," regarded as creator of the world, was possessed of conscious intelligence; but rather does this clause give the profound hint that such creating Being, or any Deity, however wise and powerful, whom man could conceive as creating the world, might not reach back to the Supreme First Cause of all, nor know the great final secret whence he himself and all things came. Behind the known ever stretches the mysterious Unknown. Behind Him is It; behind Brahmā, Brahm.

If this bit of reference to an old Hindu poem were to be closed with a moral, let it be thus: a people who have in their Sacred Books such a gem of spiritual literature as is quoted above, have little need to be converted to any other religion than their own.

W. J. P.

WEST WISCONSIN NOTES.

At this writing, the Bible in the Schools question in Chicago is in statu quo. A week ago a committee, representing some of the legal and judicial talent of the city, presented a strong protest against the action of the School Board in excluding the Bible from the public schools of the city. They take the ground that "the civilization of this country is not that of Confucius, the Vedas, or of pagan Rome, nor is it the civilization of the philosophy of Greece, or of modern times. (?) It is a Christian civilization,—a civilization founded on the moral principles of the Bible. All we are, and all we boast of as a people, we owe to the moral teaching of the Bible, which embodies the only system of ethics calculated to elevate and purify a people. Whatever of civilization and culture the enemies of the Bible possess, they owe to and have acquired from its teaching and influence. . . . This is a Christian country; ours is a Christian civilization. Our institutions and system of morals are based upon the Bible and its teachings. Our democracy is founded on the teachings of Christ," etc. This protest was referred to the Committee on Rules and Regulations. We have looked in vain for a counter-protest from the free school, and free religion, and free government friends of Chicago. Why do not the German Rationalists, the Hebrews, Unitarians, Spiritualists, and all Liberals, join in a protest against the repeal of the rule of the Board? Perhaps they know the matter is in the hands of friends. We are too far from the scene of action to learn the animus of the Committee on Rules and Regulations.

So far the only counter-protest appears to come from the Jewish Rabbi Felsenthal. It is an excellent paper. He takes up the arguments of the Protestants seriatim, and demolishes them with perfect ease. He reminds his Christian friends that this is not a Christian country, and ours is not a Christian civilization. He explains to them that Christian ethics are not at the bottom of our institutions. The ethics of Christianity is largely meekness, a passive submission to wrong, turning the other cheek to the smiter, etc.; whereas our modern civilization believes in standing up manfully for rights, and battling for them if necessary, and resisting and resenting wrong. If any one smites thee on one cheek, smite back through the law, by having him properly punished, and thereby help maintain the virtues of justice and manhood in the world. A "Christian State," he tells us, means not only a State whose institutions and laws are permeated by the spirit of Christian ethics, but it means a State wherein the Christian Church, or a branch of it, is acknowledged as the ruling State Church. The Papal States and the Kingdom of Naples were "Christian States" as long as they existed, because they recognized only one branch of the Christian religion and the Christian Church; namely, the Roman Catholic Church, while Jews and Protestants could only live there by sufferance. So were Mecklenburg and Norway, until a few years ago, Christian States, because their Constitutions declared the Protestant religion the State religion, and non-Protestants were denied equal rights with Protestants. So was Maryland, forty or fifty years ago, still a Christian State, because her Constitution then in force contained the clause that only believers in the Trinity were eligible, or appointable, to State offices. So was North Carolina not long since a Christian State, because her Constitution insisted that State offices could be filled only by confessors of the Christian religion. So was England a Christian State before she emancipated the Catholics in 1829, and opened the gates of the Parliament to the Jews in 1858; and of her it may be even said to-day that she is a Christian State, because there is an Established State Church there, to whose support Jews, Dissenters, and Catholics, are forced to pay their contributions, and because some high clerical dignitaries of the State are ex officio sitting as members in the upper Parliament. But, says he, these United States have no such sectarian and exclusive laws. Church and State are separated in this country (we would remind the Rabbi that they are not quite separated, and will not be until we have secured "The Demands of Liberalism" through Legislative enactments); and yet there are people who insist that ours is a "Christian" State and a "Christian" government, and demand that the Christian Bible, the Protestant Bible, be retained in our "Christian" schools, in order to "Christianize" our children. He appeals to the Board to stand firmly for the nineteenth century against the sixteenth—to exclude the Bible because our government is not Christian or Jewish or Pagan, but republican, and the Constitution provides that it shall favor no form of religion.

The Rabbi agrees with the Committee of Protestants that "the State has a right to train the future citizen in good morals." The school should be made an agent for elevating the nation to a higher plane of morality. Studies should be introduced which would have a tendency to ennoble the heart, to elevate the sentiment, to purify the affections, and strengthen the will to be good and do good, and to this end the Rabbi suggests rules and regulations for daily instruction in unsectarian ethics,—on the duties of children to themselves, to their parents, teachers, playmates, adults, and strangers. In higher grades lessons might be given on the duties of employers and employed, on the mutual relations of members of a family, in faithfulness in one's station in life, the duties of a citizen to the State, and the State to the citizen. In imparting such lessons, he thinks no one would object to some carefully selected passages from the Bible; and if there is no such text-book of unsectarian ethics extant, he suggests that the Board offer a prize for the best graded text-book in un denominational ethics.

The counter-protest of the Rabbi was referred, without discussion, to the Committee on rules and regulations, and thus the whole question hangs fire. If there is really danger that the late action of the Board be reconsidered and their rule rescinded, the silence of the radicals now proves a moral apathy which is not only stupid, but almost criminal. In a week or two we shall probably get the report of the sub-committee, and learn whether the liberals have been asleep or quietly reckoning with their host.

Yours fraternally,

W. H. S.

SPARTA, Wis., Nov. 8, 1875.

[I anticipate that in Chicago, as in Cincinnati in 1870, the Bible will be put back into the schools, simply because the unorganized liberals can exert no powerful influence on the Board of Education and the public at large. The liberals must either submit to oppression, or learn the lesson of effective organized resistance to it.—F. E. A.]

PERSONAL CRITICISM.

From a column of abuse of Mr. Wendell Phillips by the Nation, we select the following: "Mr. Phillips cannot be silenced; for his trade, in so far as he has one, is to talk, and he cannot be overthrown in argument, because he does not argue. He has never had much reasoning power, and now has almost none. He is probably more unscrupulous than he ever was, more reckless in his use of what he calls authorities, and in misquotation, and at the same time fully as fluent and abusive as he has ever been."

The value of personal criticism should be measured, in part at least, by the claims of the self-constituted critic upon public confidence. A leaf from the history of the Nation may enable us to judge of the competency of its editor in this direction.

The late Major Geo. L. Stearns, prominent for his life of devotion to the colored race, more than any other one man helped to establish the Nation. The paper was originally owned by a stock company. Major Stearns subscribed $12,000 of his own money to the enterprise, and was influential in obtaining other large subscriptions. Prior to the appointment of Mr. E. L. Godkin as editor, Major Stearns had several interviews with him, and was satisfied that he was "eminently fit" for the position. It was well understood that the paper was not to be an "organ," and was not "to be pledged in any direction." In less than three weeks from the issue of the first number, it was discovered that Mr. Godkin had pledged himself in advance to some gentlemen on the tariff question. He said in a letter subsequently published:—

"The fact is, I am awkwardly situated as respects free trade. A large amount of stock was subscribed in Philadelphia, and some here (New York), in the understanding that the Nation was not to be a free trade paper. I pledged myself, in fact, to discuss the tariff for the present, as a question of revenue. . . . This, of course, leaves me free as far as the letter goes; still, although I could not be induced to say a word in favor of protection, I feel bound in honor to some of the gentlemen who subscribed, not to come out at present in favor of free trade. This is an unfortunate state of things, I admit; but this is better than no paper at all."

Major Stearns was, of course, astonished by this revelation, and immediately demanded Mr. Godkin's resignation. He said: "Mr. Godkin, in giving a pledge not to discuss the tariff, violated the fundamental principle on which the Nation was established, and places himself in a false position to the stockholders." And again: "In future I could have no confidence in a man who could so deliberately violate his promise to me." In reply, with singular audacity, Mr. Godkin avowed that, had his letter "been intended for publication, it would have been more carefully worded"; and then to enable him to extricate himself from his "awkward" situation, he induced his protection friends to authorize him to state that his pledge was not considered a pledge by them. This was very considerate and magnanimous on the part of these gentlemen; but it did not relieve Mr. Godkin. To procure their subscription, he believed that it was necessary to pledge himself, and, no matter how they understood it, or were subsequently willing to construe it, his intention was to give them a pledge. Some of us were curious enough to ask how a man can feel "bound in honor," and not feel morally bound? Major Stearns pertinently asked, "Why," if he had not compromised himself, "was he awkwardly situated? He feels bound in honor to some gentlemen who subscribed not to come out, at present, in favor of free trade; but his honor does not extend to those gentlemen who subscribed on the express condition that the paper was not to be pledged in any direction."

Mr. Godkin's appreciation of moral responsibility, as shown in this affair, is the key to the subsequent career of the Nation. In less than one year from the publication of the first number, under Mr. Godkin's management, nearly $80,000—more than one-half of the capital—was lost for the stockholders, and the assets of the association passed into the hands of a receiver. This $80,000 constitutes the real financial basis of the Nation to-day; and though the original stockholders may have no legal interest, it is nevertheless true that the Nation now owned and conducted by Mr. Godkin and others, owes its existence largely to the liberality of Major Stearns and other gentlemen, who were grossly deceived by Mr. Godkin's professions.

The Nation was started as an independent paper. The editor was to have "autocratic" control of its columns. He was not to be pledged to any person, party, or policy; but of course the founders of the paper had an object in view, and that object was not a vague one. The Nation was established primarily to promote the interests of the freedmen. Mr. Garrison was so impressed with this belief that he recommended the paper as the legitimate successor of his renowned Liberator.

Gov. Andrew's committee for recruiting colored troops contributed $15,000 (a large part of its surplus fund) to the capital stock of the Nation, when under the impression that the freedmen were to be a special object of the paper. When in subsequent years, the Nation having been diverted from its original objects, this fact was published, and the attitude of the paper toward the freedmen was criticised, Mr. Godkin denied that he "either solicited, or instigated, or was in any way instrumental in procuring, the vote" of the recruiting committee, by which the $15,000 went into the Nation's treasury. This denial was simply evasion. No one had accused him of lobbying a job through the committee, but his moral responsibility for that vote was pointed out and abundantly proved. Finding himself again "awkwardly situated," he called upon his friends to extricate him. But it was to no purpose. They, unwittingly to be sure, appeared against him. One of them, Mr. W. P. Garrison, an assistant editor of the Nation, testified that, with Mr. Godkin's knowledge and approval, he appeared before the committee and had the original appropriation raised from $15,000 to $16,000. In a letter addressed to Mr. Godkin he says:—

"Early in July, 1865, being then assistant editor of the Nation, I went to Boston in the hope of completing there the capital stock of the paper, so far at least as to raise two thousand dollars. This journey was of my own motion, approved by you; and while I felt sanguine of raising the money among my personal friends, we had the recruiting committee in mind as a last resort. . . . I subsequently attended a meeting of the committee. . . . After hearing what I had to say, and putting some questions to me, the committee voted one thousand dollars to the Nation, and before returning to New York I had obtained the second."

This letter is conclusive evidence as to the direct responsibility of Mr. Godkin, for the appropriation by the committee of its funds to the establishment of the Nation.

Another witness, the late Mr. J. M. McKim, testified that Mr. Godkin himself drafted the prospectus setting forth the objects of the paper, "on which the whole sum needed was raised for the establishment of the paper." That is, the recruiting committee was misled by Mr. Godkin's prospectus into believing that it was voting $16,000 to the capital of a paper that would be especially devoted to the interests of the freedmen.

Mr. Godkin's verbal statements coincided with his written professions,—that is, when Boston radicals and not Philadelphia protectionists were approached. On his verbal professions to Major Stearns, one of the recruiting committee and chairman of the sub-committee appointed to make the investment,—on verbal statements to him and others, on printed professions prepared by himself, professions on which, Mr. McKim testified, "the whole sum needed was raised," and on the direct application made by Mr. W. P. Garrison, with Mr. Godkin's sanction, the money of the recruiting committee was contributed to the capital of the Nation. And yet this editor, when reminded of the fact, pretends to be indignant, and persists in his denial of all responsibility for the procurement of that money! He built the Nation upon a solid foundation of money largely contributed in the interests of the freedmen; and, when he had it fairly established and under his own control, repudiated his clients, the freedmen, and used his paper to discredit, abuse, and vilify the very men who helped it into existence.

Other illustrations of Mr. Godkin's nice sense of honor are reserved. Enough has been disclosed to demonstrate that personal criticism, especially of such gentlemen as Mr. Wendell Phillips, comes with bad grace from the editor of the Nation.

So much of the prospectus of the Nation as refers directly to the freedmen is herewith appended, that the reader may judge how far the recruiting committee was justified in making its appropriation.

R. P. H.

"The earnest and persistent consideration of the condition of the laboring class at the South, as a matter of vital interest to the nation at large, with a view to the removal of all artificial distinctions between them and the rest of the population, and the securing to them, as far as education and justice can do it, of an equal chance in the race of life.

"The enforcement and illustration of the doctrine that the whole community has the strongest interest, both moral, political, and material, in their elevation, and that there can be no real stability for the republic so long as they are left in ignorance and degradation.

"The fixing of public attention upon the political importance of popular education, and the dangers which a system like ours runs from the neglect of it in any portion of our territory.

"The collection and diffusion of trustworthy information as to the condition and prospects of the Southern States, the openings they offer to capital, the supply and kind of labor which can be obtained in them, and the progress made by the colored population in acquiring the habits and desires of civilized life."

FREETHOUGHT NOTES.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREETHINKER.

ADVENTURES IN BLOWMOR.

Yes. The adventure I promised to relate explains the amusing primeval spiritual subjugation which parts of this little island seemed to be still under. I was wandering on a stormy sea-coast, whose ancient name I have no doubt was Blowmore (the name is now corrupted to Blowmor), since when the winds once began to blow, no one expected they would ever give over. The boisterous sea visible there was once covered by cliff and forest. Druidical temples, Aryan altars, villages and churches, had all been beaten down by the great, fierce, heretical waters which now roll over them. The noble church of lofty arches and majestic tower which now stands in Blowmor had been swept away ere now, had not a stout sea-wall been constructed a few years ago. The great ocean, being free, had no doubt suggested to the inhabitants round about that thought ought to be free also, and celebrated Quakers of that opinion have been allured to that district, and have put up halls and park-enclosed mansions there. I had never been in the place; but on the morning of my arrival it was noised abroad that I was the guest of the son of a Quaker, a man of high character in his day. On Sunday I attended church, as is my custom when not engaged in speaking myself. In a new town I take the first opportunity of hearing the most distinguished preacher in it. Many leading preachers of different denominations, whom I have the pleasure to know, I go to hear when I can, because I respect them. Christians often utter noble sentiments in a noble way, and hearing them enables one better to appreciate the eclecticism of piety. All Christianity is eclectic now. The narrow, dogmatic, angular, frozen creeds, formerly common among us, are mostly softening and dissolving under the genial sun of science.

On my first Sunday in Blowmor, I found the preacher at the church was a gray-headed, dignified ecclesiastic, in the maturity of his powers. He holds the rank of Dean under an eminent prelate, who, when Bishop Colenso was inhibited lately from preaching in Oxford, honorably made known that if Dr. Colenso chanced to appear in his diocese he would not be inhibited. The Dean who preached in Blowmor Church had a fine voice, a fine manner, and nobler sentiments than common. He said that there was a class of persons of high character, of perfect intellectual probity, who had that living morality which bound society together. Yet they professed not the Christian name. Nevertheless it must be observed that, while morality bound man to the world, it was spiritual life which bound man to God. Not being able to see at the time, I could not take down the Dean's words; but their purport was to the effect I have said. The sentences were clearly cut, as though chiselled by the hand of Woolner; nor was the sentiment taken back again in any part of the discourse, which is often the case as the preacher proceeds. One often hears a fine concession at the beginning of a sermon, which is explained away at the conclusion. But this was not the case in the Blowmor sermon.

The next day it was represented to me that many inhabitants of the town, and especially the fishermen, would like to hear from me a lecture on the "Orators of the English Parliament." As I had not spoken publicly for a year, I was half afraid the sound of my own voice would disquiet me. However I consented. A messenger was sent miles away to the nearest printing-press; and early next morning, when I went down to the beach, I found neat little placards in every shop-window, announcing my lecture for the evening. In some windows which faced the town two ways, two placards were exhibited, announcing that I would speak in the evening; and outside the Bible Society's Dépôt one of the bills appeared. So amicable was everything that I thought I had alighted in an unknown corner of the millennium! The fishermen's room was readily granted by two of them who had authority over it. It was in that room that an eminent member of Parliament, with whom I had some intimacy, used to deliver annual summaries of Parliamentary proceedings, which ranked among the classics of political criticisms. He is dead now; and a memorial window of great beauty of color and design, which I was told cost a thousand guineas, had been put up in Blowmor Church in his memory. It seems to me a fitting memorial of him. The colored and chastened light which passed through the window recalled those fine sentiments he used to express, in which philosophy had softened and variegated the fierce light of politics of his day.

On the morning of my lecture all went merry as a marriage bell,—merrier, I should say, for I think a delicate ear can always discern the cries of children in those bells. Before noon a great change had come over Blowmor; there was consternation in the village. Muffled whisperings were heard behind every counter. The vicar had been in the town. The bill on the Bible Society's door had attracted his attention. He did not know me, but he knew I was not one of the apostles. Though my name is partly biblical, the vicar had it removed. There is reason to believe the reverend gentleman was acting chiefly on the instigation of a friend, and that he had been misinformed and misled. He went to the shopkeepers, and requested them to take the bills from their windows, and not to go to the lecture. He admitted my subject was not objectionable, but then I might say something else in speaking upon it. He was told that I was a person who regarded it as a breach of faith to announce one subject, and, after inveigling people to hear that, speaking upon another. Whether the vicar was convinced, I know not; but, as he did not call again at the places he visited to reverse his request, the bills were not replaced, and by the afternoon not a single bill was to be seen anywhere in the town.

In the meantime I amused myself by going down to the sea, and singing on the shore, with some variations, one of Byron's Hebrew Melodies,—beginning, as they say in chapel, at the second verse:—

"Like leaves of the forest when summer is green,
Placards in the windows at sunrise were seen;
Like leaves of the forest when autumn has blown,
The placards at sunset lay withered and strewn."

"The Vicar of Blowmor came in with the blast,
And spoke at the door of each shop as he passed;
The hearts of the keepers waxed deadly and chill;
Their souls but once heaved, and thenceforward grew still."

When I returned, I sent word to the fishermen who had let their rooms to me that if they thought anything would happen to their families through their act, they were quite at liberty to recall it. I thought it likely that the vicar might be the almoner of many kind-hearted and wealthy people in the neighborhood, and the poor people might fear being passed over when they wanted help in the hard seasons that befell them. "Tell the men," I said, "that I am no peddler of opinions; I do not hawk my principles about the country; and if Blowmor is unwilling I should speak in the town, I would rather see it in that place where the vicar is probably afraid you are all going, than speak to unwilling ears. I am proud and dainty in imparting my opinions; I never supplicated for an audience in my life; and I am not going to begin doing it in Blowmor." The stout fishermen probably reflected that they earned their bread in the tempest, by day and by night, holding their lives in their own brave hands, while the vicar passed his days secure from harm, and that they would get through my lecture as they had through other storms. Hence they answered that "they should light their best candles for Mr. Holyoake, and make their room as bright and cheerful as they could, if he chose to come."

When nightfall arrived, I marched through the village with my host (whose Quaker blood was a little stirred), and his young son, who wished to hear his friend's lecture. Not a soul was moving in Blowmor. Nearing the rooms, we observed a solitary man emerging from a cottage in the direction of the place. His back was made visible by a penny candle in the window. "There does not appear," I said to my friend, "any great stampede to the lecture; but I shall deliver it to you, and our friend whose back we have seen, should he arrive there." On entering the room I was astounded by an immense shout of welcome. The fishermen were there in force. A respectable inhabitant of the place was voted to the chair, and a gracious little speech of "introduction" was made by the gentleman whose guest I was.

I delivered my lecture. The audience was quite invisible to me. I spoke as into a cloud. It is a great disadvantage when you cannot see the responsive faces of those whom you address. However, I never spoke to a more intelligent audience. As I explained the difference between oratory and mere public speaking, and the characteristics of Bright, Gladstone, Disraeli, Lowe, Bernal Osborne, Sir Wilfred Lawson, and others, and pointed out the fine and laborious gradations of that art by which men climb on phrases to power, signs of discernment arose sufficient to satisfy any speaker, and I heard afterwards that the audience would have sat till twelve o'clock, if I had chosen to continue. The reverend gentleman, whose father is a great classic authority, made a neat little speech at the end. We said not a word about the vicar. I made no allusion to him, direct or indirect. It is a long time since those little peculiarities of the ecclesiastical mind which he had displayed affected or concerned me; and the audience imagined I did not notice them. This was what I intended. I never heard a word spoken by any one against the vicar. I doubt not he is a kind-hearted gentleman, to whom many have been indebted for words of counsel and acts of humanity. He is, perhaps, a little apt to forget that the people of Blowmor are citizens as well as Christians, and have a right to learn what affects them as Englishmen,—that they need to understand the secular merits of those great men who influenced their destinies, and make the English name distinguished on the earth. The Blowmor men had, no doubt, just reasons for respecting the vicar in removing the placards which were distasteful to him, and respected themselves by giving a courteous hearing to what a friendless stranger had to say to them. In any other town in England it is necessary to advertise a lecture two or three days; but my impression is that the people of Blowmor are so intelligent that it is sufficient there to advertise a lecture for three hours, and that this was the reason why they took the placards out of the window at midday. It was interesting to me to find that, the first time I resumed speaking after so long a silence, I should fall upon a bit of experience of twenty-five years ago, which we all thought was obsolete in England.

GEO. JACOB HOLYOAKE.

THEODORE HOOK was once asked for a contribution to the treasury of the Society for the Conversion of the Jews. He said he was quite unable to give any money, but if the society would send him a Jew he would do his best to convert him.

Communications.

"PROTESTANT AMERICA."

In our generation, the prejudice against what is popularly known as Vaticanism is perhaps stronger and more universal than ever before. True, this feeling does not take the violent form that it did under the maniacal bigotry of Lord George Gordon, or the gloomily intolerant Puritanism of Cromwell. But it nevertheless exists in every Protestant breast; it is the stock-in-trade of the Orthodox pulpits—the creed that binds them together in the army of Protestantism. To-day we may see a statesman—one of the foremost of his age—devoting his rare talents, his ripe scholastic attainments, his hard-earned leisure, to the exposure of its fallacies and the overthrow of its régime. On the Continent, we have witnessed a crusade of sword, dungeon, and pen, that has shaken Rome as she was never shaken before. Here in our own land the Protestant press, religious and secular, is waging desperate war upon the Romish Church in politics; a paper of twenty-five years' standing as "a journal of civilization" devotes, in each issue, both pen and pencil to this combat, and has done so for years. And in whose interest and for what ends is this crusade pushed? The interests of Orthodoxy; the ends of Protestantism.

Here Vaticanism, which in the European States is committed to many political cabals and dangerous doctrines, stands openly opposed only to our public school system, and more especially to the Bible-reading feature in that system. All Orthodoxy stands aghast at this impious proposal to take the Bible from the public schools. Why? Is it because a chapter from the Bible each day is necessary to the successful education of the child? Is it because without it his morals are endangered? Will the beautiful record of Judge Samson's chastity, of King David's famous stratagem, of Solomon's latter-day domestic felicity, help to make him a wise, true man, or strengthen him for the part he must play in life's great battle? Is it essential to the mastery of the rudiments of a business education that he should know what Timothy, and Peter, and their friends thought about the new dispensation? Not in the least. Why, then, is this made a great issue? Why is it thrust into prominence in every canvass—written and mouthed about in every town? Because, so long as the Bible is in our schools, Orthodoxy is recognized by the government, and its preachers are justified in talking about "Protestant America"; just so long they are in the ascendancy, and Liberals and Romanists are morally aliens.

History (and history is of use to us only as we profit by the experience of vanished millions) shows us all we can possibly desire to learn of the influence of religion (that is, "the Church") in the government of mankind. Wherever, in the night of the past, the lurid glare of war's torch is seen—wherever the clash of steel, the roar of guns, the hoarse yells of the combatants, the piteous moanings of the dying are heard,—look close, and through the sulphurous smoke you will see the shaven crown of the priest, the gleam of the cross above the flag. Pass rapidly over the story of the race for ten centuries past, and note some of those fearful deeds that may be found on any page, and at which men shudder, even now, in horror; the millions of lives destroyed in that amazing series of butcheries, the Crusades; the Sicilian Vespers; the wholesale slaughter of Jews throughout the Middle Ages; the massacre of the Knights Templar under the French Philip; St. Bartholomew's carnival of blood,—all, all promoted by monkish bigotry and intolerance; and so on, through the hideous barbecues of the Reformation, down to our modern Christian hero, Frederick the Great, in his march in a whirlwind of iron hail, over a hundred thousand crushed and mangled corpses, to steal Silesia from his benefactor's orphan daughter, for the glory of God and the aggrandizement of "Protestant Prussia." All history brands the Churchman, wears his mitre or shovel-hat, be he shaven or hirsute, as a mischief-maker, as an intolerant foe to all that repeat not his creed and bend not the knee at his altar.

None understood or appreciated this lesson of the past better than did the wise statesmen who framed our republic, and gave us the Constitution under which, as a nation, we exist to-day. It was their aim to found in this new world a government that should be free from the blighting influences that were the curse of the old; that should embody the principles of a true secular republic, a government for the people, by the people, that should be based upon perfect freedom of conscience and mind; a government under whose wise and impartial rulings there should be no chance for monkish meddling for the subordination of the public welfare to sectarian intrigues and schemes. It was through no inadvertence that God was left out of the Constitution; it was not by chance that no foothold was given to his professional worshippers by the framers of that instrument. They had no wish to build a house upon the sand, to found a government to be fought over by a dozen denominations with that acrimonious zeal which, strange to say, has through all ages characterized the followers of the Prince of Peace. This republic was to be built upon the ruins of the past, to be lifted far above sectarian bickerings and denominational quarrels; it was—to borrow one from the many beautiful similes of the Bible—to be founded upon a rock that no intolerance could stir, no sect could shake. When the time comes, if it ever does come, that the Bible is understood as it should be; when the race has learned to love that book for the gems of living truth that have lain hidden in it for ages, and has thrown down the towering, tottering fabric that has been reared upon ignorance, misconception, and fanaticism in its name; when humanity has learned that a tree should be known by its fruit, and that the fruit of organized Christianity has been, is, and forever will be, death, why then there will be no need of these safeguards against the "Church militant," no call for the precautions taken and bulwarks erected by our forefathers against that arch-enemy of true, free government, of mental and moral liberty. Until that millennial day dawns, we have need of them all—and more.

It is the fashion to profess reverence for the Constitution; upon every stump, in every political canvass in these United States, you may hear its eulogy; a million men would lay down their lives for its preservation to-morrow, as a million stood ready to die in its defence ten years ago. And yet to-day a Church, a combination of sects, is in possession of privileges that the Constitution was made to destroy; and you may hear from any pulpit in all Orthodoxy this country of Jefferson, of Franklin, of Paine, of Parker, stigmatized as "Protestant America!"

HAROLD FREDERIC.

UTICA, N. Y.

THREE CANON LAWS.

THE REVEREND CHURCHES-AND-STATE OF NEW YORK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent, *, from Marathon, N. Y., in his most interesting letter contained in THE INDEX for Nov. 4, far from proving to me that "we have no Canon Law in New York," has clearly established that the State of New York actually enjoys the blessings of three Canon Laws, with this mitigation: that it possesses a judge who belongs more to the other than to this side of the centennial. In fact it is not the Pope that should wear the triple crown, now that the kingdoms of Rome and Sicily are no more added to his spiritual authority over one Church with one Canon Law. He should send it by Cardinal McCloskey to one who has a use for it; namely, to New York's Democratic governor, to whose pastoral care concerning the rings is added "the care of all the churches" under three politico-ecclesiastical legislations.

I am, dear sir, truly yours,

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, NOV. 11, 1875.

WOMAN'S POSITION IN THE BIBLE.

I see many of the advocates of woman's rights endeavoring to prove the justice of their cause from the Bible, or at least to show that the reform and the teachings of the Scriptures are not antagonistic. This, of course, would be very favorable on the present and early future fortunes of the cause, since the Bible is still the popular standard of truth, and few have the courage publicly to deny the infallibility of this authority, however much they may disbelieve it in their own private minds, or disregard it in their actual lives.

But this cause must be founded on the truth of Nature before it can be permanently triumphant, and all efforts to establish it on the ideas of the past, however venerable and sacred such ideas may have become from their religious associations, must prove abortive. Woman's rights, as a political, social, and moral question, is a modern idea. It is one of the new tendencies toward a more perfect civilization which society in its natural course of evolution is ever developing. The present, if living and progressive, can never find authority for all of its thoughts and institutions in the past. Though the present is derived from the past, it is more than the past. It has a spirit and aim peculiar to itself, for which the past with all its ancient wisdom and voluminous records furnishes no authority or precedent. Nay, more: the present does not maintain its progress in obedience to the authority of the past, but in opposition to such authority. The world in its progress outgrows its former ideas and beliefs just as the individual outgrows the narrow thoughts of childhood and the premature and delusive views of youth before attaining manhood or womanhood.

Now that the Bible is not a book of infallible and everlasting truth, but that it teaches, among many other radical errors, the idea of woman's inferiority which was prevalent at the times when it was written, seems to me evident. If woman does not throughout both the old and the new Scriptures occupy a position inferior and secondary in all of her relations to man, I cannot interpret the language of those ancient writings. That the Bible is the source from which our opponents obtain their strongest arguments is proof to me that I do not misconstrue its teachings in regard to woman's position. It is the common idea that the Bible is opposed to what we advocate as woman's rights. I have been an earnest advocate of this cause for several years, speaking my views whenever an opportunity was available, and I have never encountered an opponent of any information who did not assail my position with the Bible as his proof. Many good persons of strong religious convictions have told me that they would be in favor of woman's rights, if they did not think the reform contrary to the teachings of the Bible. A former representative of this county, who a few years ago offered a bill in the Legislature to extend the political rights of the women of Missouri, is now opposed to their enfranchisement, and says his views were changed by reading the Bible.

If the Bible is to be taken as final authority on the subject of woman's position in society and her relation to man in all of the affairs of this world, I think Paul and Moses will forever prove formidable opponents to the cause of her enfranchisement.

When did freedom and progress find a true and consistent ally in the Bible? Let those advocates of woman's rights who expect such championship from the Bible in their behalf remember how the "Word of God" was used in the antislavery struggle.

H. CLAY NEVILLE,

KENTON, Mo.

METHODISM HAS INDISPUTABLY become a subject of common interest to the whole religious world. It is one of the greatest religious phenomena of our age. The "Address" of its Bishops to the late Conference presents the following striking facts:—

"In 1867 there were 1,146,081 members; in 1871 there were 1,421,323, showing an increase of 275,242, being a gain of 52,535 over the additions of the four years preceding. The corporate wealth of the Church is being largely augmented by the Christian zeal and liberality of our members, acting under the wise guidance and earnest labors of their pastors. Four years ago we reported 11,121 churches, an increase of 1,691 for the four years preceding, valued at $35,885,439. We then had 3,570 parsonages, valued at $5,361,295, showing an aggregate value of churches and parsonages, in 1867, of $41,246,734. We now report 13,440 churches, an increase of 2,319, valued at $56,911,900, an increase of 21,026,461, exhibiting an average increase during the quadrennium just past of $5,256,615. We now have 4,309 parsonages, an increase of 739, valued at $7,786,804, an increase of $2,425,509, showing an addition to the number of our churches and parsonages, from November, 1867, to November, 1871, of 3,058, and an increase in their value, during the same period, of $23,451,970. Eight years ago we reported the aggregate value of churches and parsonages at $20,883,076, showing an increase in value, from November, 1863, up to November, 1871, of $37,815,628. Such facts furnish a crushing logic in favor of a free church, which the advocates of the union of Church and State, either in Europe or America, are not able to gainsay or refute."

It must be borne in mind that these are statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church alone, which comprises but little more than half the denomination in this country. Besides it, are the large Methodist Episcopal Church South, the Protestant Methodist Church, etc., etc., including at least two African Methodist Episcopal Churches. So wonderful has been the growth of American Methodism that its people may well be devoutly solicitous for its future. Its agencies now belt the world; it is notable for its dogmatic liberality; and as notable for its practicality, its working energy. But it is growing dangerously rich; it is no longer distinguishable by its simplicity of life and church buildings; its ecclesiastical machinery is becoming immense and complicated, and presents ever increasing incentives to official ambition. Sad lamentations were uttered at the late session, by some of the gray-headed speakers, over the decline of "class meetings," and other primitive peculiarities. Its early history teaches it well where its strength lies.—Christian Union, June 12, 1872.

PLIMSOLL'S ELOQUENT OUTBURST IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—"I protest, in the name of God, against any further delay in proceeding with the shipping bill. The bill itself is an atrocious sham; but there is enough humanity and knowledge in the House of Commons to change it into a good measure. At this moment there are two thousand six hundred and fifty-four ships afloat which have run through their classes just like the Bard of Avon; and yet at this moment any of the owners, captains, mates, ships' husbands, and consignees of those ships may, without warrant, arrest British subjects who, having carelessly agreed to sail in them, find, when too late, that the only alternative before them is jail or death. I charge the government that they are, wittingly and unwittingly—for there are both,—playing into the hands of the maritime murderers, inside the House and outside the House, to secure a further continuance of the present murderous system. What is demanded by humanity is that rotten ships be broken up or repaired; that ships should not be overloaded; that grain cargoes should not be carried in bulk, so as to expose the lives of those on board to deadly peril; and deck cargoes, the source of unutterable agony to many, and death to so many more, should be put an end to. The government bill provides for none of these things. It provides only heavier penalties and severer punishments against our unfortunate fellow-subjects whose necessities take them to sea. I desire to unmask the villains who sit in the House, fit representatives of the more numerous but not greater villains who are outside the House. . . . In the name of the God of all justice and of all mercy I protest against any further delay. I demand that the merchant shipping bill be proceeded with from this hour, de die in diem until through committee, and, failing this, I lay upon the head of the prime minister and his fellows the blood of all men who shall perish next winter from preventable causes, and I denounce against him and against them the wrath of that God who hath said: 'Ye shall not afflict any widow or fatherless child. If thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry, and my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; your wives shall be widows and your children fatherless.' How much hotter then shall be his indignation and wrath against those who reduce unhappy women and children to that deplorable condition, and who leave their own fellow-creatures, guilty of no crime, to a violent and sudden death."

A MELTING SERMON being preached in a country church, all fell a-weeping but one man, who, when asked why he did not weep with the rest, said: "Oh! I belong to another parish."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 to 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest. Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE

AT
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.
EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 81 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship. Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Vegetative Activities.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Vegetative Activities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child.....	1.25
Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronomics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1847.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. Now and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from an Old Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Son's Sorrows and its Explanation. Catholic Union. Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. G. Stebbins.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Heged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	4.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHellen (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays; Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness, Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	2.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vary Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.25
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Furnus of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	2.00
The Lather Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS, IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00: per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48.00: " " 16.00.
Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.
Five " 56.00: " " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.

Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade$3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham 1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald 1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LECTURES.CHAS. D. B. MILLS

Will answer calls during the coming winter for

Public or for Conversational Lectures, On the following subjects:—

1. THE EARLY AGES OF MANKIND, so far as yet known: Prehistoric and Prehistoric.
 2. ANCIENT RELIGIONS: Egyptian, Chinese, Indian, and the relations of these and other Faiths to Christianity.
 3. SOCIAL REGENERATION: or, The Idea of Pythagoras.
- Any who may wish to secure these or any portion of them will please address MR. MILLS without delay, at SYRACUSE, N. Y. Oct. 23, 1875.

NEW MUSIC BOOKS.GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG.

Brought out in anticipation of the Holiday Season now approaching, this new and superior Book of Bound Music is attracting much attention, and is universally conceded to be equal or superior to any ever issued.

75 Songs, 232 Large Pages.

Boards, $2.50. Cloth, $3.00. Fine Gilt, for Presents, $4.00.

*Remember that GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG (as in fact any other of our books) will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the retail price. Try this method once, and you will be convinced of its perfect convenience. Also for sale by all prominent music dealers.

For Choirs, Choruses, Societies.

BOYLSTON CLUB COLLECTION. $1.50. Male Voices.

Magnificent 4-part music, quite popular in concerts.

CHORUS CHOIR. $2.00. Choirs, Choruses, etc. PERKINS' ANTHEM BOOK. $1.50. Easy Anthems.

APPENDIX TO MOORE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MUSIC.

The larger work [$6], published in 1854, contains almost everything that was known about music previous to that date. The APPENDIX [50 cts.] brings Musical History, Biography, and Theory up to the present time. Very useful and interesting.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEENReligion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

TWO NEW BOOKS.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies; and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at anything else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1875.

WHOLE No. 309.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixt with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

THE WAR-CLOUD seems drifting away, to the great relief of all lovers of peace. Spain and the United States can do better than to become rivals in needless butchery.

THE LONDON Christian published a balance-sheet of Moody and Sankey's revival expenses in that city. Total, £28,396, 19s., 6d. The advertising item alone was £3,762, 6s., 6d. How much will these gentlemen's revival cost this winter in America?

THE MONUMENT to Edgar A. Poe was dedicated at Baltimore on November 17 with very interesting ceremonies. Letters were read from the poets Bryant, Holmes, Longfellow, Whittier, Saxe, Tennyson, and others, and addresses delivered by Professors Elliot and Shepard, and Mr. Latrobe.

A CIRCULAR, it is said, has just been issued to the members of the Union League of America, signed by William A. Newell, chairman, and Thomas G. Baker, secretary, which declares that the common schools are in danger and calls for a rally in their defence. Does it state the real nature of the danger; namely, the sectarian Protestant character of the school system?

THE CHAMPIONS of the Christian Amendment of the United States Constitution, it should not be forgotten, have taken steps to incorporate themselves legally for the more efficient prosecution of their movement, and are to hold their next national convention at Philadelphia in the last week of June, 1876. That is about the same time fixed for the Liberal League Convention.

IN HALIFAX the inhabitants have to pay a "Vicar's Rate," which Mrs. Besant says is an admirable title, "as many of those who pay it only go to church vicariously, while the Vicar performs his duties in their respective locality in the same fashion." But, a poor man's goods being sold at auction to collect this tax, the town was placarded: "Wanted, an auctioneer who has lost all self-respect, to sell the poor man's goods for the support of the rich man's Church." A riot was feared.

THE EXTRAORDINARY precautions against rioting at Guibord's burial proved efficient, and no disturbance occurred. But, since the order of the Privy Council required that he should be buried in "consecrated" ground, and since the "consecration" depends wholly on the Bishop's blessing, the cursing of the grave is a complete defeat of the order. The case, therefore, is by no means settled, the State having undertaken to execute an order which it is powerless to enforce. Endless trouble results from such union of Church and State.

THE Bombay Gazette published this item in a late issue: "Certain friends and admirers of the Rev. Mr. Voysey have recently invited him to lecture in India, offering to guarantee him £3,000 for his trip. He has replied that even thrice as much would not tempt him away from home, where his work is daily increasing in importance." That is the spirit which Mr. Voysey has displayed from the beginning, and it commands the respect of all who can appreciate a noble self-devotion to duty. Yet the Orthodox flip-pantly accuse radicals of "lack of moral earnestness"!

HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, of Indiana, who was so conspicuous in Congress and elsewhere for fidelity to the cause of antislavery at a time when it most needed friends, requests us to announce that he is prepared to lecture during the coming winter either at the East or the West. His subjects are—"Evolution and Reform," and "The Slavery Yet to be Abolished"; and he may be addressed at Irvington, Indiana. Lecture committees cannot do better than to secure his services, for he is a thoroughly independent and sincere thinker whose word must command both attention and respect.

SPECIAL ATTENTION is due to the extremely interesting review, in this issue of THE INDEX, of Mr. Holyoake's History of Coöperation by General Henry K. Oliver, whose great knowledge and official experience in labor matters eminently fit him for the task. General Oliver desires us to supply an accidental omission by mentioning "in very complimentary terms" the excellent indexes which Mr. Holyoake has appended to his volume. To meet the demand for the book which cannot fail to arise, a considerable number of copies have been put on sale at this office, and will be promptly mailed on receipt of two dollars.

A LATE number of the Independent had this paragraph, which must have been a stone of stumbling to its prohibitionist readers: "A correspondent of the Ohio State Journal, who appears to have been in great straits for interesting news to put in his letter, makes some revelation about Boston poets which may or may not be altogether true. He says: 'Longfellow has the choicest vintages in his wine-cellar. James Russell Lowell is invincible as a wine-taster. Bayard Taylor and Dr. Holmes are both epicures and adjudicators on the choicest fruits of the vintage. Howells is a modest and dainty sipper of amber-colored fluids.' And then he adds that none of these distinguished authors ever wrote 'so much as one line under the inspiration of beer, ale, wine, cider, or spirituous liquors.' We should say not; and it may be further said that not one of them ever wrote a line in favor of drinking, though Bayard Taylor is the author of a song entitled 'Vin d'Oro,' and Doctor Holmes wrote a poem to 'An Old Punch Bowl.' They are all men of clean and sober lives, and their verses are wholly free from vinous influences."

WHEN MEN have anything to sell, they wish to sell at as high a price as they can; when they are obliged to buy, they wish to buy at as low a price as they can. These desires are permanent and universal factors in social economy, and just as noticeable among reformers as among the unreformed. What follows? That, whenever the market offers a surplus of any article above the actual wants of consumers, the sellers begin to compete with and underbid each other, and prices fall; but that, when there is a deficiency of the article, the buyers begin to compete with and overbid each other, and prices rise. In the former case, production is checked; in the latter case, it is stimulated. That is the law of "supply and demand," against which the railers rail in vain. They might just as well fight the law of gravitation, unless they can totally reconstruct human nature on a brand-new plan. Selfish capitalists chuckle, when workingmen attack this inexorable law of Nature, instead of demanding a fair percentage of the profits of the business. When laborers secure this, their labor will be recognized as capital; they will become themselves capitalists; and the antagonism between capital and labor will vanish in kindly and equitable coöperation.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSKOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOA, ILL.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Co-operation.

BY GEN. HENRY K. OLIVER,

LATE CHIEF OF THE MASSACHUSETTS BUREAU OF LABOR.

HISTORY OF CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE YEARS 1812 AND 1844. Vol. I. By George Jacob Holyoake, of London. Philadelphia: Lippincott & Co. 1875.

This work upon a subject but little known, and less understood, in this country, is a welcome contribution to the literature of labor reform, a literature the extent and amount of which would surprise both the advocates and opponents of that cause, which is as old as labor itself, and which will continue to exist, to struggle, and to advance, till mankind shall be so ripened in common sense and common humanity that, as John Bright (who has a mighty power of expressing great and good aims) once said, so shall they say: "Crowns, coronets, mitres, military displays, pomp of war, wide colonies, and a huge empire are, in my view, all trifles light as air, unless you can have with them a fair share of comfort, contentment, and happiness among the great body of the people." We even go farther than Mr. Bright, and say that the comfort, contentment, and happiness of the masses of mankind can never be dispensed with, if a nation expects a national existence of permanent prosperity, strength, and endurance,—while crowns, coronets, mitres, armies, and wide colonial possessions, may not only be put away to advantage, but ought and even must be put away to secure the greatest good of the greatest number; for most potent among the obstacles of human progress has been in all time, now is, and ever will be, the monopoly of power, rule, and riches in the hands of the few.

Mr. Holyoake, judging by his prefatory statements, and judging from what we know of his labors in the cause, a part of whose history he gives in this volume, has expended much time and effort in obtaining facts such as would serve to give a substantial idea of the adventures and vicissitudes of co-operators and their cause. We think, after a careful perusal of his work, he has achieved great success, so great, in truth, that to attempt to give even an analysis of his labor would take more room than we can spare in our columns. Our readers must study the whole book, and we unhesitatingly tell them that, whether they like or dislike the cause the author advocates, they will obtain a great deal of valuable information, and will be both interested and greatly instructed. It wins attention more than romance in poetry or prose.

The industrial movement known as Coöperation is wholly modern. In fact it may be said to be scarcely a century old, and we know of no enterprise that has survived the assaults and perils of so many enemies, the chilling of so much indifference and so much unwisdom, and even folly of real friends. Yet it has lived through all these adversities, and, as a succeeding volume will show, has attained system, method, vigor, and that strong and tenacious grasp upon public sentiment which is the best assurance of continued life and progress. The obstacles which have been, and yet are, its most retarding hindrances, are obviously to be found among those who are to derive from it its greatest benefits. And these hindrances are just those which, as the world goes, seem to be themselves the most difficult to remedy. For they grow out of that very imperfect development of the faculties which is the result of the education, little in quantity and poor in quality, which is vouchsafed to the great bulk of youth, both abroad and at home, who are destined to recruit the ranks of the working-classes. A good deal of study and much intercourse with men of these classes, supplemented by their own outspoken testimony, has confirmed us in this opinion. Most of them leave school (and, leaving it, abandon all further educational appliances) to enter upon a life of labor before they are educationally ripened to encounter the possibilities of their after-lives. As Carlyle says, we are in our schools "working into the mental food of our children a yeast of frothy vocables, and littering the roots of their brains with etymological compost; words and not things, theoretical and not practical training, the former of which the age has outgrown, and the latter of which it needs and vainly strives after, are the main function of our school work." Hundreds of men fall in life in consequence of the very ignorance to cure which they were sent to school. There was with them, when school children, capacity enough, and with the great majority a desire to have their capacity developed, and a willingness to do their share of the necessary work. But "prescribed system" clogged and obstinate method fashioned them all after one rigid pattern. This has been for years persisted in, and to such extent that the newly promulgated and vastly better method of business, known as coöperation, fails to receive adequate support, and to be able to do its blessed and blessing work, because of the incapacities of the very parties whom it would benefit, had they but the knowledge, the will, and the courage to stand by their benefactor.

Mr. Holyoake's book discusses the nature of co-operation; the evils out of which it grew; its origin; its real discoverer, his efforts and appeals for aid; its enthusiastic and socialistic periods; coöperative communities in England and in America, their origin and decay, their principal adversaries, early advocates, and forgotten workers. Among the friends of a cause whose very nature and objects should have enlisted the best and strongest allies, were many of this last class, whose sympathies, zeal, and trust were stronger than their means; men who had an Abrahamic faith that better times and better means must come, for at times the worst seemed to have been reached; men of

"—Ungainly forms, inherited
 From toiling generations, daily bent
 At desk, or plough, or loom, or in the mine,
 In pioneering labors for the world."

(Geo. Elliot.)

Among early advocates was John Bellevue, a member of the Society of Friends, whose motto was "Industry brings plenty," and who made the philosophic remark that "the real interest of the rich is to take care of the poor," inasmuch as the mutations of fortune were constantly interchanging the places of the rich and the poor; and, in the language of a Lord Chief-Justice of England, "a prudent method of industrious education of the poor would be a better remedy against the troubles they caused by becoming malefactors, than all the gibbets and whipping-posts in the kingdom." His scheme, intended to be a State affair, was the fruit of a solid, clear-minded, and just man. It was to be governed by a despotism, because, as he truly alleged, the laborers in his day (1696) were not prepared to govern. Bellevue died in 1725.

But the originator of communistic coöperation, the method earliest devised, but now passed or passing away, was Robert Owen, born in the quadriennium including 1769 and 1772, which produced "Napoleon, Wellington, Goethe, Owen, and Fourier, all historic men,—bane and antidotes, war and art, men-killers and world-makers."

He was a Welshman, born May 14, 1771, and his career, guided by patience, industry, sagacity, kindness, truth, and fidelity, led to eminence and wealth. Of this wealth he spent thousands of pounds, while travelling thousands of miles in Europe and America, in propagating information upon the new system upon which he desired that society should be founded. His ideas dazzled the imaginations of men, and they who thought and the more who suffered imagined that their anxious ears heard the approaching, if distant, rumble of the wheels of labor's millennial chariot.

But the petrified methods of the world are not softened in a day, nor remoulded in a week. The mill of the gods grinds slow, though the grist may be fine. The world and society went on with its millions of sustaining influences, and the time is not even yet. The forms and ways of civilization were slow in their growth, and will be slower in their changes. His theory rested on the four considerations of truth, right, humanity, and utility; and to bring men and their actions into aplomb with these will require a good deal of time and a good deal of regeneration. Yet Mr. Owen's comprehensive views embraced the renovation of the world, the extirpation of evil, the abolition of punishment and of poverty, the prevalence of similar views, and the end of all antagonisms and hostilities. Of course, his opponents were many and fierce; for if poverty were abolished, where would be riches? If war were ended, where were armies, and glory, and heroes? Even some ill-judging labor-leaders were over-earnest to make allies of certain political leaders in the attainment of promised amelioration, seeming, as Mr. Holyoake says, to be willing to compound the leanest liberty for the fattest submission that could be gotten out of them.

But the ideas of Mr. Owen and his son Robert Dale, who followed up the theories and plans of his father, seem to have been directed to the establishment of coöperative communities rather than the methods of distributive and productive coöperation to which modern reformers are looking, and experiments in which have already succeeded, especially in England. Here but little has been attempted. But these communities generally failed, and the index-finger of advance seemed to point in a new direction.

Of these early and zealous endeavors to meliorate the general condition of society, Mr. Holyoake says: "They have, like those of the railway, the telegraph, the cheap postage, been obscure, intermittent, gradual, and often ridiculous,"—having also "been misrepresented before a hearing, and assailed before they had force." Their agents were ignorant, though zealous, sometimes partially crazy, and sometimes wholly so." The causes of failure, he says, were the want of sufficient capital to maintain them, until their members could be trained to self-supporting efficiency. Furthermore, the members were not picked men and women pledged to obey the authority established over them, and readily removable in case of becoming intractable. These reasons are real and substantial, truly indicating the causes of failure of communistic coöperations, and will largely impede the later forms of the system. They suggest again what we have hereinbefore said, that prevalent methods of education fail in so developing the faculties of our youth that they can, after reasonable practice, become good administrative and executive officers, and good obeyers of such officers. As now released from their educational leading strings, the spirit of egotism, so characteristic of all imperfectly developed persons, has not been so subdued that over-confidence in one's own self, in one's own capability of deciding "what's the matter," and of applying remedy, ceases to be rampant and noisy. Suspicious, grudgings, and proscriptions neutralize manliness, justice, nobleness, and that true wisdom that insures success. Now there must indeed be among the managing officials a good deal of brain power, a peculiarly adapted training, a discretion of judgment, and an enlarged knowledge of general business methods, combined with an integrity above even the suspicion of spot or blemish; but there must also be an unwavering confidence from their associates, an abiding and intelligent subordination to those to whom power has been delegated to manage affairs. If it demands peculiar gifts and a peculiar training to manage with skill, and to assure success, it even more requires a rigid, personal discipline and command of oneself to become schooled in that self-sacrifice which renders obedience a willing and dutiful concession. To obey well is more difficult than to govern well. Trifles of the flimsiest texture may destroy the best-arranged and most successful enterprises, as a question about the violation of a mere by-law made hostile factions of the thriving community at Ambelakia (page 262). Lord Brougham justly said that "coöperation, which one day will do for the worst, must begin with picked men," inasmuch as, in the words of Horace Greeley, "the conceited, the crotchety, the selfish, the pugnacious, the idle, the played-out, and the generally good-for-nothing, are not the men exactly fitted to come together and remodel the world." Yet even picked men have not always succeeded in communizing, as was proved by the failure at Brook Farm, in Massachusetts, though of the inner causes of its non-success we know nothing.

The last of English attempts at community was at Queenwood, Hampshire. A wide-spread organization started it, and its failure, disastrous and complete, has "discouraged one generation, and seems likely to intimidate another" (page 204). Mr. Holyoake well says (page 318) that "a much more serious affair than electrotyping metals is the electrotyping turbulent and competitive man with pacific and coöperative principles."

It is not a little singular that among the most demonstrative enemies of the new system were found those, the function of whose office was the preaching of the gospel of peace—that very gospel of which coöperation, in fulfilling its duties of love and equality, would prove a most efficient ally; and no class of men in England so persistently and zealously set their faces against the whole movement. In some instances this opposition cropped out in violence, and it was only by the interference of a strong-minded and (well for the occasion) a strong-handed carpenter that Mr. Owen was saved from a mobbing. The new gospel of industry was forcibly prevented because at times preached on the Sabbath; and yet the disciples of the gospel of peace "plucked and ate corn on the Sabbath," and the great Preacher of preachers proclaimed that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." In some instances (page 341), clergymen refused to bury coöperators, and even a sexton refused to dig a grave for the dead child of a socialist!

"Had the showers of denunciation been material, like rain or hail, the pioneers would have lost the brims of their hats"; but it happened, in the long fray, that these verbal missiles became boomerangish, and their use was finally abandoned.

But we have hardly room for further comments, not even to notice the early advocates of whom Mr. Holyoake speaks,—Skene, Allsop, Combe, Morgan, Para, Rabone, Bronterre, O'Brien, Fleming, Lloyd Jones, Rigby, Southwell. Of this Southwell, it is observed (page 371) that he was the youngest of thirty-six children; and then, in that grim humor that appears in many a page of this most clever book, Mr. Holyoake adds that the Bishop of Norwich, Dr. Bathurst, being the youngest in a family of thirty-six brothers and sisters, "there is nothing heretical on Mr. Southwell's part in this peculiarity for which he could be held accountable"! Other names occur as actively aiding, such as Macintosh, Campbell, Jeffery, Napier, Bailey, Knight, Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. Martin, Miss Reynolds—these ladies aiding mainly by their writings. A vast amount of missionary work was done by the men above named; and of the opposition they encountered, generally of words, occasionally of fists, there are most amusing and instructive accounts given. Evidently Mr. Holyoake is a man of that uncommon quality of mind, common sense, with a wholesome mixture of the ability to see and the power to describe the absurd side of even "friendly" zealots, who fight not wisely but too well." Some of his pages are deliciously titillating in their grim humor. For instance, on page 389, he says that some men's minds are like matches, igniting by mere friction, and throwing a dim light on a dark argument; others merely flash and then go out; others are like fuses, fizzling and smouldering only; others are like tar, giving out more smoke and odor than flame; while others, like the old flint and tinder-box, yield more noise than sparks. Occasionally a steady, lustrous speech lighted up, and warmed, and inspired everybody; and then comes one whose intellect is in his throat, and whose wild, musical cadences please the ear, like a song, the words of which nobody can understand. Others spout as a steam-whistle shrieks, and give knowledge and the headache together. Some swelled the truth and some thinned it; some rough-handed and dislocated it.

Commending the book most earnestly, as at once historical and instructive in a new field, philosophical, impartial, and alluring beyond the wont of didactic treatises, we lay it down among those works to which we shall resort again and again, being sure that we shall learn something more on every re-reading, and awaiting its promised mate with strongest yearning. Some closing extracts, full of suggestive truth, we cannot resist giving (pages 391-396):—

"They who peruse history will not find it difficult to discover that ignorance has at all times been the bane of national prosperity; and he who employs his understanding aright will soon find that even reforms may come too soon to be permanent."

"No social advocate ever produced or attempted a description of that state of society for which he pleaded, which had the merit of arresting public attention, or of lingering in the public memory."

"In the case of new thoughts, two immense obstacles stare the propagandist in the face: (1) most people do not like to think at all; (2) they do not like the new thinking when they do think. People who have minds have mostly already made up their minds; and they who have no minds are still more difficult to deal with, because of their vacuity."

"Privation, the consequence of social exclusion, comes in so many ways that it must be painful for the propagandist to contemplate them. After he is dead, his opinions may be borne aloft like a brand by men less strong than he was. There is, indeed, high satisfaction which comes from the discharge of a difficult duty. There may come, when the peril and the labor are forgotten, both regard and honor; but these are happy accidents not to be counted upon."

To this we may add, that no good cause having for its object the exposure of evils and wrongs, and the advocacy and establishment of the assured good of the masses of his fellow-men, even though the object were to be gained without molesting the general peace of society, or injuring the interest of any person or community of persons,—no such cause ever succeeded without a certain amount of martyrdom among its preachers and defenders, a moral or social crucifixion, the nails being driven in by enemies, and sometimes the hole for the foot of the cross being dug by those who thought the preaching was good preaching of a good gospel, but that said preaching should have been preached in a different way. Massachusetts is not without examples of this sort.

So this cause of coöperation towards which thoughtful working-men are looking with yearnings that cannot be uttered, hath had and will yet have its martyrs. It has measurably come in its distributive form, and that meets the immediate bodily needs. It is yet to come, "long promised, much needed, long delayed," in its productive form, when, if it be wisely, justly and heroically carried out, the very faults of the old systems will be changed into virtues. Of the old motto was, "Every one for himself, and the foul fiend take the hindmost." Its beloved pronouns were "I and mine." Of the new, the motto is, "Every one for every other, and God for us all." Its beloved pronouns are, "you and we." Its methods change selfishness into a virtue, finding its highest gratification in the fact that every act which every one performs with a view to his own benefit benefits every one of his fellows. The highest inducements urge to the strongest efforts "for you and for us." It is the interdependence and the independence of labor, a marvellous school of pure morals and of human perfectibility, wherein hand, head and heart are in a harmonious companionship of production.

"Currite, talia secula."

Haste, happy age.

SALEM, Mass., Nov. 10, 1875.

ON THE DAY following the action of Congress on the report of the Poland Committee, the New York Advertiser perpetrated the following: "At a corner's inquest held in the House of Representatives, Washington, yesterday, the jury returned the following verdict: In consequence of the failure to find the corpse of the victim, and the total lack of evidence to show that any body is missing, we are of opinion that the deceased deserves to be censured for conduct unbecoming a dead man."

SYDNEY SMITH once rebuked a swearing visitor by saying, "Let us assume that everything and everybody are damned, and proceed with our subject."

THE CONVENTION AT WORCESTER.

SPECIALLY REPORTED FOR "THE INDEX."

No more successful convention has been held by the Free Religious Association than this at Worcester, in Horticultural Hall. Promptly at half-past seven o'clock, Tuesday evening, November 16, the convention was called to order by O. B. Frothingham. In spite of the storm that prevailed, a large and intelligent audience had gathered. The evening was principally occupied by Mr. Frothingham's opening address on "The Principles and Aims of the Free Religious Association." He said that the real occasion of the existence of the Association was the infidelity of the Unitarians to their principles. Unitarianism announced as its watchword freethought in religion, the independence of the human mind. It is easy to make such a declaration as this. Every sect, from the Roman Catholics down, has made such a declaration. The difficulty comes in adhering to it when a darling belief is attacked. Then reason is given up. Thus reason asked questions and raised doubts which made Unitarians unwilling to follow reason. We seceded; not, however, to set up another sect, to make another division, but to become more inclusive. We made efforts to get upon our platform persons who stood outside of Christianity. We invited a Jew to speak at our meetings. We should have seized a Turk or a Brahmin, could we have laid our hands on him. Then we took in atheists. We welcomed persons without regard to their theory of the universe. Come, we said, say what you have to say without fear of criticism. Was this action prompted by indifference in regard to opinions? By no means. We acted as we did, not from indifference, but because our faith was so great; because we believed so much more than our neighbors that we became inclusive. To make this truth plain we had to enlarge our generalizations. We had to say Christianity itself is a sect; that it is not only a religion with sects, but is itself one of a great family of religions, every one of which has a right to prove its worth. Every one who called himself a believer came to us on his own terms.

Mr. Frothingham then spoke of the necessity for a definition of religion that should include not only Christians, but those who were not Christians at all, and men who said, "We don't believe in a personal God or immortality." He quoted the various definitions familiar to the readers of THE INDEX, and said: "These are all more inclusive than any existing definitions. In England, religion is the Established Church. In France, it is the Roman Catholic Church. America gives us these larger definitions. Now we have come to the idea of the universal religion. Believers in universal religion have beliefs and rites, but do not impose them on other people. They are our forms of expression or impression. We can change them, and can pass from one to another without self-reproach or reproach from one another. Why do you not give up, say some persons, the name of religion, and fall back on that of philosophy or science? That is what Charles Bradlaugh says to us. You drop religion, he says, and yet claim to have it; you read from sacred books, and yet do not believe in their inspiration. Why, then, do we not give up the name of religion?"

"Mr. Bradlaugh is a very able, earnest, and honest man. He is an avowed atheist and materialist. This is nothing to me. But he is an Englishman, and his idea of religion is the Established Church. He is somewhat lacking in imagination, sentiment, hopefulness. He is more interested in politics than in religion. He deals with questions of religion in order to oppose them. Religion is a foe to him. Every kind of religion, said a physician lately, is bondage to me. This is Mr. Bradlaugh's idea. But science and philosophy are no substitutes for religion. Religion is something more than dry knowledge. Religion is philosophy and science infused with feeling. Religion, says Matthew Arnold, is morality suffused with emotion. You shall not lie, says morality. Let every man speak the truth to his neighbor, for you are members one of another, says religion. Not to tell the truth defrauds your brother. Be chaste, says morality. Know ye not ye are the temple of God? says religion. This lifts chastity into ideal realms."

"Religion appeals to sentiment, imagination, faith, hope, and love. Morality confines itself to law and custom. I believe in knowledge, but also in that which makes knowledge warm and persuasive. I pursue an ideal truth. What gives John Tyndall his power? There are other scientists as able as he; but he is a poet, an idealist. He believes in undiscovered truths. He not only measures the glaciers, but fixes his eye on truth undiscovered. Here he is as one with such a man as Ralph Waldo Emerson. I should say to Mr. Bradlaugh: My dear sir, I want a spirit of self-sacrifice, a simple willingness to give up everything to a feeling of enthusiasm for humanity. Mr. Bradlaugh does himself an injustice in calling himself without religion; for, if he is the man I think he is, he is a leader of religion in modern society. Again, religion is a thing of life, private conduct. A religious man is necessarily a good man, who makes goodness the end of his life. But many philosophers have failed to live nobly. How many men who care only for knowledge are unjust, ungenerous? We should see a sinking of the level of human character and virtue if we had not religion, but only science and philosophy."

Mr. Frothingham referred to the charge that believers in Free Religion lack moral earnestness. He said: "The imputation hurts; for, if it be true, then we are humbugs and hypocrites." But it was far from being true. He referred to Emerson, Higginson, Gerrit Smith, Sidney H. Morse, William Lloyd Garrison, and others. Moral earnestness may be devoted to much higher work than is ordinarily engaged in. A man may be morally earnest without being a worker for prohibition or engaged in politics.

"When the idea of universal religion comes home to me, I am filled to overflowing with enthusiasm and earnestness. The idea is so thrilling that I look for the time when it will master young men as completely as did the crusading spirit in past ages. This idea is an intensely practical thing. Ours is a movement for the hour. Apply this idea to the question of education. It is everybody's interest to have our children educated, to have them grow up to take a wise and practical part in the duties of citizens. Nothing interferes so seriously as religion to prevent all from getting this education. The Church comes and says, Let me use my influence to draw these scholars into my church. We say we need all the time of children in school in order to make them good citizens, and you ask us to give a part of this time to teaching your theory of the universe. Children should have the best teachers; but it is of no consequence whether these teachers believe in a thousand gods or one God. Religion must hands off. But this cannot be, so long as one creed claims to be superior to all others,—claims to be a divine institution. If I believe that eternal salvation depends upon believing so and so, I must insist that children be taught these beliefs. The idea of universal religion overthrows the arrogant assumption that any religious creed is a divine institution, and keeps us from interfering with the work of the schools to make good citizens by making them take the time to teach religious dogmas."

Mr. Frothingham closed his long and eloquent address with these words: "The point of all I have said is simply this: We address ourselves to you as earnest, practical men, believing we have in our idea the seeds of social regeneration. We are not the enemy of any church. If only you lift up your souls, God bless you. But let your belief be as pure as it can be, still you may not intrude it on your neighbor."

At the close of Mr. Frothingham's address the secretary, W. J. Potter, remarked, in correction of the previous speaker, that Mr. Garrison, though deeply interested in the movement, and a speaker from their platform, was not a vice-president of the Association. He paid a tribute to the venerable Lucretia Mott, one of the vice-presidents, who, though over eighty years of age, comes regularly from Philadelphia to attend the annual meetings in Boston. She was an example of moral earnestness. He discussed briefly the province of Free Religion, and spoke of the great reforms in this country which have been effected outside the Church.

WEDNESDAY MORNING SESSION.

The morning session of Wednesday was opened by David H. Clark, his subject being: "Is it to be Peace or War in Religion?" Mr. Clark began by saying that there is always a conflict in progress, and peace full and entire is never attained. We look at the past or the present, and find it marked with more or less distinctness by hostilities and collisions. It is by conflict that principles are established; and truth advances only by the overthrow and displacement of error. Wars, while they promote evil, are productive of good, and through all their barbarities, races enter into civilization. In religion, as well as in everything else, there is something always to attack and criticize. Free Religion is a recognition of this fact, and it can fulfill its mission only by pointing out what it discards as falsehood and error—in short, by clear and open aggression. The idea has been advanced that these errors and wrongs exist no longer; that the old terms have so slight a hold upon, and influence with, the people, that they need little attention.

In looking at the Roman Catholic Church, for instance, we see that which forbids a feeling of indifference. It is to-day what it ever has been. In spite of the shifting of times, it retains the same spirit and purpose. Like omnipotence, it moves on, true to its original design, without a shadow of swerving. Its aim is now, and ever has been, an increase of power, not merely spiritual, but temporal and political. It desires to see the whole world subdued to itself; and, to accomplish this, it has never hesitated at any treachery, trickery, artifice, or device, or the commission of any crime, when its prospects of success could be advanced. Its assumptions to-day are as arrogant and audacious as ever. It claims now even more than it has ever done before. Deprived of its temporal power, it has increased its spiritual power by dogmas and decrees. It is determined to crush out every uprising of freethought in individual and nation. Says Cardinal Manning, speaking for the Church and the Pope: "I acknowledge no civil power; I am the subject of no prince. I claim more: I claim to be the supreme controller of the consciences of men. I am the soul's supreme judge of what is right and wrong."

It is a common presumption among Protestants to-day that Protestantism will some day absorb Catholicism; but indications fail to substantiate this, and point the other way. Catholic churches and convents are constantly increasing. We cannot obscure the signs that point in this country, as in Europe, to an impending storm between ecclesiastical and political power. Here, at home, already the Catholics are striving by an alliance with political parties to control them. They are growing bolder in their attacks on our public schools. They are determined to secure a portion of the school fund for their own purposes. This in certain localities has been accomplished. In France we see this Church intriguing for political power; in Spain, demanding the punishment of all who do not profess Roman Catholic religion, and the control of the schools by the priests. All are familiar with the struggle in Germany. Everywhere the Church has a foothold; it plans and plots for the subversion of all liberty, and seeks to be the one absolute authority.

Mr. Clark spoke of the peril to liberty that is to be seen in Protestantism. It has the same foundation as Catholicism; namely, the lordship of Jesus Christ over the human soul. Christianity does not, and never has, encouraged freethought; and if this is to be fostered, it must be outside its communion. Protestantism brought with it from Catholicism the basis on which it stands. It clings to an external authority and the union of Church and State. It has been said that Calvinism, could it have had the world under its feet, would have been as merciless as the Inquisition. Look at the different sects with their spirit of exclusiveness,—the Young Men's Christian Association, with its refusal to admit any who do not endorse the evangelical creed. The inconsistency of Protestantism in regard to the union of Church and State is obvious, insisting on Bible-reading in schools; chaplains in the army, in Congress, and in prisons; the Sunday laws, etc. Considering Christianity in all its phases, Catholic or Protestant, it must be regarded as a drag upon the civilization of to-day.

He then proceeded to say that such encroachments upon the liberties of citizens and of the State are to be combatted and resisted in every way the exigency shall demand. We must insist upon universal education, and Church and State must be made and kept separate. There is yet rough work to be done. It does not demand great culture and elegance; but sturdy, honest blows, positive convictions, and moral worth, to lead from the darkness that surrounds us to the light of the perfect day. Mr. Clark was listened to with marked attention.

Rev. Edwin S. Elder, of Lexington, spoke at some length, saying that, while all that had been said of the designs of Catholicism was undeniably true, in his judgment, the true way for liberals to conduct the conflict was to advance positive, affirmative convictions of their own, and do all in their power to increase and establish faith in man. The details of the Church's conduct might safely be let alone, provided we everywhere insisted on trusting and believing in humanity. The Church believed in an external authority; it based everything on that. Liberals believed in just the opposite,—in the authority of reason in the individual soul. Whatever developed this faith made headway against the pretensions of Rome. This was the thought suggested by this Centennial period. Faith in Humanity—has it not been largely justified in these one hundred years of American history? The same faith represented in the political institutions of the country needs to be carried into religion. Reason in religion was as much demanded as reason in politics. Seventy-five years ago the Unitarian movement represented this faith. That was a great movement—how great we, perhaps, do not as yet realize. It was the sublime affirmation of this principle of faith in man. The influence of Channing and Emerson in its behalf could not be measured. Now, the Free Religious Association stands for that principle. Let us rely upon it, and seek redress in education, not war. Instead of acting against something, let us devote ourselves to the creation of this faith. If war comes, let it come from those who would undermine our liberty.

W. C. Gannett said that he looked on Protestantism in a more favorable light than the first speaker. He would not say that, where Mr. Clark saw black, he saw white; but he saw gray. He spoke of the tendency among Protestant sects toward union among themselves, the breaking down of their narrow sectarianisms, and a general drawing together on the basis of God's incarnation in Jesus Christ and his atonement. He thought Protestantism showed marked tendencies towards freethought and free religion, while Roman Catholicism had done its utmost to suppress both. In regard to peace or war, he said there were three planes on which the battle could be fought,—the plane of discussion, the plane of politics, and the battle-field.

The conflict of discussion must, of course, go on. There were three parties: the Catholic, Protestant, and Liberal. The Catholic in itself is a unit; the Protestant is more or less divided; the Liberals are divided more than Protestants. The great questions of religion are by no means settled. If we are to set aside the old faiths, there are many questions to be answered which as yet we have been unable to answer.

Will the discussion enter the plane of politics? The Catholics have already brought it there. Will Protestants bring it? They have already done so. They bring it in their religious amendment. Let that be made a part of the Constitution; and the three men who drafted the Declaration of Independence—Franklin, Jefferson, and Adams,—if living now, would be disfranchised. If Catholic and Protestant bring the discussion into the plane of politics, he did not see how Liberal or Radical could avoid meeting it there.

Mr. Gannett did not believe there would be a conflict on the battle-field. He believed in the American people, in their good sense, and would not hastily think they would not end the conflict before it should reach the arbitrament of the sword. Because he saw this conflict, he believed in the Free Religious Association, and in its discussions. Discussion will tend to keep the conflict where it belongs, and realize at length for all freedom and fellowship in religion. In conclusion, he said the Association did not stand against creeds, but against limitations; not against sects, but sectarian dogmas.

The morning discussion was closed with a few remarks by C. A. Bartol. He said that, if it be peace or war on any plane, no doubt the scale will turn for the truth, instead of authority. The mere majority of numbers never prevails. If the Church pushes the conflict to the war plane, it will go down like slavery.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

The afternoon session was opened with an address by F. E. Abbot, on "The Secularization of the State and the Public Schools."

Mr. Abbot began by saying that he believed the American people capable of grasping an idea. He believed in the logic of events, which was nothing more nor less than the history of ideas written out, the logic of ideas dictating events. Two principles can not be acted on, if they conflict. One or the other in the final issue must give way. In discussing the question of the secularization of the State, it was first necessary to get a proper definition of the State. What do we mean by the State? The State is nothing but a political corporation, formed for a political purpose, and handed down from father to son. It is formed for mutual protection of natural human rights, and begins and ends with the people themselves. It is a strictly natural corporation, designed for the attainment of secular ends and objects. It relates wholly to the present life, and has nothing to do with any world but this.

Now what is the Church? It is claimed to be a divine institution founded by God for the salvation of all souls. It is both secular and spiritual. It includes all of this world, and stretches on into eternity. It is supernatural, and claims supernatural authority over all human interests.

The one vital question for us to settle is, Can the Church and State be in fact made and kept separate? In Europe the States have grown up under the constant influence of the Church, and have never gained a complete independence. In this country the founders of our government took particular pains to keep out any reference to the Church, and our whole basis of government is arranged with a view to separate Church from State. The Catholic Church is the most consistent of any Church ever formed; and according to their idea, as embodied in the Papal States before the triumph of Italian unity, the State is swallowed up in the Church. According to the Catholic idea, any liberty granted the State is nothing but a delegated power to carry out the wishes of the Church; its liberty is that of a slave in a limited sphere of action. Our fathers thought that they could establish a government free from all ecclesiastical trammels, leaving the individual free to have his own religion.

It may be said that religion, in the free religious sense, must enter into all that concerns us, and so it cannot be excluded from the State. Very well: so much of religion as consists in freedom, justice, and equal rights, and so much only, should enter into political institutions; but that is not the Church. That is what our fathers admitted; but the Church was not in any form recognized. Carry into politics all that concerns universal justice, equal rights, and liberty; leave the private conscience to its own affairs. The State has to do with natural morality; but the Church is based on theological tenets. From the side of the State, no objection to the total separation of Church and State can proceed. But the Church is never satisfied; it always claims to control the State by divine right, either directly or indirectly; it is always grasping for power.

This, then, is still our problem in America,—how to make and keep the State independent of, and totally separate from, the Church. We have to defend the principle of the State's independence as affirmed by the founders of the republic. We cannot ret where we are, but must carry out the idea more widely and in greater detail. In this contrast, as has already been indicated, we have the Catholic party, the Protestant party, and the Liberal party, including in the latter all who, in any sect or any party, stand faithfully by the secular principle. The Catholics are completely organized, with a recognized head, with an army of priests and bishops to carry on the work. The Protestants are slowly coming together, and organizing for a bold and decided stand. The Liberals are without organization, relying on the purity of their motives, and appealing to reason for support. The Catholics have one purpose to accomplish: it is to gain control of the government and establish the Pope as the virtual ruler of this nation, politically as well as spiritually. To this end have they begun their attack on our school system. They demand to govern us. Rome makes this her conscience. Shall we have a conscience to defend liberty? If we are unwilling to submit, there must be a conflict. Humanity has a right to be free. If Rome triumphs, it must be through the blood of millions of slain freemen, and the last vestige of liberty must first be blotted out.

The battle-field is now the schools. The Protestants are at work in their way; they concede that the State must not recognize the Church, but insist that it shall recognize Christianity, the religion of the Church. Protestants and Catholics alike claim to make the State Christian and education Christian: their principle is the same. But Liberals demand to make the State secular and education secular. They refuse to yield to the demands of either of the other parties. They deny the right of either to make the State or the schools Christian at all. They protest against Sabbath laws and non-taxation of churches. If the Protestant Christian Amendment should prevail, it would carry the nation back to the Middle Ages. This Protestant plan points to Rome, and Rome means a state of affairs of which we of to-day can have no conception. To counteract these tendencies, Liberals should organize in every town and city of the land, and educate the people in the secular principle, which demands schools free from all Christian control whatever. Mr. Abbot did not believe in taxing Catholics for the Protestant religion, or Protestants for the Catholic religion, or Liberals for the religion of either. He desired all schools secularized so as to make good citizens, each man free to think and act for himself in profound respect for the equal rights of his neighbor.

Dr. Bartol said that he took great pleasure in listening to one whose words came from as great enthusiasm in his heart as clearness in his head. But to him it was a tragic speech. It seemed that there was no escape from being pierced to death. There had been three alternatives presented. The Catholic must have his way; or the Protestant his way; or the Liberal his way. He thought there was a fourth alternative. There was a possibility that both Catholic and Protestant ought and would yield, and the Liberal would yield his demand for a merely secular education. He himself believed that religion could not be excluded anywhere. Education cannot be, and be secular in the sense of being irreligious or unreligious. The religious element cannot be left out. There is a common religion that should be expressed. Our children should be taught in the schools that there is a power, an inner, upper, higher power, which is religion in its true sense; and every man, atheist included, is conscious of its presence. Certain inevitable laws exist, and it matters not what name we call them. Catholic and Protestant have been taught to believe that certain forms belong to religion, but that does not make it so; and they can be made to see and yield this point. He did not believe the churches would carry their point so far as Mr. Abbot had represented. There was an old saying, "Take the things of God, and show them unto the men." Natural rights cannot be maintained without this sense of the infinite. We must teach the real religion of the facts and constitution of human nature. Thus assailing the Protestants, we should put them in a bad box of logic; and it would be a bad box for Romanists. They could no longer cry, "Godless," or "irreligious," and yet no man's conscience would be invaded. We would have religion in its highest sense, in school and in government. No paper religion, no religion of forms and symbols; but a religion that comes from the heart pure and simple, and means hard-money morals.

Mrs. Cheney remarked that Dr. Bartol's natural religion had nothing to do with the subject practically. Both Catholic and Protestant deny and decry it. We were obliged to meet them on their own ground, and insist that they should not bring their religion into the concerns of the State. The common ground on which all could stand was the secular principle. If religion is as Dr. Bartol describes it, it will find its way. The State can no more usurp the functions of the Church than the Church can those of the State. Mrs. Cheney thought that through Free Religion the various points now at issue between creeds would be amicably settled before the close of the nineteenth century. Ground must be maintained where the various religions and beliefs of all the nations of the earth can meet on equality. No distinctions should be made that would exclude good teachers from the schools. She referred to cases where they had been excluded, because they conscientiously refused to read the Bible or make a prayer in school. Her experience in the freedmen's schools was that the liberal teachers were the most successful, and the light of their characters were shed so buoyantly over the poor scholars in their charge that the pupils were lifted up to a higher level of morality and usefulness. In regard to the near approach of danger from an irrepressible conflict between the religious factions, Mrs. Cheney did not take quite the position of Mr. Abbot, although she believed danger did exist, and should be prepared for. No one could have foretold ten years previous to 1865 that the liberation of the slaves was so near at hand. Yet the crisis came and was met; and what Mr. Abbot has described may come, yet not so soon as to cause immediate alarm.

Mr. Frothingham closed the meeting by summing up the remarks of the other speakers, indicating the completeness of the range the discussion had taken.

The evening session was devoted to an essay by John Weiss, on "The Work of Religion," after which the convention adjourned. Many of those who were present remained for a time enjoying themselves in a social manner. A more complete report of Mr. Weiss' address than there is room for in this issue will, if possible, be given next week, copied from the Worcester Daily Spy. It should be said that this journal gave excellent, full, and very fair reports of the whole proceedings.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

AN APPEAL.

INDUSTRIAL TEMPORARY HOME, {
375 Tremont St., Boston, Nov. 12, 1875. }

MR. EDITOR:

Sir,—Will you permit me, as Superintendent of the "Industrial Temporary Home," to state a few facts in reference to our institution? It was opened about eight weeks ago, and during that time we have received two hundred persons who have paid for their food and lodging in work. During the same period we have turned from our doors a much larger number, probably five hundred persons, or an average of about ten a day. We have constantly about thirty-five persons lodging and eating in our Home, and about forty-five eating and not lodging. The labor performed has been principally making baskets, reseating cane chairs, preparing kindling wood, repairing boots and shoes, renovating mattresses, repairing furniture, and doing jobs by the hour for outside parties. By far the larger part of the persons received have been of American parentage. They are principally young men, in the prime of life, and of good general appearance; and many of them are very intelligent. We have no difficulty in getting them to work, and scarcely ever find one who refuses to perform any task allotted him. So far from witnessing this refusal, as evil prognosticators assured us would be the case, we find it one of the hardest tasks we have ever known to refuse so many every day who beg and entreat earnestly for the privilege of labor. We are thus endeavoring to solve on a small scale "what shall be done with the tramps." We say, send all applicants for charity to our institution, and along with them send a liberal order for kindling wood, which we will deliver at your doors. In this way the difficult problem will be easily solved, and, in the words of Chief Savage, we shall have "provided some way by which the applicants for relief and shelter could, if not sick or physically incapacitated, be made to give a return of some kind, even if the work done gives no proper equivalent for what he has received." Let those who really wish to see this experiment fully tested give us the means of doing it, instead of theorizing on the subject, while hundreds of hungry persons are begging for the privilege of entering such an institution. There is wealth enough expended every day in charity in our city to sustain a number of institutions like ours. If the means are furnished us, we can employ and board all the time one hundred persons, and gradually prepare them for a permanent residence on farms or in the country. We rejoice to perceive that our views concerning the propriety of providing work for the most needy of the unemployed are spreading so fast, and being adopted by intelligent philanthropists everywhere, and especially that an institution so blessed with wealth and influence as the Industrial Aid Society has recently resolved to enlarge its sphere of action, and adopt in part this method of operation, and so "provide for the prevention of the dangers and evils which are entailed by the presence and acts of the vagrant class."

It is idle to assert that because people are poor they will not work. If the gentleman who experienced so much difficulty in having his fires lighted at Deer Island will call at our Home, we will show him nearly forty persons who will spring with alacrity to light a fire, or do any other kind of work required of them. Many of our men begin work at sawing wood by six o'clock in the morning, and fifty men would at once take their places, or work by candle-light until nine at night, if we would let them. These are the men who want to work.

We have public meetings, for our inmates and others, twice on Sunday and three evenings during the week; and any one who doubts the intellectual character of some of these persons would do well to visit our "Literary Society and Debating Club," which meets every Friday evening for debates, essays, readings, declamations, etc. We ask the public to assist us in every possible way, and not wait for the city to do the work which is already being done without the aid of the city.

We are glad to see that so many good men and women in the city approve of our efforts and are ready to help us. We return our sincere and heartfelt thanks to the large number of persons who have so liberally aided us, and would commend to their confidence our agents, Mrs. Dr. Lula Mulliken, Mr. H. Noble, Mr. G. Gay, and Mr. D. Sargent, who together with Rev. Wm. Bradley, our treasurer Rev. H. C. Dunham, and our superintendent C. Stearns, are the only persons at present authorized to collect funds for our institution. We are happy to state that Rev. Wm. Bradley, of Jamaica Plain, has been invited to become the lecturing agent of the association, and it is hoped that he will accept.

Per order of Executive Committee.
C. STEARNS, Sec'y and Sup't of the Home.

[We have no doubt whatever of the high usefulness of this young institution, which needs no words of ours to commend it to the rich and charitable. It tells its own story in the above practical and earnest words.—ED.]

THE JESUITS IN CHINA.

In a letter sent from Canton, mention was made of the Cathedral going up there, which is to cost three million dollars. We learn that another, quite as magnificent and costly, is being erected at Peking; also, that in nearly every important city of the empire churches are being erected. The Jesuits are in China in great force. Here comes one of their priests, a Frenchman, wearing Chinese clothing, with a pigtail hanging down his back. He has become a Chinaman, following to the letter the apostolic example and precept—becoming all things to all men, to accomplish the end in view. The Jesuits throughout the empire have adopted the dress, the habits and customs of the Chinese—eating as they eat, sleeping as they sleep, shaving the forehead and not the crown, just as the Chinese have theirs.

Your readers will remember that two hundred years ago the Jesuits were numerous throughout the empire, but upon the accession of a new dynasty they were driven from the kingdom, and their property confiscated. But through all these long years Rome has had her eyes open. When the French brought forward the treaty lately signed between France and China, one article stipulated that all the property confiscated two hundred years ago should be restored to the Jesuits.

"It is impossible," said the Emperor's ministers. "It must be done," was the reply of the French commission.

"Who can tell where it was situated? How can it be identified? There have been great commotions—a great many changes since then. We cannot find it," said the ministers.

"Of course there may be some difficulty; but if the Fathers of the Church can identify the property, your Highnesses will restore it," said the bland commissioners.

"Oh, yes; if they can show that it was once owned by the Church," was the reply, and the article went into the treaty.

A few months later the Fathers appeared at Peking with a great bundle of title-deeds and documents, yellowed by the time and mouldy from their long repose in the archives of the Propaganda at Rome.

The Emperor's ministers were confounded, but there was no help for it; and so the Church to-day is in possession of immense estates in nearly every city of the empire.

The other day, while walking through the streets of the old city of Shanghai, Rev. Mr. Yates pointed out long ranges of buildings which had been restored to the Jesuits under that article of the treaty. The income from these estates is enormous. No estimate can be made of the amount, which is known only to the Fathers, who keep their own counsel.

The Jesuits are having great success in this empire. The forms and ceremonies of the Buddhist religion are so much like those of the Roman Catholic that one can hardly tell the difference. A Chinaman entering a Protestant Church sees no gods, images, nor pictures, and he comes to the conclusion that the Protestants are altogether godless; but he enters a Jesuit Church, and sees a better class of images than he is accustomed to worship, pictures more pleasing than those upon the walls of his own temples. He sees the priests of the altar in gorgeous robes, inhales sweeter incense than that ascending from the joss-sticks. The music of the choir, the deep-toned organ, is more than the rub-a-dub of the drums. Is it any wonder that the churches are thronged at morning mass, or at the hour for vespers?

Rome takes long looks ahead. She is educating for the future. Foundlings are picked up by the hundred and thousand; poor parents sell their children for a trifle, parting with them that they may be educated by the priest. A few years hence these foundlings will be traversing the hills and valleys, stopping at all the villages, setting up schools, and carrying on the work of the Church.

A gentleman of Shanghai, one who has been long in the country, who can speak the language, who has travelled through several of the provinces dressed as a Chinaman, in search of coal, and iron, and other materials, has had excellent opportunities for observation, and his opinion is worthy of consideration. He says:—

"Of the missionary effort put forth in China, at least ninety per cent. is by the Catholics."

The restoration of the confiscated property has given the Church of Rome great vantage ground. The priests have been pressing the Imperial Government in another direction. The French Minister has obtained an imperial decree permitting the priests to decide all questions of law between Chinese Catholics and those who still adhere to the Chinese religion. Secretly and persistently, constantly they are laboring to obtain possession of China. So high a personage as Sir John Bowring, who was here for a long while, and whom I had the pleasure of meeting last August at the meeting of the British Association, expresses the opinion that Romanism stands a fair chance of obtaining possession of this vast empire. Certainly Rome is working with a zeal, energy, singleness of purpose, and far-sightedness which may challenge admiration.—Cor. Boston Journal.

REV. GEORGE DAWSON, of Birmingham, Eng., does not think highly of shams, and mentions several varieties. One is the requests for prayers, sent up to preachers by members of the congregation. Mr. Dawson said: One was for two sisters, "that the Lord would now appear for them, and find them a home; they are wholly cast on the Lord." Forbid it that he should not think they were sincere. He did not blame the sisters for sending the prayer, but he blamed the theological teachers who could teach them to do so. "They were wholly cast on the Lord." Why did they need prayer from ten thousand people when the Lord knew that? Why did they require the noisy spirit, the ostentation, and the vulgar attempt to augment forces, and get ten thousand women in a cattle-market to pray for two sisters who had wholly cast themselves on the Lord? Again: "Prayers requested for a young Christian in great difficulties that appear to be insurmountable." If all the humorists that had ever lived had clubbed together to write something, they could not have equalled in absurdity the next request: "Prayers are requested for a gentleman purchasing an estate, that he may not make it an idol." He asked them to suspect him not. He did not make this—he had not genius enough. "Prayers requested for a gentleman purchasing an estate, that he may not make it an idol!" If he knew that gentleman, he might be of use to him. He should have said to him, Don't purchase it; then you won't run any risk. He must say that a piece of more fulsome, egregious cant was never turned out before God and man than the unctuous, greasy, vulgar ostentatiousness of that fellow when he informed an assembly that he was purchasing an estate. Then prayers were requested "for a dear father, who has been a chapel-goer for many years, and is still an unsaved sinner." Was not this a delicious picture of humility on the part of some pious son or daughter? But what a fine touch for the preacher at the chapel, and how ineffectual had been the means of grace!—Golden Age.

IN SPRINGFIELD there is a store that makes a practice of having a sort of bulletin hung out with a funny cartoon. On Monday there was a picture full length of Tilton, easily recognized, and over it. "This man had a suit that cost him $75,000, and lasted him only six months. We will sell one for $7.50 that will last twelve months." Mr. Tilton saw it, and had a hearty laugh as he stopped and read it.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

LITANIES.

BY S. H. MORSE.

I.

Thy God is wise
There in the skies.
Oh! call him hither, quickly, do,
That we may know if this be black or blue.
II.
The God all-wise
Hath loaned thee eyes:
Why call on him to come to thee
Who never from his throne didst deign to flee?

Go thee up and help the God;
Naught can he do without thy aid.
He may mould him flowers from sod,
But, moulding thee, waits for thy nod.

Who shall tell me? None; not one.
Wiseest wit hath nothing done.
Never beats my heart surprise;
Nothing new beneath the sun;
Sense doth naught but show me lies.

Free I am to see behind
Shows that count on me as blind.
Soul-lit eyes peer on the blank—
Nothing there? They nothing find;
Yet abides the All I thank.

Good we draw from devious ways;
Wisdom for all hearts that long
Rest to find in knowing all:
Yet is heard the pauper's call.

GUIBORD AT THE GATE.

Scene: Parapet of Paradise; principal gate. Time: Morning.

(Enter Joseph Guibord, c. o.)

JOSEPH GUIBORD SPEAKS:

Hail, holy father, gladly I salute you!
Painfully have I sought your sacred presence;
Hoist your portcullis, warder; don't mind my Incomplete apparel.

ST. PETER SPEAKS:

Joseph, you ghost, you! tell me where your bones are;
No harbor here for people without bodies!
Why have you left your skeleton behind you?
Who's got your baggage?

Didst thou forget it, suddenly awaking?
Didst, impecunious, sell it to the devil?
Or, in desperation, lend it to your uncle?
Speak, wretched mollusk!

GUIBORD SPEAKS:

Father, I've neither spouted it nor sold it;
Yet had to leave it on my native planet;
They mobbed my widow when she tried to put it
In the cemetery.

Good, pious people fought around my body,—
Fought six years, with curses, fire, and axes;
Finally one set buried it and piled ten
Tons of rock upon it.

Other set one night prowled around and got it;
Filled up the hole; turfed it over nicely;
Carried off the bones to a mill adjacent—
Ground them into phosphates.

ST. PETER SPEAKS:

Come in, Joseph! You are one of our folks!
Victim of folly and of superstition!
Joseph, pardon my keeping you a-standing
Out in the cold there.

Earth seems just as full of fools as ever!
Poor creed-mongers couldn't let your bones rest;
I'll make it sultry if they come around here
Fooling with the knocker.

W. A. C.

—Daily Graphic, Nov. 13.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 20.

Henry A. Dean, $10; S. S. Wemott, $10; Alphonso Taft, $10; Benj. R. Tucker, $10; G. F. Matthes, $10; A. G. Booth, $4.15; T. L. Kimball, $5.50; Chas. Coventry, $3.25; J. C. Klotz, $5; T. H. Knowles, $10; T. D. James, $16.80; J. M. Martin, $3.20; J. E. Haynes, $3.20; H. N. Winslow, $3.50; W. A. Potter, 25 cents; Chas. A. Marks, 60 cents; D. Y. Kilgore, $5; Edwin Brown, $10; Nathaniel Little, $10; Adolph Werner, $10; Morris Einstein, $10; J. G. Richardson, $10; W. J. Potter, $70; A. Folsom, $50; Mrs. O. W. Bird, $3.20; B. C. Ward, $3.20; O. A. Farwell, $3.20; W. Kennedy, $2; W. H. Morris, $3.20; A. J. Warner, $3.20; Pulaski Carter, $1; A. Elliott, $3.25; S. Wilkinson, $3.50; C. A. Miller, 10 cents; Geo. A. Denison, 20 cents; Peter Sidebotham, $10; George E. Francis, $4; Henry W. Brown, $3; Wm. H. Hunt, $3.20; Geo. W. Julian, $3.20; F. Egbert, $3.20; D. Créhanne, $3.20; B. A. Ballou, $1.20; S. W. Sample, $2; J. P. Cooke, 10 cents; Ira W. Castle, 10 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 25, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

SAYS a kind correspondent: "I travel in the car to Boston every morning from my place, and below me is —; and from that place there are several likely young fellows on the same train who were brought up under the cruel system of Orthodoxy. But such hungry fellows for THE INDEX you never saw!"

MR. VOYSEY's friends in this country will be interested to learn that he is about to start a new magazine in London, with the assistance of Prof. Newman, Miss Cobbe, and other distinguished contributors. Further information will be given when received; but it is pleasant to know that Mr. Voysey will be "backed up by a rich friend."

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

RUMORS having been set in circulation that THE INDEX is to suspend publication very soon, it is necessary to say that such rumors are untrue. It has struggled through great difficulties more than once; it has seen days much darker than these; and, although the "hard times" have proved especially "hard" to daily and weekly journals of all descriptions, we deny emphatically that there is now any necessity or intention of suspending the publication of THE INDEX, or of transferring the editorial management of it to other hands. So far as anything human can be considered certain, subscribers may be certain that they will receive the equivalent of their subscriptions as heretofore. But we could make the paper a great deal better than it is, if we had the necessary means at command; and we still hope to make it as good as its cause deserves. With the return of general prosperity, we cannot but believe that the friends of THE INDEX will enable it to do more than merely sustain the high reputation it already enjoys both in America and Europe.

A SUBSCRIBER, writing from New York city, inquires: "Have you any Free Religious Catechism, or do you think of getting up anything in that way, by which we radicals may teach our children what we do believe regarding creation, evolution, sacred literature (Hebrew, Buddhist, etc.)? The simple denial of Orthodoxy is a very negative and unsatisfactory style of information for the children. While continuing the work of destruction in the field of discussion, cannot we be doing a satisfactory constructive work with the children? Have you given any thought to such a production in popular form, tract or otherwise? Will not our theology prove as not-ty as a pine plank sawed from a small log, unless something of the sort be done?" Our correspondent points out a great lack in our literature which ought to be supplied by some qualified person who has the requisite leisure—not for the purpose of making a new creed, but of condensing positive knowledge of this order in a form adapted to the minds of children. Clodd's Childhood of the World (price 75 cents), and Frothingham's Child's Book of Religion (price $1.00) are each very excellent of their kind, and may partially meet the special want pointed out, though the field is too vast to be covered by anything yet published. Oral instruction by parents cannot be dispensed with; and the need of radical Sunday-schools is felt more keenly every day.

THE WORK OF FREE RELIGION.

The extended (though not verbatim) report of the convention of the Free Religious Association at Worcester which is published in a previous part of this issue will doubtless be read by all who are interested in the free religious movement. We do not remember a pleasanter, more enjoyable, or more successful gathering of the kind. The Association's friends in Worcester were exceedingly hospitable and cordial, and have the sincere thanks of all who received their generous attentions; the audiences, which were very good in point of numbers and attention, contributed more than enough to defray all necessary local expenses (the speakers defraying all their personal expenses, as usual); and the local papers, particularly the Spy, gave full and impartial reports of the proceedings. The opening address of Mr. Frothingham, notwithstanding the fact that he had been all day and was still suffering from a severe headache, was in our judgment the best extempore speech we ever heard him deliver, being strong, direct, and earnest in a remarkable degree, and commanding great sympathy and admiration; and the essays and addresses of the other speakers were animated by the same spirit. Everybody regretted the absence of Col. Higginson, who was unable to attend, and whose eloquence at such meetings can ill be spared. Altogether, the occasion was one to strengthen our faith in the essential value and necessity of the Association's work.

What is this work? What is the work of Free Religion? It is worth while honestly to ask ourselves this question, when some ignorantly or wilfully belittle Free Religion as merely one of many special reforms, while others deny that it is reform in any sense or contemplates anything but a total destruction of all things true, elevating, and sacred.

This, then, is the work of Free Religion—to deepen human consciousness of a commanding IDEAL of human nature, and to stimulate human effort to realize this ideal, both in the individual and in society, through the attainment of larger truth than the world has yet known, grander virtue than men have ever practised, wiser and purer and freer social conditions than have ever yet existed. In other words, its work is to elevate the personal and social character of the race, partly by inducing a stronger personal endeavor in the direction of symmetrical development and noble use of all our faculties, and partly by improving or changing all institutions, laws, and customs just as rapidly as a possible amelioration of them can be clearly made manifest. The inward self-consecration of our entire being to the pursuit of all ideal excellence is Religion; the social state which always helps and never hinders this pursuit is Freedom; the securing of them both is the work of Free Religion, which concentrates all its energies on the higher evolution of humanity in accordance with the laws of universal Nature.

If this is an intelligible statement, it will be seen that the special objects immediately aimed at by Free Religion are—(1) the increase of the knowledge of truth, and (2) the direct application of this knowledge to personal and social advancement. Nothing, therefore, could be more foolish than to treat Free Religion as a "special reform," on the one hand, or to deny that it is the very essence of all reform, on the other. Without knowledge, all blind efforts at reform degenerate into some new species of tyranny, fanaticism, or folly; with knowledge, all reforms become possible. By making the discovery of truth, the advancement of science, the increase of human knowledge in each and every direction its first and all-important object, Free Religion proves itself to be absolutely universal, and not "special"; while, by making the practical application of truth to our imperfect human conditions a sacred religious duty, it proves itself to be the pervading spirit and presiding genius of all real reforms. This is the Free Religion which THE INDEX was founded to advocate,—which it has advocated from the start with all its mind and all its soul and all its heart and all its strength,—and which it means to advocate so long as the staunch adherence of its friends shall give it power to do so.

Two dangers, however, beset Free Religion on opposite sides.

On the one hand is the tendency to elevate what we have once concluded to be truth into a fixed standard or unchangeable creed, and to hold it as sacred from all criticism. This is the danger of dogmatism, to which many who think themselves free fall victims. The truly free mind holds nothing sacred from criticism, discussion, examination, and (if possible) refutation; his most precious convictions he cherishes solely on the warrant of reason, and he knows that reason throws open all questions to those that can open them; and he suspects himself at once of profound infidelity to truth, if he finds himself dreading or refusing or shrinking from the application of critical inquiry to his dearest beliefs. No man can be loyal to the spirit or ideas of Free Religion who thus exempts from examination any of his conclusions, no matter how closely twined about them may be his affections, his hopes, his aspirations; for he knows that truth, which is so much vaster than his own imperfect thought, is the only infinitely precious possession which the universe offers to him. Hence he will unhesitatingly go and sell all that he hath to purchase this one pearl of great price. The danger of grasping too wilfully and doggedly the convictions he has already reached is, therefore, a danger against which he will guard himself most conscientiously.

On the other hand is the tendency, after repeated experiences of change of opinion, to lose all tenacity of grasp on our convictions, to come to consider truth in itself as merely a series of dissolving views without objective reality, and to become so confused by subjective changes as to forget that truth is never absolutely attained, but approached only by successive approximations. This is the danger of general mental flabbiness, disintegration of the intellectual fibres, reduction to the state of hopeless vacillation and imbecility. That through a great variety of successive stages a conviction may be gradually evolving itself into a purer and truer form, and that its essential truth survives them all, is something not understood by such minds, which, being themselves without convictions, feel a profound distaste for those who have them, and confound all tenacious cherishing of them with dogmatism or intolerance. If to this intellectual indecisiveness and feebleness be added a decided tendency to sentimentalism, a general gush of enthusiasm without specific direction, a vast, vague, and effusive aspiration towards nothing in particular, then there is presented the spectacle of what might be described as the religious jelly-fish, floating on a flood of mere emotion at the mercy of the tide, and getting a precarious spiritual livelihood by dangling its tentacles in all directions.

Against these two dangers—the one of grasping convictions so strongly as to become rigid and dogmatic, the other of grasping them so feebly as to become flabby and sentimental—it is the work of Free Religion to guard men, to inspire them with an intense hunger for positive knowledge as the necessary antecedent of all true reform, and to brace their minds and wills for the application of it to the elevation of mankind. Is it not the object of all search for truth to attain it, and, when attained, to use it? Men without conclusions respecting truth are of little positive value in promoting social evolution; men with conclusions are socially and evolutionally of value precisely in proportion to the truth of their conclusions and to the degree of their influence in getting them practically applied. Free Religion, then, aims primarily at the truth; next, at its incorporation in individual character and conduct, and in the social institutions of all kinds which so largely influence these. If there is anything better than Free Religion to live for or to work for, we hope the wise will not neglect to instruct us in it; but if there is not, may the cause of Free Religion become dearer and dearer to the souls of men!

REMINISCENCES.

When THE INDEX was started about six years ago, it did not think it necessary to make a place for itself by indulging in misrepresentation and detraction of other journals. It was satisfied to state its own objects and aims in a dignified manner, leaving the public to institute their own comparisons, and making no false and ungenerous insinuations of any sort. How far it has been faithful to its original purpose, and whether this purpose is intrinsically narrow or partisan, the public, reading the subjoined extract from the Prospectus issued in November, 1869, will be able to judge for themselves without our aid:—

THE INDEX will aim at a two-fold object, positive and negative.

It will aim, above all things, to increase pure and genuine RELIGION in the world,—to develop a nobler spirit and higher purpose both in society and the individual. It will aim, at the same time, to increase FREEDOM in the world,—to destroy every species of spiritual slavery, to expose every form of superstition, to encourage independence of thought and action in all matters that concern belief, character, or conduct. It will, in short, be devoted to the cause of FREE RELIGION, which it proposes to advocate with the utmost ability and moral earnestness it can command.

Without limiting itself to any of the great reformatory movements of the time, it proposes to work for them all in the most efficient way, by fostering the spirit of reform, and by uprooting every conservative prejudice by which reform is checked. Uncompromising, fearless, radical, it will put faith in ideas, and work for them openly, regardless of all consequences. Its only policy will be strong thought and plain speech. It will neither seek nor shun to "shock" the religious nerve. Standing squarely outside of Christianity, it will yet aim to be just to it, recognizing its excellences, noting its defects. It will pay no deference to the authority of the Bible, the Church, or the Christ, but rest solely on the authority of right reason and good conscience. It will trust no revelation but that of universal human faculties. It will accept every certified result of science, philosophy, and historical criticism, asking no question what it proves. Briefly, it will seek the truth and work for humanity, believing that man, who makes all institutions, can remake or unmake them as well, and that he is abundantly able to take care of himself, without the help of kingcraft or priestcraft.

THE INDEX will be the organ of no party in politics and no sect in religion. The editor will speak for himself alone, and so will each contributor; neither will commit the other. The only tests in the acceptance of articles will be ability, fairness, courtesy, and pure moral tone; in the application of these tests, the editor will take all responsibility. No article will be rejected because of its opinions as such. Theism and Atheism, Spiritualism and Materialism, Transcendentalism and Positivism, Free Religion and Christianity—in short, every phase of earnest thought—shall have a fair chance to be heard, and on equal terms.

It is a cause for satisfaction to remember that THE INDEX had only appreciative and admiring words to utter with respect to Mr. Morse's Radical, the only other publication at that time which could possibly be considered its rival, and the discontinuance of which a few years later was a public loss regretted by none more sincerely than by THE INDEX and its supporters. The very first issue of THE INDEX, which contained the above Prospectus, contained also this paragraph:—

We would call especial attention to the "RADICAL EXTRA," which we received with the December number of this very able periodical, and the larger part of which we print on our last page. THE RADICAL and THE INDEX will be co-workers in the same general movement,—the one as a monthly magazine, the other as a weekly paper. Five years of admirable service have proved the worth of THE RADICAL in the estimation of the liberal public; and now, when it enters on its sixth year, we sincerely hope that it will be with a doubled subscription list. Whoever takes and intelligently reads it cannot fail to be instructed by it; and we recommend it to every thoughtful person as worth ten times the money it costs.

ON WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE AND MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—At first I thought the matter was too small between Mrs. Besant and the (English) Woman's Suffrage Society to trouble you by my interference; but the renewed mention seems to give it importance. What I desire to call attention to is this: that that is being treated as a religious controversy which is not properly such; whence an entire confusion results.

I agree with Mrs. Besant that the Hebrew and the Christian Scriptures alike fail of giving to the female sex its due rights and rank. I have more than once urged this in print, without any relation at all to political questions. Nevertheless, I would on no account at an English meeting for Woman's Suffrage bring this topic forward, simply because I believe it would do harm to the cause; and if I thought otherwise, I should still justify a committee, who believed it could only promote division and controversy, in overruling and forbidding me; not on account of the argument being religious, but on a much wider principle, which applies to nearly all our voluntary societies, whose business is, not to diffuse truth in general, but to effect some definite, very limited result.

When five hundred or one thousand persons combine for some sharply defined purpose—say, the abolition of some noxious law,—and they have to overcome the vast inertia of an overworked Parliament, which represents thirty-two millions persons, and is responsible for two hundred and forty millions more in India, they can have truly little chance of success if they quarrel among themselves. A religious quarrel is only one of many possible; but not the mildest. It is not at all rare for a person to fancy that the very best argument for the end sought by a society is one which the majority of his allies think to be not only bad as argument, but suggestive of evil; or to be setting up a totally new controversy, which can only divert discussion from the matter in hand. It would be easy to illustrate this in detail. Those who are responsible for the best use of moneys entrusted to them ought not to allow the expenses of a meeting to be wasted by some would-be friend, who, by his advocacy (ever so well meant), raises indignation in their most valuable speakers, and sets the whole audience into uproar.

I know nothing of the facts concerning Mrs. Besant but what I read in THE INDEX. Presuming their correctness, I unhesitatingly say that, while I agree with her that the Bible (Old and New) sustains and has sustained ancient error concerning the rank of women, yet if I had been on the committee of the Woman's Suffrage Society, I should have absolutely objected to Mrs. Besant introducing this topic, which I regard as irrelevant and even mischievous. Many Christians favorable to Woman's Suffrage deny that the New Testament teaches what both Mrs. Besant and I say it does. To undeceive them would only damage the cause of Woman's Suffrage. If we undertake that task, it must be on some other platform. No one must be allowed to work for some favorite purpose of his own, under the color of working for the specific and avowed purpose, while, in fact, he throws an apple of discord into the Society, to the delight of adversaries.

F. W. NEWMAN.

WESTON SUPER MARE.

THE REVIVAL AGAIN.

The fortunes of Moody and Sankey are not so swelling as their enthusiastic friends might desire. The reports of them are not unanimous, nor are anticipations from them equally sanguine even among "Evangelicals" themselves. The Tribune, steadily in these latter days, on the side of Orthodoxy versus Rationalism, and the popular faith versus the unpopular, daily prints glowing accounts of the meetings, declares that interest in them is spreading and deepening, and predicts bountiful harvests of godliness in the future from the multitudinous bushels of seed. The Herald and Sun are less confident. The cause of wonder to them is that nothing more is accomplished. It is hinted in their columns that the assemblages are less numerous and less enthusiastic than they were; that Mr. Moody's sermons lack variety and point; that Mr. Sankey is obliged to exert his artifices to an extent that betrays their poverty, and that the signs of spiritual renovation are not conspicuous. Which to believe, the outside observer cannot determine; neither, and both, perhaps. The Sun is perhaps the most independent, and therefore the most trustworthy, of the three; but the Sun carries its independence to the point of viciousness, and is as cross-grained in its bluntness of honesty as others may be in their Orthodoxy of prejudice.

Until recently the complaint was made, and by Mr. Moody himself, that none but comfortable Christians in good church standing came to his meetings. (If he did not want such, why were the meetings appointed at hours when the churches were closed?) The Herald remarked on the well-to-do aspect of the crowds; the display of silk and jewelry; the first-class character of the bonnets. It was somewhat too evident that the byways and hedges had not sent their fair share of candidates for the supper. The Evangelists were tickling ears that much pulpiting had made thick, the drum-heads whereof beat no roll call to the slumbering souls.

The sinners were therefore separately invited; not as sinners, that would have been discourteous; not as unbelievers, that might have given offence; but as men and women who had not availed themselves of the privilege of church-membership, as non-churchgoers. The meetings were crowded again; but how largely by the same audience that made them respectable before has not been estimated. Nor has the effect of this appeal to the ungodly been recorded. It is too soon as yet to measure the results in the decrease of gambling, prostitution, or drunkenness. But "the time is short." The campaign on Long Island is nearly ended, and solicitude is felt in regard to the progress of the revival when the Evangelists shall have left the city.

There is naturally much speculation on the attitude, present and future, of Mr. Beecher. The Ædipus who is to read the riddle of that sphinx has not appeared. Mr. Beecher professes a deep interest in the movement, looks into the meetings as a spectator, makes them the subject of his lecture-room talk, and advises that the churches—his church in particular—should wait till the Evangelists are gone, before taking up the movement on their own account. In one sentence he thanks God that there is no theology in the business; in the next he lauds the performers because they do Christ's work in the good old Puritan way, which was through and through theological, ignoring the fact that the theology is not spoken of simply because it is so profoundly taken for granted. Scratch the surface of Mr. Moody's harangues at any sentence, and the blood of the vicarious atonement spurts to the ceiling. The turmoil of conflicting emotions does not subside in gospel bosoms; for intelligence, and culture, and science, and knowledge of the social laws, have been quietly doing their work.

"Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world
Shall ever medicine them to that sweet sleep,
Which they ow'd yesterday."

Mr. Chadwick wrote a brave note to the Sun which had represented him as having assisted at one of the meetings. The editor was apparently rejoiced to get it, and has been more than willing to open his columns to more of the same sort from the same source. But at present there seems to be little need of more. Mr. Chadwick spoke the secret thought of many minds, and the thought will find expression in other ways. It still looks as if the efforts to raise a storm that must prove dangerous to radicalism were not likely to be successful. The gale may scatter the wrong fleet.

O. B. F.

[Mr. Frothingham desires me to add that, since the above was written, Mr. Beecher has shown a still more marked favor to the revivalists.—F. E. A.]

"NOT A DATE."

"Not one unripe date!" was Mohammed's reply to a powerful Christian tribe that offered to submit, if he would leave their chief some remnant of power. "Not one Bible in the public schools of Chicago!" is the reply of the School Board to the Christian petitioners to have that sacred volume reinstated. The vote stood ten against three. Henceforth the public schools of Chicago are to be unsectarian.

But how inexpressibly sad it is, when we think of those teachers whose feelings were so hurt by the exclusion of the Bible,—who can never more enjoy the blissful privilege of reading that holy book at the opening of the schools, and can only read it at home, at church, at Sunday-school, at the theatre, concert, exposition, and everywhere else! And those children who used to listen with such awe, eager attention, and supreme devotion, how they will sink into ungodliness, dissipation, and crime! And that woman who canvassed for names on the petition-list at two cents a name,—may the Christian clergy of the city see that she is rewarded for her pious zeal! And those little children and servant-girls, who signed that petition of the "prominent citizens of Chicago," how they deserve to be rewarded in the next world, if not in this, for their conscientious discharge of a sacred duty! But, sad as it is to reflect on these things, we will try to be reconciled to the will of Providence as manifest through the Chicago School Board. May God elsewhere thus manifest himself in the flesh!

W. H. S.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—What are you all doing in America, and whither is the stream of thought tending? It seems to me either that Orthodoxy is again in the ascendant, or else a miserable and unmanly indifference is taking its place.

THE INDEX now, after all these years of certainly honest, if not quite temperate, speech, is not having the run which might have been fairly expected of it, considering the immense amount of cant talked about "freedom of thought" and outspokenness in general. Had the paper been narrow and one-sided, expressing only and exclusively ultra-radical principles, there would have been reason enough for its being accepted only by a small and narrow circle of readers. But the editorial staff was surely a sufficient guarantee against any such narrowness, embracing as it does, not only yourself, but also several who differ widely from some of your own views. Further still in the direction of liberality and comprehensiveness, you have admitted letters by the score disputing your own and our propositions in turn, and presenting, if ever a paper could do so, an infinite variety of opinion—and all in the hope of eliciting the truth!

Then, again, when have you or your assistants been dogmatic? I know it is an unworthy but common trick of disputants to accuse each other of "dogmatizing," whenever they rise to a tone of earnestness in expressing their respective convictions; but this tone is not dogmatic, unless the speaker adds to his own convictions some claim of external authority to which he has no right. Personal assurance of the truth of any statement is not dogmatism. Trying to force that statement on other people by authority is dogmatism.

Your INDEX may be dull to the thoughtless, and dry to the unintelligent; but to men and women who boast of their powers of reflection, and brag much of their right to think for themselves, there is ample food in your columns, both digestible and savory. If there be any fault, it lies perhaps in the discussion of topics which, for the masses, are still premature; we are possibly agitating too soon, before previous questions are properly settled. But this fault, if it be a fault, would only affect the circulation of THE INDEX among those who made but little claim to be accounted freethinkers. It ought to be a recommendation to those who regard themselves as the pioneers of enlightenment, and as heroic explorers of the untried and the unknown. Those who are just beginning to be unsettled in their views, and those, on the other hand, who have settled down in atheism, may alike object to the freedom of THE INDEX; the former because it presents a diversity and an extreme simply shocking to the Orthodox mind; the latter because it is still free, and maintains the devout attitude of an inquirer into religious truth.

The conditions of thought in America take me wholly by surprise. I declare to you that we are better off in Europe, even in England and Scotland; and I wish you would write yourself and tell us all about it. Has THE INDEX any rival? Is there any weekly paper which even pretends to occupy the same platform or collection of platforms?

The other day I learned with deep regret of the death of the Golden Age, a paper which seemed to come nearer to my idea of a religious journal than any other I know of, not excepting THE INDEX; and yet New York itself could not keep it going. Since Mr. Tilton's retirement, the paper had dropped its political virulence, and, better still, had banished free love-ism with all its nastiness. Under the late editor, Mr. Clarke, it was full of "sweetness and light," and as broad as any heart could wish. But no; the Americans do not like that kind of religion. It is not narrow enough for some; it is too religious for others. What are you coming to next?

I dare say my good friends over there will be extremely indignant with me for taking the country thus to task; but I write much more for my own enlightenment than to upbraid them. I really want to know how the land lies—whether you are all going back into Orthodoxy, or have already plunged beneath the waves of infidelity or (to give it its right name) atheism.

You, sir, cannot be accused of any personal motives in the course you have pursued in your connection with THE INDEX. If you desire it to spread and to succeed, it is for the benefit it may confer on others and not upon yourself. Is this an element of failure or of success? On the answer given by your countrymen hangs their own condemnation. If it be an element of failure to be reckless of temporal losses through a courageous honesty, all the worse for your would-be subscribers; if, on the other hand, honesty be the best policy, why on earth do not your countrymen give proof of it?

I have time for only one more reflection on the present unsatisfactory state of things. I look upon the indifference and the atheism which prevail as the direct fruits of the so-called religious training of the present generation. Insincerity and atheism were cradled in the Christian churches. Fathers and mothers have allowed their children to be taught as divine truth what they themselves disbelieved,—have trained them to conform outwardly to religious observances which they themselves secretly despised; and the result is only what one might have expected,—a worldly indifference to anything so troublesome as religious inquiry, or a profound disgust at, and denial of, all religious thought and associations. Will THE INDEX help to cure it? Can it possibly do so? I think it can do much, if only it avoids unfair and extravagant accusation on one side, and does not allow philosophical grubs to eat away the roots of religion on the other.

I am, sir, very truly yours,
CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMPDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., Nov. 6, 1875.

IT IS SO EASY to love a child. What can one not pardon in a child? One forgives him for being a lord, a prince, a king. The innocence of his age makes one forget the crime of race; the feebleness of the creature causes one to overlook the exaggeration of rank. He is so little that one forgives him for being great. The slave forgives him for being his master. The old negro idolizes the white nursing.—Victor Hugo.

Communications.

CATHOLICISM IN AMERICA.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I had thought that our amicable discussion of the "Catholic question" was closed; but the issue seems so much befogged by recent publications in your paper, and your comments thereon, that I hope you will permit me another brief statement of the case as I understand it.

On the main question we do not differ. The public schools are to be maintained at all hazards; the school fund is everywhere to be protected from division or sectarian appropriation, and the schools are to be rendered strictly secular, by removing all Bible-reading and religious instruction therefrom.

Our only difference is this: I deprecate the forced discussion of the first two articles of the above platform, by means of indiscriminate assaults on the Democratic party, or the Catholics as a whole, as unjust, unnecessary, and calculated to postpone the very ends we have in view.

My reason for deprecating this discussion is that these unjust assaults on Democrats and Catholics, indiscriminately, will tend to unite in opposition to our fair demands those who are not now so united, and thus to defeat or greatly postpone the success of the effort we are making for the absolute secularization of our public schools.

In proof that neither Democrats nor Catholics are now united against us, I present the facts that nowhere has the Democratic party taken ground in favor of a division of the school fund or the abrogation of the public school system; but, on the contrary, in Ohio and elsewhere, it has taken emphatic ground for the complete secularization of the schools; that Senator Kernan and other representative men who are Catholics as well as Democrats, whose honesty and good faith are undoubted, place themselves also squarely on this ground; that many Catholics in New Jersey and elsewhere, where the question has come before the people in a definite form, have resisted the influence of their priests, and worked and voted for constitutional amendments which forever prohibit sectarian appropriations and a division of the school fund.

To this THE INDEX replies: first, that "Mr. Kernan stands in marked opposition to the Catholic clergy and Catholic press"; which is exactly what I have claimed. There are thousands of Catholics in this country besides Senator Kernan who are patriotic and intelligent enough to take the same stand, as has been abundantly demonstrated whenever this question has taken definite form before the people. Hence the injustice and unwisdom of assailing Catholics as a whole, and forcing a union against us where now there is division in our favor.

THE INDEX also replies that Mr. Kernan "is not a representative Catholic." I answer, He is a Catholic, and a representative man, and on this question undoubtedly represents an intelligent and influential minority of his own faith; else why the labored efforts of the Catholic World and other organs to convert these recalcitrant members of the Church? He as certainly "represents," in his opposition to a division of the school fund, an immense majority of the Democratic party, as has been demonstrated in every distinct issue that has been raised.

To this latter position, and in general opposition to my views, THE INDEX replies by calling attention to the "subjoined authentic record, with facts and figures"; the same being a history of sectarian (mainly Catholic) appropriations in this State, four or five years ago, under the rule of the "Tweed Ring," detailed in a partisan electioneering article from the New York Times.

When the Times published that editorial just before the election, it knew perfectly well that it was raising a false issue, as the following facts will show:—

In the first place, the "Tweed Ring" was thoroughly "wiped out" several years ago—routed, horse, foot, and dragons. There isn't enough left of it to make a respectable funeral. All honor to the Times, and no less to Governor Tilden and Senator Kernan, for their labors in destroying that monstrous combination! The Democratic party in this State is now controlled by the very men whose influence destroyed the "Tweed Ring"; and to hold them responsible for its deeds is the grossest injustice.

In the second place, when the people of New York, by more than fifty thousand majority, elected Tilden Governor, and sent Mr. Kernan to the United States Senate, they likewise, by enormous majorities, so amended our State Constitution as forever to prohibit sectarian appropriations like those displayed in the Times' article; and since the adoption of these amendments, though the Democrats have had control of our legislature, and for the first time in our history sent a Catholic to the United States Senate, no such appropriations have been made.

So the "facts and figures" of the Times prove to be facts and figures of an overwhelmed and disgraced political cabal; and the recurrence of such appropriations has been forever prohibited by the people, while the Democrats were in power. And many Catholics united in this prohibition.

Whenever any question affecting the integrity of our school system or school fund comes legitimately before the people of any State in the Union, the schools will be emphatically and overwhelmingly sustained. Our danger and labor do not lie in that direction. Rather is it to be feared that this unjust and uncalled for clamor will arouse bigots of every sect and party to active and successful opposition to our just and reasonable demands for the complete secularization of the public school system.

To secure this result demands our earnest and undivided effort. Let us be deterred from it by no side issues, unfairly raised, for the low end of partisan success; but rally around us our friends—the liberal men of every party and sect.

If we work wisely to this end, our success is certain and not distant. If we permit ourselves to be deceived by false issues, we shall fight against unnecessary odds, and the conflict will be indefinitely prolonged.

Desiring only a fair field and the speediest possible success, I remain,

Yours faithfully,
LEWIS G. JANES.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12, 1875.

[It is not an "indiscriminate" attack upon any party to treat as its party action what the majority have done, though a minority opposed the doing of it. Mr. Janes seems not to have noticed in the Times' article the proofs that the same policy of sectarian appropriations to Catholic institutions was continued down to the beginning of the present year; that, in 1872, 1873, and 1874, after the downfall of the Ring, the Catholics still secured immense grants of money out of the public treasury; that, in the words of the Times, "even after the Ring's downfall, under this apparently fair distribution, the Romanist schools have got about fifteen dollars to every one dollar for all other church schools." These facts show that the destruction of the Ring did not dissolve the coalition of Catholicism and Democracy in New York city.

Whatever Catholics refuse to follow the lead of the Catholic clergy in the school question will simply be forced out of the church; they will not be able to direct or even modify its settled policy. We heartily welcome all deserters from the hostile army, but we cannot applaud the wisdom of treating their desertion as a capitulation of that army. The country is now beginning, not ending, the great controversy over universal State education; and the first condition of success is to understand the nature of the forces arrayed against the school system. The enemy's centre is the Catholic Church; its right wing in some localities is the Democratic party; its left wing is composed of those liberals who, like the lamented Gerrit Smith and (we fear) our esteemed correspondent, are in danger of paralyzing the necessary opposition through an excess of generous feeling and an amiable unsuspiciousness of evil intents in the enemy's head-quarters (evil, we mean, as viewed from the patriotic standpoint). Most certainly would we "rally around us our friends, the liberal men of every party and sect"; but it can only be as individuals, not as "representatives" of a Church whose record in this issue is a thoroughly bad one, or of a party which in some localities has aided and abetted this Church's wicked raids on the public treasury. We are no "partisan," and it is quite idle to raise that cry. But THE INDEX must not sleep at its post, and its warning is: "Beware of all churches, all parties, all men, that have been or are capable of tampering with the system of universal secular education."—ED.]

EXAMPLE.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

"Example for the sake of example, I do not hesitate to pronounce as vicious. It is one of the fatal delusions into which the desire to help others may lead us. If we do what we think good and wise in and of itself, for its own sake, the example inheres in the act, and is healthful; otherwise not."—S. H. Morse, in THE INDEX, Oct. 28.

Since the only discussion of the "doctrine" of Example which I have heretofore noticed in THE INDEX grew out of that in which I took part concerning total abstinence from alcohol, I cannot help referring the above "loc" to the same stem, and feeling challenged to pluck and analyze it; knowing, of course, that nothing may have been further from the thought of our charming journalist; (long may he continue to journalize!) So, if you think THE INDEX can afford room, I will remark briefly on the subject.

1. "The human mind is equally skillful in confirming itself in that which is true, or that which is false, according to affection." The beneficent necessity which conscience imposes of reaching confirmation before we can rest, leads to the adoption of sundry short cuts and "ready methods." Among these, the most available for the common mind is the common proverb, the "brilliant aphorism." But proverbial philosophy is often superficial, and the most gifted aphoristic genius, in his praiseworthy endeavor to make the "many-sided truth" stand forth in stereoscopic boldness of relief, too often sacrifices fidelity in detail, and, while presenting it under the highest direct illumination, cuts off too much of that reflected light in which the truths of Nature always stand. Hence, he who thinks it worth while endeavoring to prevent or destroy false confirmations must often appeal from proverb and aphorism to deeper principles and more faithful representations of truth.

2. "Example for the sake of example is pernicious." Unquestionably true! No one save a moral coxcomb would think of "setting" such examples, and he had better sell himself at once for a "wax figger" in a "moral show." But who does not see the difference between this and "abstaining from meat lest I cause a brother to offend"? The former is an insufferable impertinence; the latter the most delicate possible form of kindness, whereof the recipient need never suspect the motive—would never suspect if it were constantly and uniformly practised. The one is to set oneself up conceitedly as a model to be gazed at; the other to considerately refrain from exhibiting oneself in an attitude not to be safely copied. The latter principle is fully recognized in the presence of those whose power of resisting the force of imitation and suggestion has been weakened by habit or disease; why ignore it in the face of a world whose powers are not yet developed?

"If we do what we think good and wise in and of itself for its own sake, the example inheres in the act, and is healthful; otherwise not."

Aye! But example inheres in every not secret act; is a property inseparable save in imagination, wholly inseparable in practice, and has its specific effect usually quite independent of motive. or what the actor may think about the innate wisdom or goodness of his action. In the absence of higher and more positive properties, this one, surely, may determine a sensible man's opinion as to what is "wise and good," and fit to be done "for its own sake." In morals, as in law, known effects, as well as motive causes, are efficient in fixing blame or praise for acts done. For that matter, no act is "wise and good in and of itself." Divorced from effect, intended or actual, all acts are alike in moral quality.

3. And now, if you will pardon me for recurring to a former discussion, I will take this opportunity for saying that what appeared to me to be a perversion on your part of the "argument from example," in the question of total abstinence from alcohol, lay in your emphasizing "example" in the case of the abstainer, where it is merely negative, and fixing upon him the pretensions of a moral strut, instead of acknowledging the full force of imitation in the case of the moderate drinker, and making him shoulder the load of an example which is positive without being positively good. You ought to remember that, in talking about example, the teetotaler is not boasting of his own, but complaining of that of the moderate drinker, which he regards as evil because it is at once unnecessary, attractive, and dangerous to follow. "But the example of abstinence is also dangerous," said you. Granted; there is danger in every step we take or do not take on earth. But when I inferred that, in urging this and then choosing against abstinence, you must regard the other as less dangerous, you cry, "No." (Vide INDEX of July 1st.) I do not ask an explanation, because it may be obvious to everybody, and interesting to nobody except

Yours, teetotally,

T. H. EVERTS.

THE GOVERNMENT TO BLAME.

WARREN, Ohio, Oct. 17, 1875.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—In THE INDEX of October 14, under the head of "Inflation," R. P. H. makes some remarks on Mr. Davis' tract, calculated, I think, to mislead the readers in regard to the National Banks.

"The commercial integrity of the people of this country" may have been to some extent "undermined during the last decade by the financial policy of our government." If so, I maintain that the government is justly chargeable for the same.

Our government in 1862, in order to meet the large expenses of the civil war, found it necessary to resort to paper money. Congress enacted the law of Feb. 25 of that year, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue one hundred and fifty millions of notes not bearing interest, payable to bearer at the treasury, of such denominations as deemed expedient, not less than five dollars each, and provided that such notes should be a legal tender, "receivable for all taxes, internal duties, excises, debts, except duties on imports, and demands of every kind due to the United States, and of all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatsoever, except for interest upon bonds and notes, which shall be paid in coin, and shall also be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts public and private within the United States, except duties on imports, and interest as aforesaid; and any holder of said United States notes depositing any sum not less than fifty dollars or some multiple of fifty dollars with the Treasurer of the United States, or either of the assistant treasurers, shall receive in exchange therefor duplicate certificates of deposit, one of which may be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon issue to the holders an equal amount of bonds of the United States, coupons or registered, as may by said holders be desired, bearing interest at the rate of six per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States, after five years, and payable twenty years from the date thereof; and such United States notes shall be received the same as coin, at their par value, in payment of any loans that may be hereafter sold or negotiated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and may be reissued from time to time as the exigency of the public interest may require." And that, "To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to fund the treasury notes and the floating debt of the United States, he is hereby authorized to issue on the credit of the United States, coupon bonds or registered bonds, to an amount not exceeding $500,000,000, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years, and payable twenty years from date, and bearing interest at the rate of six per centum per annum, payable semi-annually. And the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose of such bonds at the market value thereof for (lawful money) the coin of the United States, or for any of the treasury notes, that have been or may hereafter be issued under any former act of Congress, or for the United States notes that may be issued under the provisions of this act; and all stocks, bonds, and other securities of the United States held by individuals, corporations, or associations within the United States, shall be exempt from taxation by order, or under State authority."

The next July Congress issued another one hundred and fifty millions of the legal tenders, and afterward one hundred and fifty-seven millions of legal tenders; and of 5.20 bonds about nine hundred millions, and of 7.30's as called more than eight millions.

By the terms of the law under which issued, the principal of these bonds was made redeemable in the same currency, legal tender notes, by which purchased at par, and many of them so purchased when gold was at a premium of more than one hundred per cent. above the legal tenders. By the letter of the law under which the legal tenders and the bonds were issued, the 5.20 bonds purchasable with the legal tender notes, except the accruing interest, were made redeemable after five years, in the same money; and Senator Sherman in 1868 said truly, that justice and equity would be fully satisfied by paying the bonds in the same currency with which bought. Senator Morton said: "We should do foul injustice to the government and to the people of the United States, after we have sold these bonds on an average for not more than sixty cents on the dollar, now to propose to make a new contract for the benefit of the holders." Senator Sherman also used this strong expression: "If the bond-holder refuses to take the same kind of money with which he bought the bonds, he is an extortioner and a repudiator."

Thaddeus Stevens, in the House, said: "When the bill was on its final passage, the question was expressly asked of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and as expressly answered by him, that only the interest was payable in coin." "I would vote for no such swindle on the tax-payers of the country; if I knew there was such a platform and such a determination on the part of my own party, I would, with Frank Blair and all, vote for the other party."

And yet with the law and pledge of government indorsed on every legal tender note of the United States in hands of the people and the Republican State platforms of Ohio, and other Western State platforms of 1868, that the bonds should be paid in legal tenders, pursuant to the law under which issued, upon the statement made by Grant in his Inaugural of March 4, 1869, that every dollar of the national debt must be paid in gold, and that no one opposed to that might expect any favors under his administration, Congress within a few days thereafter, actually passed a law requiring both principal and interest of the debt paid in gold—and this in contravention of the law of the contract as so indorsed on every legal tender note.

This financial policy of our government may well be regarded by R. P. H. as having upon commercial integrity an undermining tendency.

The foregoing I have hastily written, as indicating the views entertained by a large majority of the Republicans in this place intelligent upon the subject. I always understood Mr. Chase's policy to have been to return to specie payment by first retiring all the bonds bought by legal tenders and redeemable by them; to come in at that door, rather than "climb up some other way."

Very truly,

MILTON SUTLIFF.

THE "BATTLE OF SYRACUSE" CRITICISED.

BOSTON, Oct. 10, 1875.

MR. FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Some days ago a friend of mine handed me a tract to read. It was called "The Battle of Syracuse," and consisted of two essays,—one by the Rev. James Freeman Clarke, taking up and commenting upon certain statements of yours, and another by yourself in answer to it, and in defence of your assertions. Now I beg of you to pardon the liberty I take in writing to you, a person I know only by reputation. But, though quite a young man, I am exceedingly interested in all the great religious, social, and other questions of our day. As an earnest seeker after truth and advocate of its advancement, I would like to call your attention to certain ideas that presented themselves to me upon the reading of that book. I do not intend this as a criticism of the work as a whole, or especially of the portion written by Dr. Clarke, where I might find much to criticise; but merely as the expression of a few ideas suggested to me by it.

The matter under discussion consists, as I found it, in this: you were brought up in the atmosphere of early Unitarianism in all its purity, and were taught to believe that Unitarianism was a part of Christianity, a most necessary part, in fact the very essence and spirit of it. You were also led to believe that the principles of Christianity, and especially of Christianity as viewed from the Unitarian standpoint, were a universal Spirit of Love, Righteousness, Truth, and Freedom, unbound by any tie of creed. This you were brought up to consider as Christianity, and you did so consider it; though you knew that, at that time, an almost incalculable majority of Christians were Orthodox, and believed differently from you. You knew that Catholicism, Trinitarianism, Orthodoxy, etc., were not a part of real Christianity, but were, as Dr. Clarke says, introduced at various times.

Still, in vindication of your belief, and in spite of this great majority who defined Christianity differently from you, you boldly stood forth and proclaimed yourself a Christian, a follower of Christ, a believer in Jesus, not as an infallible God, but as the great and kind Master whose teachings you studied and admired, even as Dr. Clarke says, not for the errors but for the great truths they contain; and, while discriminating, yet seeing even in the errors, not error, but the same glorious character dimly shining through the thick veil of temptation, bitterness of spirit, and often despair. You then called yourself a Christian, and you were one.

Then came the Syracuse Convention. The resolutions embodying your principles were defeated; and another set, covering a single article of faith, was reaffirmed in their stead. You then bolted from your party, started a new sect [!], and established a paper. Your principles did not change, for you say that, had it not been for the convention, you might still be a Unitarian minister. The great truth of Christianity, which you so firmly believed in, certainly has not changed. But, in spite of the great principles of freedom you advocated, you humbly gave up your belief in Christianity, and adopted the definition of the majority (which was no larger than before) in deference to their opinions. In other words, Christianity did not change, but you changed your definition of it.

Dr. Clarke, in another and different sort of convention, inculcated the right to bolt. In this convention, when you found the majority of its members entertained a different idea of Christianity from your own, you had a right to bolt from its decisions. But had you the right to bolt from the Christian party? You knew before that the majority of Christians differed from you in belief; but that did not alter your convictions as to what Christianity was, or its objects, or its spirit. Now, when you merely found a few more Christians differing from you, even though they were in your own camp, or still better, when you merely found yourself one of the minority of a minority, did that give you the right, or even the pretext, to change your definition of Christianity or your ideas of its use? No. Why, the very existence of the present almost endless variety of sects is the very confirmation of the principle that the absolute freedom of thought which you, in changing your definition, so resolutely "go back on," is the very essence of Christianity. Merely because you had a few more opponents, you should not have deserted your cause, but have fought all the harder for it. For Christianity is not the work of a day, but the glory of eighteen centuries, a great and good institution which has been terribly imposed upon, and burdened with all sorts of monstrous loads, and pulled and twisted in every direction, and yet still lives. What it needs is brave hearts and minds, not to pull it to pieces and oppose it, but to fight for it, to rid it of its burdens, and restore to it a new life and spirit of Love, Truth, and Freedom.

So I think it is our duty to remain Christians. But, aside from mere duty, there are other considerations which, though they should be far, very far, from altering our convictions or preventing the expression of them, yet, when in sympathy with this duty, add greatly to the pleasure of its performance and to the profitableness of the result. Christianity is an old and beautiful structure, and carries with it a feeling of love and reverence. Its devotees are often blindly devoted to it; within the security of its walls are to be met many to reform who would never be found outside of them; and, therefore, as a measure of economy, respect, love, and right, I believe we should not pull down the old building, but do our best to rebuild it, and to remodel it inside and out.

Yours respectfully,

FRANK B. M.—

[As the tract here criticised contains in itself what seems to us a sufficient reply to the criticisms urged above, we will now simply express our cordial appreciation of the earnestness and fine, truth-loving spirit manifest throughout our correspondent's letter, and assure him that it is very welcome to these pages. We do not think he has fully understood the force of the reasoning he controverts; but if others think otherwise, they have a right to their opinion, and would probably not be influenced by a reiteration of our already clearly expressed views.—ED.]

WHO CAN READ without tears this picture of the suffering to which a Ritualistic curate of the Church in one of the towns of England was lately exposed? "I was recommended by the rector to lodge with a Dissenter, as being the most eligible place to be had. Well, they were very good people in their way, and showed me much kindness. By-and-by they asked me if I should object to a fellow-lodger being in the same house. Poor innocent I said 'No,' little thinking who the said fellow-lodger was to be. It turned out to my dismay that he was a Dissenting minister. A clergy house with a vengeance! Of course, however, I gave notice that I would leave. But before the notice had expired, there had already been two or three instances of parishioners, who had called to see me, being told, 'Mr. F. is not in, but the other clergyman is, if he will do.'"

Paul has told us how, for Christ's sake, he endured scourging, stoning, shipwreck, perils of robbers, hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness; but what was all this compared with the sufferings of a Ritualistic preacher, compelled to lodge in the same house with—how can we write the words?—a Dissenting minister? We can only recommend him for consolation in his sore trouble to the familiar stanza:—

"Must I be carried to the skies,
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

—Christian Union.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "	" "	" "
" 26 " 51 "	6 "	" "	" "
" 52 "	5 "	" "	" "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address

THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age," an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE
INDEX ASSOCIATION,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.	1.50
Concord Days.	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.	1.50
Little Men.	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps.	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.	1.50
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.75
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.	2.00
New Poems.	2.00
Literature and Dogma.	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.	2.00
Edelweiss.	1.00
German Tales.	1.00
BACON'S Essays.	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.	2.25
Physics and Politics.	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.	2.00
The Rising Faith.	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.	2.25
The World-Priest.	2.25
The Tall Student.	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with 12 Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies."	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor."	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches.	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.	1.50
DURING (JULIA) Philosophers and Fools. A Study.	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.	2.00
Essays. Second Series.	2.00
Miscellanies.	2.00
Representative Men.	2.00
English Traits.	2.00
Conduct of Life.	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.	5.00
Society and Solitude.	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.	.20
Child's Book of Religion.	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	5.00
Elective Affinities.	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.	2.00
Creed of Christendom.	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.	5.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.	2.00
The Marble Faun.	2.00
The English Note-Books.	2.00
The American Note-Books.	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.	1.50
Atlantic Essays.	2.00
Oldport Days.	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.	2.00
Suburban Sketches.	2.00
Venetian Life.	2.00
Italian Journeys.	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three."	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.	1.25
Bits of Travel.	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.	1.25
On the Origin of Species.	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.	1.50
Songs of Seven.	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.	1.75
Studies for Stories.	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.	.80
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.	4.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.	1.50
Among my Books.	2.00
My Study Windows.	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	8.00
Elements of Geology.	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government.	2.50
Autobiography.	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.	2.50
The Same. Second Series.	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.	2.00
Thelms, Doctrinal and Practical.	1.75
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	4.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.	3.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. F. Robinson.	1.50
The Trial of Theophilus Parker for the Misdeamnor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.	1.50
The Trolly Book.	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.	1.50
Hedged In.	1.50
The Silent Partner.	1.50
What to Wear?	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.	2.00
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.	2.50
SCHÉLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.	7.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.	1.25
First Principles.	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.	2.50
Social Statics; or, the Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.00
Philosophy of Style.	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.	2.00
Sociology.	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair.	1.25
The Newcomes.	1.25
Adventures of Philip.	1.25
Pendennis.	1.25
The Virginians.	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	2.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.	2.00
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.	2.00
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.	2.00
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.	2.00
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.	2.00
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods.	2.00
Cape Cod.	2.00
Letters.	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.	2.00
Light and Electricity.	2.00
Horns of Exercise in the Alps.	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.	2.00
On Sound.	2.00
Radiant Heat.	5.00
Forms of Water.	1.50
Lectures on Light.	1.00
Proceedings at the Faneuil Banquet.	1.00
Prof. Tyndall.	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.	3.00
Vol. II. IV. and VI., each.	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.	1.00
Sauterlings.	1.25
Back-Log Studies.	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.	1.50
Essays and Reviews.	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.	1.50
Success and its Conditions.	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.	1.50
Real Folks.	1.50
The Other Girls.	1.50
Fancies. A Volume of Poems.	4.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life.	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS,

IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.
One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00: per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48.00: " " 16.00.
Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.
Five " 55.00: " " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.
Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-wood Reade$3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham 1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd..... .75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald..... 1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck..... .75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.
BY
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. . . . The story is told in a very graphic style. . . . Mr. Holyoake . . . is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS
For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—
THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NEW MUSIC BOOKS.

GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG.

Brought out in anticipation of the Holiday Season now approaching, this new and superior Book of Bound Music is attracting much attention, and is universally conceded to be equal or superior to any ever issued.

75 Songs, 232 Large Pages.
Boards, $2.50. Cloth, $3.00. Fine Gilt, for Presents, $4.00.

* Remember that GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG (as in fact any other of our books) will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the retail price. Try this method once, and you will be convinced of its perfect convenience. Also for sale by all prominent music dealers.

For Choirs, Choruses, Societies.
BOYLSTON CLUB COLLECTION. $1.50. Male Voices.

Magnificent 4-part music, quite popular in concerts.

CHORUS CHOIR. $2.00. Choirs, Choruses, etc.
PERKINS' ANTHEM BOOK. $1.50. Easy Anthems.

APPENDIX TO MOORE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MUSIC.

The larger work [86], published in 1854, contains almost everything that was known about music previous to that date. The APPENDIX [60 cts.] brings Musical History, Biography, and Theory up to the present time. Very useful and interesting.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway, New York.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. Frothingham, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion,—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being.

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by
THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co. Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's
TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,
Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1875.

WHOLE NO. 310.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needed guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSSES.

THE NEW YORK World says of a modern pianist: "Man wants but little Herr Bülow."

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Journal of Commerce whispers that the President is expected to touch on the Catholic question in his forthcoming message.

EVERYBODY competent to appreciate the masterly qualities of Chauncey Wright's mind will be delighted to learn that it is in contemplation to publish a collection of his writings.

IT WAS agreed at a late conference of Evangelicals at Fisk University, in Nashville, Tenn., that the Roman Catholics are winning the freedmen over to themselves by a total disregard of color distinctions.

THE JEWISH RABBIS of Philadelphia have sent to the Board of Education a formal protest against the use of Wayland's Elements of Moral Science in the public schools, on the ground that it teaches explicitly the Deity of Jesus.

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Massachusetts State Prison Inspectors is just out. It states that for the first time public worship after the Roman Catholic ritual has been introduced into the prison, and kept up every Sunday. One-half of the convicts attend, and one-quarter go to "confession."

THE Nation declares that "it is impossible to enter the Brooklyn Rink, or any church in the city except the Catholic, without being struck by the fact that Christianity seems among us to have lost its original character, as par excellence the religion of the lowly and miserable, and to have become the religion of the comfortable and well-to-do. . . . The congregational system of church maintenance, which is really the system of all Protestant denominations, is incurably unfit for the needs of modern society."

THIS is Dr. J. G. Holland's new formula of church-dedication: "We dedicate this edifice to Thee, our Lord and Master; we give to Thee and Thy cause and kingdom, subject to a mortgage of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000). We bequeath it to our children and our children's children, as the greatest boon we can confer on them (subject to the mortgage aforesaid), and we trust that they will have the grace and the money to pay the interest and lift the mortgage. Preserve it from fire and foreclosure, we pray Thee, and make it abundantly useful to Thyself—subject, of course, to the aforesaid mortgage."

THE NEW YORK Sun has sharply criticised the Moody and Sankey revival. One of its correspondents writes this brief note: "TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN: Sir,—What in the deuce did the Sun expect Moody and Sankey to do, more than they have done, in Brooklyn? I tell you we have had a glorious revival. G. W.—BROOKLYN, Nov. 20, 1875." Whereupon the editor gravely reads him a lesson on good manners, and adds: "We must tell G. W. that we did not expect or desire Moody and Sankey to do anything at all 'in the deuce.' A 'deuced' revival would be something we should not like to see in Brooklyn or anywhere else." Nevertheless, the irreverent think it was there to be seen.

ON THANKSGIVING DAY, Henry Ward Beecher preached against the Bible in the schools, and made this shocking accusation, which should be at once investigated with the strictest impartiality: "The public should see that proper Commissioners of Education are appointed. I know of cases near here where Commissioners have hired female teachers, and have made their employment depend upon their willingness to surrender their bodies to gratify the lust of their employers; and in some cases the teachers themselves were foul-mouthed and foul-handed." Such charges should not be allowed to pass unchallenged for a day. They should be at once brought to the notice of the proper authorities, and any parties found guilty should suffer the severest penalties of the laws.

DR. GEO. B. LORING, whose gubernatorial aspirations in this State have been so frequently nipped in the bud, is one of the Commissioners of the Centennial Exposition of 1876. At a late meeting in Worcester he stated, in reply to a question whether the buildings were to be open on Sunday, that this question had been brought up before the Commissioners by two Christian Associations, and that, on his own motion not to have the buildings open on Sunday, the idea of opening them was totally disowned. He added that he would sever his connection with the Commission, were such an idea entertained. On this a correspondent remarks: "Isn't it rich to see this old weather-beaten politician rise to this highly sensitive moral tone?" Yes, it is enough to make a lamp-post laugh; but the tremendous strength of Evangelical influence in this country is nowhere more evidently betrayed than in the uniform truckling to it of all those who court popularity. Whatever the churches make up their minds to ask, they get. What will happen, when the Catholic attack on the school system drives them to ask for the Christian Amendment?

A BOSTON daily paper of November 30 contained this surprising despatch from Washington: "It is said, upon apparently good authority, that President Grant has determined to remove E. F. Dunne, Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Arizona, on account of the position he has assumed in his public speeches on the school fund question. He is an ardent Catholic, and has indicated his desire that his co-religionists shall have a share of the common school fund set apart for their special control. This places him in open opposition to the President's Iowa speech on the school question." Against any such proscriptive action as this we hasten to make a strong, decided, and energetic protest. Chief-Justice Dunne has taken public ground as an individual against the public school system; and President Grant has taken public ground also as an individual in its favor. The one has just as much right to do this as the other, and it would be simply outrageous for the President to remove the Chief-Justice for a reason which would require his own removal forthwith. In no such wild and wicked way as this would THE INDEX meet the Catholic attack on the public schools; it does not believe in persecution of any man for opinion's sake, however mischievous his opinion may be; it would conquer opposition to universal State education by no weapons but those of reason, justice, and impartial reverence for the rights of all. If the President resorts to any such action as is here (we trust very unjustly) attributed to him, he will deserve a swift and hotly indignant rebuke from the whole nation, in the name of the very same principles which will immortalize his Des Moines speech. The Great Republic cannot afford to "fight the devil with fire."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. B. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BELLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

The Work of Religion.

REPORT OF THE ESSAY READ AT THE FREE RELIGIOUS CONVENTION IN WORCESTER, NOV. 17, 1875.

BY JOHN WEISS.

The essay opened with a brief allusion to the conditions of modern intelligence, which were considered as so changed from those of any previous period with which the sentiment of religion has dealt, that it is obliged to take a new departure, to include and use the new conveniences. There never was such an extension of mental ability, and never so many objects furnished to keep it constantly stimulated. Cheap publications of every kind spread the moods of the period far and wide. Their range passes through all the speculative powers and all the emotions of which the soul is capable. The very richness of material is a cause of distinction, for the mind grows embarrassed as so many departments throw wide their doors and display their collections, and there is no statement too scientific to resist the intentions of popular treatment. It is macerated, dissected, canned, as it were, for the use of emigrants and travellers. It is put up in neat packages, like the national yeast powder, and left at every door. The trouble is that people of little knowledge get too strong a dose of it. People who are afflicted with imperfect intuition snatch, at every railway station, a hasty gulp of the latest ideas—spectrum analysis, primal man, the correlation of forces, spontaneous generation, social statics, materialism, Darwinian views, Huxley's protoplasm, and the last message which our Spiritualist friends receive by pneumatic express from the summer land.

The scientific mind is making the whole world at once its laboratory and lecture-room, and among the hearers there is no distinction of person, sex, or previous preparation. It is not at all wonderful that religion finds herself ill at ease in this assembly of notions, especially when she is obliged to sit in the pauper's gallery, as far as possible from the stage of brilliant analysis. The experimenter is astonished to find her there at all, but he explains her away, though she seems to be present. She listens while he tells his audience that she is a case of a polyp which has neglected to shed its tail. So here she is, a useless and obsolete appendage of the human mind. All the new facts and all the latest conjectures, like the fall of the outraged sceptre when the Gauls took Rome, penetrate into the solemn presence of our primitive beliefs, and when one of the intruders, bolder than the rest, stretches forth his hand towards the Ancient of Days, the slaughter of his colleagues of the soul is easy. Thus materialism twitches the First Cause from its throne. It is the signal for a general massacre of ideas. There are great numbers of honest men to whom the phrase "invisible world" has no meaning. They have learned to consider that the universe is occupied with the functions of eternal matter, and that whatever these cannot account for must be superfluous. There are more things in heaven and earth than we dream of. Yes; but as fast as they are discovered we find they are only—things.

A great many men are disposed to derive the moral law from the combinations of birth and physical organization, and to reduce accountability to a table of statistics, which exhibits the recurrences of vice and virtue, independent of the human will, by physical laws of their own. A great many men cannot conceive of a personal continuance after the bodily functions are exhausted; they cannot even suppose that the elemental force may be transposed back into force again. They conclude that the emotions of the friend, the lover, the poet, and musician, the gladness that rises from the heart's meadow and sings its path deep into the sky, the profound regret of self-dissatisfaction, the eager scent of the imagination upon some trail, her music as the prey bursts cover, are moods that are nothing but the plus or minus of red blood in the brain cells, that the straining outward toward some depth and down through some perspective to overtake some fulfilment, is nothing but surplus of health and good condition, or, as some say, the very opposite of this, being only bad health and morbid condition; that all our mental action results from molecular distribution and arrangement, as the nimble atoms of the organism cling or fly apart, muster in various ratios to various feelings. Whatever a man thinks that he feels is nothing but the gambolling of these microscopic spheres. His most sanguine aspirations have been only the lifting of his brain as the increased action of the heart sends blood to make it fit more closely to the skull. When it shrinks again, the man desponds, regrets, is mortified, shirks for want of circulation. And when he is flush with well assimilated food, it makes him manly, and prompts him to sacrifice his stimulated atoms upon the bed of honor. All these gracious, stately words that we use, beauty, honor, love, duty, are only Cinderellas at the ball. When midnight strikes they shrink away in rags to cower again in ashes. It may be, but these Cinderellas, as they escape, drop behind them a delicate shape that fits nothing else in the world, not one fleshly foot; and thus they are identified.

People who are profoundly materialistic may have a general health and cleanliness which preserves them in moral relations with society, and secures many a noble action for them. But fine behavior does not pacify the heart when scientific facts encamp before our great natural reliances, besiege and undermine them. At the very moment when the naturalist plunges the world into the dead era of mere sequence, and holds it under, waiting till it drown, there is a natural revulsion at the deed. He drags it forth again to listen if the heart yet beats. We are hungry to regard ourselves as not persons of fate, but entitled to consideration by virtue of some moral and spiritual freedom which has a casting vote, or at least some influence in framing us. We see a man's soul entirely disappear under pressure upon the brain; and its qualities are modified by a removal of portions of the cerebral material. A youth living in Chicago whose mind was very dull and showed no aptness for anything, became a great lover of music and a player upon the flute, after an accident to the head, by which he lost a portion of the brain. Can talent, then, be scooped in or out of a person, or is the head a kaleidoscope, which needs only to be well shaken to vary its combinations? Prof. Loudat, of Montpelier, suffered from a typhoid fever, which destroyed the memory of five or six laborious years, so that he was obliged to recommence his medical studies from the beginning. What and where, then, was the substance of his person? If his knowledge lay minutely packed in brain cells, was the soul merely a force to start and move them? He either had, or did not have, a soul that shared this knowledge. If he did, the total wreck of memory is inexplicable. Death might wipe him out in the same way. If he did not have an independent soul that shared his knowledge, then there is no person; there's nothing but brain function.

And there was George Nickson, of New Orleans, nearly killed by a fall from a platform, who lay unconscious several weeks. He recovered his health and powers of mind, excepting memory. His new memory only dated from his recovery. Everything previous to that had been obliterated, and he was forced to learn his English and German again like a child. What relation, then, has memory to personal identity? We read in a foreign periodical the well-attested case of a working man, well advanced in years, who had a violent attack of cholera in 1865. Up to that time he was coarse-grained and stolid, and had manifested no spark of literary feeling or ability; but he emerged from the crisis with a lively fancy, and a strong capacity for literary expression, and has published a book of poems. It would be fortunate if cholera could also create a general collapse among bad scribblers, whose garbage makes literature unwholesome. There was a time that when brains were out the man would die. Now-a-days great numbers of people flourish best because the brains are out; and their case is more puzzling to the ideal philosopher than any other that the materialist can allege.

But what is this arbitrament of change in the blood corpuscles which mounts with new spiritual expressions to the brain? A man asks these questions with fear and wonder. He watches nourishment as it results in intellectual action, and narcotics as they exhale in fantasy. On a pill of opium Coleridge composes Kubla Khan in his sleep; with another pill of the same drug De Quincy stimulates his wonderful dreams and visions. Does the opium merely clarify the brain for the soul to see through, as we wipe our glasses when we desire to use them? The physician traces melancholy and self-distrust to scrofulous conditions of the blood, or to a clogged bile-duct; hysteria breeds temper and irregularity; chronic dyspepsia suggests criminal ideas; the vices of forgotten ancestors decide the bias of their posterity. The children do not set their own teeth on edge; that job of dentistry was done before they cut their first one. What, then, is the extent of moral responsibility? The question returns to us echoed with emphasis from every region of research. The animals are revenging themselves for our denial to them of the gift of languages by the most speaking pantomime of acts which involve mental qualities. They no longer pace stolidly to and fro behind the bars of instinct, and books and newspapers are now crowded with illustrations of animal foresight and adaptation to originate actions which correspond to exigencies.

Thus a mob of facts assails our instinct of independent and responsible existence. There is no undertaker who can shovel them out of sight. We see them springing out of all the graves upon the planets, the only things left, apparently, vital enough to use there, and mark those pits of nothingness. But let a grave open near to us, and the old heart of mankind looks down through a bottomless depth of personal continuance. Are we deceived? Do we mistake our shallow tears for unfathomable wells? So facts conspire against us, and we long against rage, against the facts; we glory in science and yet accuse her. We give back her level and unmistakable look to-day; but to-morrow we cannot see it for the blinding mist in our eyes. What a country is this that appears to smile from Atlantic to Pacific with strenuous satisfaction, as if all minds only cared to orient themselves through the golden gate, and overtake and out-time the light itself with their enlightenment? But there is not one commonwealth on the whole varied surface over which the tracks of science are laid that does not ache with the secret suspicion that we can only know what we perceive, and cannot touch higher than the arms can reach. Enterprise and competition divert us, and blind the instinctive dread. But we may count upon it as a prevailing quality of the age that needs the disinfectant of religion.

It is her work to sift the primitive instincts and expectations of mankind, and see which of them can have a place in the critical intelligence,—a work which cannot be accomplished in skating rinks to the tune of "Ninety and Nine." America is not wasting for clerical fervor, volubility, or denominational activity. Her most dangerous and subtle intelligence, grown sick of that child's play, has left the pews to those for whom texts are still authorities. She is waiting to have her ears tingle with the retort of a faith that is as great as her intelligence; to hear proclaimed an atonement that washes the head in the blood of the heart, and effaces the whole discrepancy. He here referred to the conflict between the pulpit and science, claiming that religion need not wait for science to make the necessary advances toward a unity of all real tendencies. Let her take the next step. Let her appropriate the subsidies of science because there is a method, and a purpose, and a divine drift through all creation. He also referred at some length to the discrepancies between science and religion, saying the theologians ought to be reminded in making their analysis that apparent discrepancies are made real by their own mystical and abject submission to notions of the supernatural. Speaking of the unity of science and religion, he said it gets a great emphasis from the anxiety which has been engendered in millions of minds when they discover that laws are invariable, and that Nature instead of being exorable is inexorable.

In conclusion he asked the question, What is the moral power which offers an opportunity to religion? We call it the ideal, the soul's natural turn to take after God. After analyzing his answer, he said, We have the good-will for the perfect; it is the human side of God's perfections. We should not have any ill-will for the imperfect, if we had travelled further away along the ideal road to a point upon it where prospect and retrospect lie on the same level, and the whole plain is viewed. But what point is that? It is God himself, the justifier of everything he did not think it beneath him to tolerate. At present we can only imagine that impartiality; but as often as we do it we imagine Deity, and we adore. Now this ideal is a prisoner, like those in medieval times, who were condemned by a refined sentiment of cruelty to be awakened every fifteen minutes, day and night, till Nature sank exhausted. Our temperament is the jailor that is detailed to do the shaking. But when the prisoner is immortal, the oftener you wake him up the wider open do you set your eyes, till in that width there is liberty, and religion breaks out of the jail of all the sects, and escapes into the fellowship of mankind.—Worcester Daily Spy, Nov. 18.

THE GREEK CHURCH.—The Moscow Gazette publishes a long statistical report on the Orthodox Greek Church for 1873. It would appear that there are 59 dioceses in the Russian empire, besides one in North America. They were administered by 3 metropolitans, 19 archbishops, and 35 bishops. The number of coadjutors amounted to 27. There were 397 monasteries, containing 4,678 monks and 4,212 lay brethren; also 130 convents, inhabited by 3,061 regular nuns and 10,519 temporary inmates. There were, in 1873, within the limits of the empire, 37,630 churches and 13,282 chapels; 404 new churches and 131 new chapels were constructed during the year. The clergy was composed of 1,075 archpriests, 35,919 priests, 12,372 deacons, and 54,708 unordained clerks and readers. The collections made during the year by the clergy for charitable and religious purposes produced the sum of 10,728,546 roubles, or nearly £1,400,000. The "Orthodox" population at the end of 1872 amounted to 54,062,063; out of this number 26,702,576 belonged to the male sex and 27,759,492 to the female sex. Notwithstanding the excess of the latter, however, it is remarked that very few women remain unmarried, widowers invariably getting married again among the peasantry in order to "have somebody to keep the house," while the remarriage of widows is comparatively rare. The "Orthodox" Church is proud of having to record the conversion of 9,549 individuals from other religions, and among these of 3,199 Buddhist pagans. The missionaries are actively and zealously at work among them as well as among the Mohammedans, and the results are by no means insignificant.

RABBI FELSENTHAL'S PROTEST AGAINST THE BIBLE IN THE CHICAGO SCHOOLS.

CHICAGO, Oct. 31, 1875.

TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION:

Gentlemen,—A report of the proceedings of our honorable body in your meeting of Oct. 29, as published in the daily papers of the city, has come to my notice; and from the report I have learned that several of our fellow-citizens have protested against our late action concerning the abolition of Bible-reading in our public schools, and that you have referred this protest to the proper committee. As the discussion of the question whether the Bible should be retained in the public schools or not has thus again to be re-opened, I feel myself induced to appear before you with a counter-protest, and to submit to your honorable body the following pro-memoria. I am a citizen of Chicago, and send my children to the public schools, and therefore I am directly interested in this matter:—

1. First of all let me, as one among many, thank you for your recent action. In passing the resolution in question, you were animated by a spirit of genuine justice and fairness. Even if we should admit (which we, however, do not) that it is but a minority who favor the exclusion of the Bible from the schools, while a majority are for the retention of the Bible, would it not be an inexcusable, an undemocratic, an un-American tyrannizing of the minority by an accidental majority, to force their religious views and practices upon an unwilling minority? Would it not be a disregard of the conscientious scruples and honest convictions of others, a contempt for, and disregarding of, the inalienable rights of the minority? To illustrate by an example: What right and what justification have our fellow-citizens who would force the theology of the fourth gospel, or of the Paulinian epistles, upon the children of Israelites? Israelites, as you are aware, are strict monotheists, and to such Jewish monotheists, the theology of some of the so-called New Testament books must almost appear as polytheistic, and therefore decidedly repulsive. Now would it not be an outrageous proceeding thus to apply the barbaric "loi de plus fort," and to place might before right?

2. But it seems that, in the eyes of our protesting fellow-citizens, Jews, Catholics, liberal Christians, members of Free Religious associations, and so forth, have no rights which good puritan Christians are bound to respect. "This is a Christian country"—so say the signers of the protest,—and ours is a Christian civilization." They emphasize this sentence, and repeat it several times in different variations. It is indeed astonishing that the Protestants (among whom are some of our most profound jurists and lawyers) should have given vent to such a monstrous assertion. Neither in fact nor in law has this assertion the least foundation. On the contrary, this is not a Christian country, and ours is not a Christian civilization. If the expressions "Christian country" and "Christian civilization" shall not be considered meaningless, hollow phrases, but if a sense is to be connected therewith, then these expressions have no other meaning than the following, viz.: The distinguishing features of Christianity are characterizing all our public and private life, and the superstructure of our polity is based upon the foundation of this peculiar Christianity. What are the distinguishing features of Christianity said to give character to our country and our civilization? I suppose that our protesting fellow-citizens will not claim that Christian dogmatism is thus all-prevailing. For this would be such a flagrant contradiction of the existing state of things that even the dimmest eye would perceive it as such. But they will probably insist that the Christian ethics are at the bottom of all modern civilization, and that their spirit is permeating all the public life of our country, and of our American institutions. Let us examine this assertion for a moment. The distinguishing features of Christian ethics, whereby the same differ from other ethical systems, is love, meekness, submission even to wrong (Matthew v., 39-41; Luke vi., 20; I. Corinth. vi., 7). As sublime and idealistic as this principle of "love" and of submission to wrong appears upon first sight, it is nevertheless a fact that in our sublimary world and in real life it is not carried out, and cannot be carried out, and ought not to be carried out. Not submission to wrong, not meek suffering to injustice, but standing up manfully for his rights, and battling for the same, if necessary, with all energy and all courage, resisting and resenting wrong with all might and means, that is it, and not Christian "love" that characterizes our modern civilization.

The modern world regards it even as a moral duty for every man thus to battle for his rights; for in standing up for his own rights the individual assists in better securing for human society right and justice in abstracto. Instead of the Christian doctrine, "Suffer injustice," the modern unchristian, or perhaps anti-Christian, civilization teaches: "Do not suffer injustice; resent it; and if any one smites you upon your right cheek, do not turn to him your left cheek, but strike back; have him properly punished, and help thereby to maintain the virtues of justice and manhood in the world." Such are the unchristian ideas permeating the politics in all Christendom, and the codes of all modern States; and in no State of the Union, nor anywhere else, is there a law-book which is characterized by Christian "love," and which therefore could be designated Christian.

It is true that in these latter days attempts have been made to pervert the spirit of our public institution, and to "Christianize" our constitutions and institutions. Would these dangerous attempts be crowned by success, then hundreds of thousands of American citizens would be outlawed, as once Roger Williams was, at a time when Massachusetts was yet a "Christian State"; and even a Socrates, a Seneca, a Marcus Aurelius, a Spinoza, would not be allowed to enjoy equal rights with the "Christians." These dangerous attempts, engendered by ignorance, bigotry, and fanaticisms (and the protest submitted to you, which so boldly proclaims the ominous Christian State idea, belongs to that category of dangerous onslaughts),—these dangerous attempts must therefore be withstood; they must be crushed; they must be killed off in the beginning; our country, our constitutions, our courts, our laws, our literature, our whole civilization must remain by all means what they are—un-Christian.

3. The signers of the protest and their friends cannot complain that they are robbed of the Bible in consequence of your late resolution prohibiting the reading of the Protestant Bible in the schools. For they can have all the Bible-reading they desire in their families, in their churches, in their Sabbath-school, and none will hinder them.

4. But we go further, and maintain that the Bible in its integrity, is no fit text-book at all for our schools. Much of its contents is of very little value, or of no value at all, for educational purposes. There are stories in the Bible of such a character that no father would select them for the edification of his family. There is much in it which can only be of interest to the antiquarian, or to the specialist in Israel's history, but which can hardly be expected to be of great moral influence upon the children, and upon men in general. There are whole chapters, and whole books, which are beyond comprehension of the unlearned, and which can only be correctly understood by the aid of special historical, archaeological, and linguistic studies; and if the Bible is read unaided by such auxiliary studies, such reading can and does but fill the minds of the majority with misconceptions and totally erroneous ideas. It is for all these reasons, therefore, not to be wondered at that there is scarcely a head of a household who does not, whilst reading from the Bible in his family, wish that there were expurgated editions of the book, as there are of Shakspeare. And if we would have such editions of a Bible for the people, there would still remain enough of the sublime moral laws, of inspired orations, of the prophets, of divine hymns or the Psalmists, of proverbs, full of true wisdom, etc., that would in reality be edifying, and of most wholesome influence upon the formation of character in men. To edit such a people's Bible, which would give satisfaction to all concerned, is, however, a very difficult task, the solution of which can hardly be expected in our days.

5. This is not the proper place to enter into an argument with the pious "Christians," whether such selections from the Bible, whether sacred anthologies are admissible or desirable, or not. To the one fact, however, I would call attention: that the Jewish redactors of the Hebrew text, and the oldest translators of the original into other languages, when recognizing offensive anthropomorphisms in the biblical accounts of the Almighty, have frequently and purposely tried to soften them down, or to obliterate them altogether. Every biblical scholar knows this, and those who do not know it may be referred to Geiger's Urschrift der Bibel, or to the more accessible article of the Orthodox Anglican minister, C. D. Gensburg, on "Versions of the Bible," in Kitzo's Cyclopadia. Surely, the simple statement of facts like these should serve to wean us from that blind bibliolatry, in which so many have been brought up, without endangering in the least the true veneration for the Scriptures which every one will foster in his heart who really understands and appreciates the divine contents of Israel's literature. The statement of such facts like these should also serve to demonstrate the admissibility of a people's Bible, of a revision of the Bible such as took place among the Jews after the return from Babylonia.

But why should I continue to speak on this topic? I do not flatter myself to be able to convert those who, like heathens, worship the letter of the Bible, but to whom, notwithstanding this, the Bible is a book with seven seals. No argument will be powerful enough to stop them in their cry: "The Bible for our public schools! The entire Bible! King James' Bible, with all its errors, and with all its false headings and summaries over chapters!" Let them go on in their unjustifiable demands, in their unholy endeavors to nullify freedom of conscience, in their mediæval attempts to "Christianize" our Constitution, and to disfranchise one-half or three-fourths of the United States. Let them go on; but of you, gentlemen of the Board of Education, it is expected that you will do your duty as true Americans, and act in fairness and justice toward all.

6. While we most decidedly dissent from the main course of ideas in the protest laid before you, we do not hesitate to say that to some thoughts of the same we subscribe most heartily, and declare our full assent. The protest says that "mere intellectual culture, unless controlled by moral principle, is liable to become a curse instead of a blessing." This is most certainly true. "The State has a right"—so the protest says in another place—"to train the future citizen in good morals." We assent and add: The State has not only a right, it has more than this; it has the duty to provide for the moral training of the rising generation. The American States and local communities do greatly neglect their duty in this respect. Our schools suffer under the great fault that they pay too little attention to the education of the children, and lay all stress upon instruction,—instruction in practical branches of studies. Utility—this is the guiding-star in American school-dom. But ought this to be the chief aim and object of our schools? Have they fulfilled their great and holy task when they produce good arithmeticians, efficient bookkeepers, smart business men? Is it the main end of our American schools to bring up our youth that they may successfully run along in the race after riches? Certainly not. Our schools ought to strive after higher ideals. They should be among the most mighty factors for elevating the nation to a higher plane of morality. The too realistic and materialistic character of American schools should be counterbalanced by introducing into the same a number of such studies which would, if of no measurable value in practical life, have the tendency to ennoble the heart, to better the sentiments, to purify the will, and to give to the whole mind a higher turn.

To bring forth such a result, I would respectfully suggest that your honorable body pass rules and regulations of the following contents:—

The classes shall be opened every morning with appropriate songs. To this singing ten minutes shall be devoted. The next thirty minutes in the first morning hour shall be devoted to instruction in unsectarian ethics, and—in the two highest grades—to empirical psychology.

It is not difficult to grade properly the rich material of undenominational ethics. In the lower grades instructions might be given on the duties of children to themselves, to their parents, teachers, playmates, to grown people in general, etc. In a higher grade their hearts might be impressed with the duties of masters toward servants, and servants toward masters, with the mutual relations of members of a family, with the idea of faithfulness in one's station in life, with the duties of the citizen toward the State and the government, etc. In the next grade a systematized course of ethics might be gone through; and here would be the proper place to define such conceptions as virtue and vice, good and evil, truth and untruth; egotism as the root of all evil might be analyzed, and so forth. For the highest grades, as we have indicated above, empirical psychology might be instructed in, to the greatest advantage of the moral elevation of the children.

In the imparting of such lessons we would deem it proper (and we believe none would object to this) to quote carefully selected verses from the Bible, and to have them memorized by the children; or to relate stories from sacred history as well as from profane history, in illustration of the lesson given, which thereby must be made highly interesting and captivating to the children.

I do not know whether there are such text-books of unsectarian ethics extant. If there should none such exist which you could consider suitable for your purpose, it might be a wise action if the honorable Board would offer a prize of seven hundred dollars for the best graded text-book in undenominational ethics. Respectfully submitted,

R. FELSENTHAL.

POSTSCRIPT.

In perusing the foregoing document once more, I find that I have given a very deficient and incomplete definition of the "Christian State," in whose behalf the signers of the protest have entered the arena so defiantly, and also, now, presuming the "Christian State" to exist with us, draw from this presumption their remarkable conclusion in regard to the Bible in the public schools. Desirous that the present counter-protest be brought before the honorable Board of Education without delay, and, therefore, not having time for copying it once more and inserting what I wish to add in its proper place, I ask respectfully to be pardoned when I offer some additional remarks in the form of a postscript.

"A Christian State" means not only a State whose institutions and laws are permeated by the spirit of Christian ethics, but it means a State wherein the Christian Church, or a branch of it, is acknowledged as the ruling State Church. So were the Papal States and the kingdom of Naples "Christian States" as long as they existed, because they recognized only one branch of the Christian religion, and the Christian Church; viz., the Roman Catholic Church; and Jews, Protestants, etc., could live there by sufferance only. So were Mecklenburg and Norway, until a short number of years ago, Christian States, because their Constitutions declared the Protestant religion as the State religion, and non-Protestants were denied equal rights with Protestants. So was Maryland, forty or fifty years ago, still a Christian State, because her Constitution then in force contained the clause that only believers in the Trinity were eligible or appointable to State offices. So was North Carolina, not long since, still a Christian State, because her Constitution insisted that State offices could be filled only by confessors of the Christian religion. So was England a Christian State before she emancipated the Catholics in 1829, and opened the gates of the Parliament to the Jews in 1858; and of her it may even to-day be said that she is a Christian State, because there is an established State Church there, to whose support Jews, Dissenters, and Catholics are forced to pay their contributions; and because, if I am not mistaken, some high clerical dignitaries of the State Church are ex officio sitting as members in the upper House of Parliament.

But, happily, our Union, and the States in our Union, have now all refuted the obsolete Christian State idea. They have broken the chains which the Christian State had riveted. God be praised that Church and State are separated in our country! God be praised that the Constitution of the United States and of the single States are now all freed from this danger-breeding ideal! God be praised that they are "atheistical," as they have been accused to be by some over-zealous, dark warriors who desire to overcome the nineteenth century, and to restore again the fourteenth century! God be praised that this has been accomplished in our Union; and may now our Constitutions and State institutions remain "atheis-tical" just as well as our manufactories, our banks, and our commerce are.

And in the face of this clear fact, in the face of the fact that everywhere in the civilized world where still some remnants of the mediæval Christian State are remaining, the nations are striving to throw off that yoke, and to throw it to the rubbish of past ages,—in the face of these facts, our protesting fellow-citizens maintain that ours is a Christian State and a Christian government! It is strange, indeed, that prominent and well-educated gentlemen, and particularly that lawyers who certainly should have known better, should sign their names under such a wild, unfounded, and untrue statement, and that upon the basis of this bottomless statement they should come forward and demand that the Christian Bible, the Protestant Bible, the Old Testament, and the New Testament, should be text-books in our schools, and that Christian dogmas and views should be instilled into the hearts of all the children in the land, the children of non-Christians included.

Gentlemen of the Board of Education! It would no doubt be an insult to you were we to express the fear that you would give countenance and support to the views of the protest. We are, on the contrary, confident that you will side firmly and unshakably with the nineteenth century, and make front against the fourteenth century; and that you will not undo your former action in regard to the Bible in the public schools.

Very respectfully, B. FELSENTHAL.
—N. Y. Jewish Times, Nov. 12.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S VIEWS OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, {
NEW YORK, Sept. 27. }

I went yesterday to hear O. B. Frothingham, the President of the Free Religious Association, preach to his Independent Church in the handsome Masonic Temple, at the corner of Twenty-third Street. Mr. Frothingham took for his subject, "The Liberal's Allegiance to Faith." The word "Liberal" is used by our friends of the Boston Investigator, and of THE INDEX, much as the word "Freethinker" is used in England. In Mr. Frothingham's sermon there was indeed much that was in the highest degree noble and true; but some phrases occurred here and there that, to my mind, clashed very awkwardly with his more thorough utterances. To understand the standpoint from which Mr. Frothingham preached, it is necessary to recall to our readers the principles of the Free Religious Association. To quote the words of its last official report: "Its members may be members of churches and sects, and adherents of some special form of religion, or they may not be. In the membership of this Association, no one is asked what are his religious connections elsewhere. Each member is responsible for himself, and no one for another." Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson, who was appointed by the President to deliver the opening address at the last annual conference of the Free Religious Association, affirmed that its members are not even asked to agree on what they mean by the word religion, and added that "it was the best compliment ever paid to the Free Religious Association," when some one wrote that he had been present at a previous "convention, where half-a-dozen persons talked about religion, and each of the half-dozen put a different definition on the word." "Thank God," says Colonel Higginson, "that each man or woman here can define religion in his or her own way. If there is a man to whom all religion is concentrated in the Roman Catholic Church, and in the Jesuit order of that Church, and he can come here and confer with us, let him come. And if, on the other hand, there is an Atheist, who elevates Atheism into a religion, putting his own sense of the word, and his convictions of truth, into honest life, obedient to the laws of God and man, whether he calls them by that name or not, let him come here and take a seat—take the highest seat among us. I will say 'the highest,' for if a man is consistent with his own ideal of right, who is entitled to take a seat above him?"

I cannot, I avow, understand this position. The honest Roman Catholic, the sincere disciple of the Society of Jesus, recognizes the duty of complete submission to authority in all matters of religious opinion. But the Roman Catholic doctrine of submission to authority is, or ought to be, the very antithesis of the views of the Free Religionists, for it negates all possible freethought. And, either consciously or unconsciously, Mr. Higginson himself, by speaking of the Atheist possibly elevating Atheism into a religion, affirms his own conviction, at any rate, of the inferiority of Atheism as compared with this undefined religion. Mr. Frothingham, in his sermon, affirmed that the "negative" campaign by the Freethought party against superstition had proved a failure. Yet if it had not been for that negative campaign, conducted by brave men and women, against overwhelming odds, and through many generations of apparently hopeless struggle, how would it have been possible to-day for Mr. Frothingham to address a congregation in sermons, ignoring prayer, rejecting the doctrine of natural depravity, discussing the atonement, turning indignantly from the dogma of eternal torment, denying special providence, repudiating the divine inspiration of the Old and New Testaments, and generally affirming heretical views on the most religious questions?

Martyr Bruno did not fail; the Encyclopædists did not lose every battle they fought; Paine, Kneeland, and Carille did achieve some success, even if they only won for Mr. Frothingham a safe standing-place for the utterance of his teachings. The New York Herald to-day gives a fair summary of Mr. Froth-ingham's sermon, and I select a few extracts, not as doing justice to the whole, but to give my readers some notion of the teachings. The preacher said:—

"The possession of faith is one of the ennobling attributes of man. To be without it is to be without imagination or higher instincts. To have such a feeling and to allow it to dwindle into nothingness is most reprehensible in a life like this."

This is misleading; "faith" in the unknowable is not an ennobling attribute. Confidence in the improbability of humanity; faith in the ultimate enfranchisement of the human mind from the trammels of superstition; earnest belief in the redemption of the masses from the bondage of poverty and ignorance; all these are ennobling; but the "faith" in an impenetrable to-morrow, the faith in an unknowable Deity; this faith—strong only in proportion to the superstition of the faithful—has in it only deteriorating elements. Mr. Frothingham would probably reply that he does not mean religious faith, but unfortunately many will so understand him. Defending the Freethinker's position, Mr. Frothingham said:—

"It is common to exclaim that the Orthodox outnumber the Liberals so greatly, that the first occupy the largest place in the chart of Christendom. However, enthusiasm is not dependent upon numbers. As we have seen in Alexander's campaign in Persia, and in many other wars, how often does a small handful of people vanquish a great horde! It is said also that wealth is on the side of the Orthodox. This is true. Somehow or other, Conservatism does get hold of the money, while Radicalism either spends its money or does not get it to spend. Here is a Church, almost world-wide, which says, 'Come in; you shall be able to move in the best society.' But every church is only weakened by these slipshod, smirking people. If Liberalism makes no such appeal to mankind, it is all the stronger for being unable to make one."

Mr. Frothingham urged that—

"The sectarian spirit also accounts for the wealth and extension of the Orthodox bodies. It is the sectarian spirit that will build two churches where there was only one; that will found newspapers and missions and colleges. Is it desire for the truth that impels these doings? No; it is the desire to advance the prosperity and glory of your sect. This sectarian spirit is made up of some of the ugliest qualities of which human nature is composed. Liberalism offers nothing like this as inducement to people to establish their own platform. If the Liberal has any passion, it is for good-will, for kindness, for charity. It is unreasonable to suppose that these people will have the same strength of enthusiasm as those whose fanaticism is born of their sectarianism. Men will always fight harder and spend more money to put people down than to lift them up."

Taking affirmative ground, Mr. Frothingham says:—

"It is in preaching that the Liberal religion makes its strongest appeal to mankind for support. To make it manifest that this life is really a worthy, beautiful, profound thing, is an imperative task, and this is the task to which Liberalism sets itself—to teach men to revere it, to love its beauty; so that they, for the mere love of it, will practice the noblest virtues. It requires the devotion of any people to make this manifest, to reveal the duty of practical holiness in man's daily relations. Liberalism speaks to its own: 'If you feel deeply the importance of character, put your shoulders to the wheel, and teach this gospel of character until it is fairly established in the hearts of men!'"

It was when Mr. Frothingham spoke of God that he seemed to me to convey what must either be the opposite of his own convictions, or must be fatally contradictory of his other teachings. He described "God" as a "conscious," "willing" Being, and only complained of the Orthodox interpretation of the name. He said:—

"Think that the word 'God' has stood for all that is awful and miserable, and yet lose this word and you lose all. Liberalism would fain re-read it, would cast the demons all out of it, would fill it with such sweetness and holiness that even the most enthusiastic materialist would breathe it with reverence. The word 'immortality,' that glorious word—how it has been cribbed, confined, clipped, perverted to the uses of particular sects, till it has come to be interpreted as the very reverse of its real and original meaning. The Spiritualist, the Pantheist, the Theist, the Catholic, and the Protestant all attach to it different meanings. Liberalism does not appear with a horoscope of the future. It leaves all questions of private pain or pleasure out of all regard. It says: 'Think of your power to leave something to mankind that will be immortal, that will be deathless!'"

He concluded:—

"In order that I may emphasize again the advantages of the Liberal spirit, I would say that it keeps open all the doors and windows of the truth. It fixes nothing, so that it cannot be moved. Every other church claims to have a monopoly of certain beliefs, and says that there are certain questions which must never be asked, certain doctrines which must never be disturbed. Liberals alone take the ground that the whole domain of thought and faith is free. At the same time Liberalism tries its hand again and again at the solution of the infinite problem of life in the universe of matter and mind. It is a great thing to live believing that nothing is unknowable, that we can—with time, effort, and ability, or at any rate that others may—know everything. Simply to stand in that attitude is already to stand with the head in the light. Granted there are problems which we shall never solve; but should we not do what we can to contribute toward that result? Liberals stand in that position, and claim the allegiance of all men who hope that light may come where now there is darkness; that sweetness, tranquillity, and hope shall reign in the place of fear, superstition, and dogmatism."

Right or wrong, preachers like Mr. Frothingham do the world good service. For the grand truths uttered we thank them, and we listen attentively and reverently even where we differ.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.
—National Reformer, Oct. 2.

THE CHRISTIAN SCHOOL QUESTION.

EDITOR COURIER:—

I am grieved and surprised at the course you have taken in the discussion of the school question. You seem to forget the important truth that ours is a Christian country—a Protestant country. A few days ago you quoted an extract from a speech made by Dr. Butler at the recent session of the Episcopalian Church Congress in Philadelphia, condemning the practice of reading the Bible in the public schools. You seemed to quote this with approval. I am one of those who believe in the daily reading of the Holy Scriptures in the public schools. Who among the people of this country oppose this? First come the Jews, who are taught to hate Christianity. They don't want the Christian Bible read in our schools, and they would like to banish Christian literature therefrom. Indeed, in Philadelphia they are now demanding that Wayland's Moral Philosophy shall not be used as a text-book, because it teaches the doctrine of the trinity. Next come the infidels, who deny the great and sublime truths of Christianity. This class comprises those who have no religion at all, and transcendentalists who have been led away by that will-o'-the-wisp called Spiritualism. These are for banishing from our public schools that grand Christian literature which has been the slow, healthy growth of centuries. This infidel class is largely recruited by German freethinkers, who come to our shores by thousands every year. These German infidels are by far the most dangerous. Although Germany was the land that gave birth to the Reformation, she has since given birth to a whole brood of freethinking, irreligious, and immoral writers, whose works have poisoned the minds of millions. The growth of infidelity here in this land which was dedicated by our fathers to Christ is truly alarming. Lastly, the Catholic Church, or rather its bishops and priests, are opposed to the Protestant Bible in the public schools; but probably would not object to the reading of the Douay or Catholic version. The Jews, the Infidels—German and American,—and the Catholics, are all striving to drive out the Bible from the common schools. Shall we, the descendants of those who built up Protestant Christianity on this continent, submit to this? The point has, I am informed, been yielded in many parts of the country, and there are thousands of our schools in which the blessed truths of the Bible are no longer heard. There should be an awakening on this subject. We don't want our common schools to be secularized. They are, or should be, Protestant Christian schools. We tolerate here the Jew, the Infidel, and the Catholic; they are allowed to follow their own course only by our free institutions. They must not undertake to drive religion from our public schools. If I had my own way about the matter, I would not allow a man or woman to teach in the public schools unless he or she should be a member in good standing in some one of our evangelical churches. Christianity is our only hope as a people. To it we must look for our preservation as a nation in the future. The early settlers of New England understood this, and acted upon this principle. To the sturdy men who landed on that rock-bound and desolate coast we owe a debt of gratitude for establishing pure Christianity on this continent. It must not be destroyed by Jews, Infidels, or Catholics. We must teach these people that the common school system is ours—that we intend it shall be a Christian system of teaching. For the toleration which we have afforded them, they must share the burden of supporting it, whether they are pleased with it or not. Pure Christianity and education based upon it should be the platform on which every American is to stand. German freethinkers are endeavoring to destroy our Christian Sabbath, and break down all respect for it; the Jewish people in our large cities persist in keeping open their places of business on Sunday in violation of law; the infidel has no respect for one day over another, and talks his disbelief in Christ in an open and blatant manner; and the Catholic clergy are striving by all means to carry out their Popish programme. All these elements are trying to override that system of Christianity worshipped by our fathers, and which through their trials and sufferings took firm root on this continent. I have been a constant reader of your paper since it started, and have often noticed that you have been very partial in your comments upon fairs, festivals, or meetings held by Catholics, Spiritualists, Jews, anti-Christian secret societies, and Free-thinkers; but I have noticed that you rarely take the pains to afford an opportunity to read in your columns an occasional sermon preached by any one of our evangelical clergymen. This partiality shows on which side you stand. All this I could endure with patience; but now that you are in favor of banishing morality and Christianity from our public schools I feel called on to protest, and, if you persist in your course, to cut loose from you.

A READER.

COMMENTS. The author of the above communication is at liberty to "cut loose" from us at his earliest convenience. Personally, we have respect for him, and regret to have been the occasion of injury to his feelings. But for his frank avowal that the above are his honest sentiments, we could have hardly believed that there is in our midst a man of ordinary intelligence who is such an inordinate bigot as the writer of the above proves himself to be. We repeat, if he wishes to discontinue his reading of the Courier, we know of no law to prevent him from so doing. And if he wishes his name given to the public, he shall be gratified. If he thinks he can intimidate us, he may take his lifetime to find out his mistake. So far as this paper is concerned, we aim to treat all religious sects alike. Religious persecution has always been hateful to us.

Now, a word concerning the Bible in our public schools. American citizens of the Hebrew faith are not believers in the New Testament Scriptures. They help support our schools, and they should have the same privileges in the schools that Christians possess. Again, the Catholics do not accept King James' version of the Bible as authentic. There are other citizens who utterly reject the Bible as a book of inspired teachings. The whole difficulty can be got over by discontinuing the reading of the Bible entirely in the common schools. Let it be settled that our public schools are not for religious instruction. The highest order of morals, without touching upon religious faith, should be inculcated. Let every man have the largest liberty of conscience possible. Let not the Jew attempt to force his creed upon the Christian, nor the Christian, by the aid of our public institutions, seek to impose his faith upon the Jew. Our friend is an earnest Protestant Christian. He will hardly consent to have it said that the truths of Christianity require the aid of civil law for their proper spread and growth. We tell our friend that if the Jews should ever try to deprive him of his religious liberty, he would find us arrayed with him in resisting the attempted usurpation. Or, if he should ever seek to interfere with the religious privileges of the Jews, he would find us resisting him. Our government is neither Hebrew nor Christian, neither Catholic nor Protestant. We have not yet gone so far in blasphemy as to place God in the Constitution, as some over-zealous people would have done. The preservation of our free institutions may depend upon the prevalence of pure Christianity, but they do not depend upon any sectarian system.

Our friend, if allowed his way, would connect Church and State in this country. The whole drift of his letter shows it. But he should know that German freethinkers have just as good religious rights in the United States as he possesses, and no better.—Titusville (Pa.) Courier, Nov. 19.

CHAUNCEY WRIGHT.

The sudden and untimely death of Mr. Chauncey Wright should be mourned not only by the few whose privilege it has been to enjoy the friendship of so wise and amiable a man, but by all those to whom sound philosophy is a matter of real concern. None, however, save the friends who knew the rich treasures of his mind as shown in familiar conversation, are likely to realize how great is the loss which philosophy has sustained in his death. For not only was he wanting in the mere literary knack of expressing his thoughts in language generally intelligible and interesting, but he was also singularly devoid of the literary ambition which leads one to seek to influence the public by written exposition. Indeed, had he possessed more of this kind of ambition, perhaps the requisite knack would not have been wanting; for Mr. Wright was not deficient in clearness of thought or in command of language. The difficulty—or, if we prefer so to call it, the esoteric character—of his writings was due rather to the sheer extent of their richness and originality. His essays and review articles were pregnant with valuable suggestions, which he was wont to emphasize so slightly that their significance might easily pass unheeded; and such subtle suggestions made so large a part of his style that, if any of them were lost sight of by the way, the point and bearing of the entire argument was liable to be misapprehended. Consider, for instance, the richness of his last article in the Nation, on "German Darwinism," which, incidental to the notice of a not very important book, contains one of the most profound expositions of Baconian philosophy that has ever been given to the world. Here, as in most of Mr. Wright's most recent papers, there is little difficulty in following his train of thought; but it is this same compact suggestiveness, so to speak, which makes his elaborate essay on "The Evolution of Self-Consciousness" (North American Review, April, 1873,) so hard to understand, and the exuberance of which half tempted him to give this paper the very esoteric title of "The Cognition of Cogito." A writer who kept the public in his mind would not work in this way, but would more often give pages loaded with concrete illustrations where Mr. Wright only gave sentences almost epigrammatic in their terseness. If Mr. Wright did not keep the public in his mind while writing, it was not from the pride of knowledge, for no feeling could have been more foreign to him, and there was something almost touching in the endless patience with which he would strive in conversation to make abstruse matter clear to ordinary minds; it was because he was a writer who did not regard himself as in the presence of a public, who though in soliloquy, and whose favorite expressions were fraught with connotations too numerous and too far-reaching to be quickly apprehended.

It was only some such circumstance as these, joined to a kind of mental inertness which made some unusually strong incentive needful to any prolonged attempt at literary self-exposition, that prevented Chauncey Wright from taking rank among the foremost philosophers of the nineteenth century.

An intellect more powerful for its union of acuteness with sobriety has not yet been seen in our country. In these respects he reminds one of Mr. Mill whom he so warmly admired. But, while hardly inferior to Mill in penetrating and fertile ingenuity, we think he unquestionably surpassed the latter in native soberness or balance of mind. A thinker more rigidly loyal to Baconian principles we do not know where to seek; and the paper on "German Darwinism," where he points out the kind of philosophizing most congenial to his temperament, reads now like a parting reminder to show us what we have lost in losing such a mind.

It is indeed a bitter thing to lose a thinker of this mould, just in the prime vigor of life, and at a time when the growing habit of writing seemed to be making authorship easier and pleasanter, so that in years to come we were likely to have had even richer and brighter thoughts from the pen that must now forever lie idle. The general character of the philosophy—"unsystematic" perhaps, but fruitful in hints—that might have been by and by more fully illustrated, is well enough outlined in the scattered papers which ought now to be gathered together for convenient study. In these are to be found suggestions of a scheme of thought such as has already been wrought into shape by Mill and Bain, but perhaps even more severely scientific, even more freed from the "teleologisches Gefühl" (I do not say therefore necessarily more true), than any other yet propounded. And along with this there are solutions of special points in the economy of Nature which well deserve attention for their own sake, as in the paper on Phylloxera contributed to the Memoirs of the American Academy. But all that could now be done in the way of editing would give but an inadequate impression of Chauncey Wright to those who have not listened to his wise and pleasant talk. To have known such a man is an experience one cannot forget or outlive. To have had him pass away, leaving so scanty a record of what he had in him to utter, is nothing less than a great public calamity.—John Fiske, in the Harvard Advocate.

A JEWISH PROTEST.

This afternoon President Stanton, of the Board of Education, transmitted to the board, in regular meeting, the following letter from the Jewish ministers of this city:—

HON. M. H. STANTON, PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION:

Dear Sir,—The Board of Hebrew Ministers beg to submit the accompanying article in the Jewish Record to the consideration of the body over whom you preside. They, and the congregations they represent, confidently believe that the sense of justice by which you are animated, and your perfect knowledge of the principles which govern our institutions of learning, will secure an early removal of the cause of their complaint.

Yours respectfully, S. MORAIS.

The article referred to is headed "Sectarianism in Schools," and says: "The objectionable book is entitled Elements of Moral Science, by Francis Wayland, D.D., and while admirably adapted for those who are to be instructed in Christianity, and the doctrines of a Trinity, yet as our public schools are established and paid for out of the purses of all denominations, they are intended to implant in the rising generation secular knowledge, leaving to the Church the duty and the obligation of instilling peculiar tenets.

"After a cursory glance through the book in question, we see enough to make it the imperative duty of Jewish parents to require its use discontinued, and some other, free from sectarian bias, substituted." It then goes on to cite the objectionable passages to the Jewish community, which refer to Jesus Christ as one of the Godhead.—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, Nov. 9, 1875.

THE PARIS CORRESPONDENT of the London Times telegraphs the principal passages in the speech of His Holiness to a company of pilgrims from Franche Comté. In the course of this speech the Pope took occasion to attribute the commercial strength of France and her possession of a sound currency to the piety of her people, and more than hinted that the soft paper currency of Italy was a curse upon her for the sins of her rulers. This passage in the speech runs as follows:—

"I admire, I repeat, that transformation of France, and I rejoice at it. I admire her edifying pilgrimages, the assiduity with which her people approach the sacraments, and the works of charity which multiply in her. I, lastly, admire every great work done in her in favor of religion. But I admire much more the pity and goodness of God toward us. God has wished to show by his favors that your works of justice and holiness have ascended to his throne like balmy incense. Is it not true that at the present time trade is flourishing in France, that the harvest is rich and luxuriant in several provinces, that sounding money circulates abundantly in your country, while elsewhere, and especially here in Italy, it disappears, to give place to another currency which gives no sound save that produced by a great mass of paper thrown violently on to a hard table or on to the pavement? I will say, then, and you will say with me, that these public acts of piety and charity, and these religious practices, so far from deserving the sarcasm of wicked men and the disapprobation of weak individuals, touch the heart of God in our favor, and induce him to console us by spiritual peace, and even by the abundance of earthly riches."

A MILKMAN said he never saw a pail of water but he had an unconquerable desire to put a bit of milk into it.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE PANTHEIST.

Weary of familiar faces,
Nature hides them in her bosom,
While a fresher throng emerges,
Radiant with unwrinkled beauty.

Persons, races, generations,
Fleeting organs of the spirit,
Fuller swells its diapason
Through the slow-evolving ages.

Leaf-like bloom they, leaf-like wither;
But the soul of man forever
Through them climbs to wider vision,
Its ideal seeth clearer.

For, re-born, re-youthed forever,
Spirit, Nature, keep their vigor,
Into fairer blossoms bursting,
And dispensing richer odors.

Ray of rays and fount of brightness,
Kindling suns with life and splendor!
Heart of hearts, forever beating!
Boundless sea, us inlets filling!

Force of forces, never weary!
Cloudless azure of the spirit,
Raying justice, truth, and beauty!
Thou art round us, thou art in us,

Welling at the roots of being,
Wearing Nature as a garment;
Why repine we, wherefore murmur,
That illusions swiftly vanish,
Melting into changeless substance?

B. W. BALL.

IN MEMORY OF JOSEPH GUIBORD.

The storm of six long years is past,
And peacefully he rests at last;
Thrice hearsed, thrice cursed, let honest fame
Blow treble honor to his name;
If thrice six years of praise ensue
'Tis but the hero's earthly due.

The humble printer's mighty art,
Though banned, will vindicate her son,
And tell to every truthful heart—

While woods are green, and waters run—
That he who braves a despot's frown
Will wear at length the victor's crown;
Even when slain, and torn asunder,
And scattered piecemeal, trodden under
The brutal feet of frenzied foes,
His deeds will rise as Christ's arose,
And borne upon the chainless air
Will plead for freedom everywhere.

Let curses from their rookery fly,
And flap their foul wings o'er his bones,
The autumn wind that round him moans
Will mock them, while in vain they try
To penetrate those friendly stones.

Come what might come, from man or elf,
He dared not quarrel with himself,
Nor stab the Truth that in his breast
Had found a warm and welcome nest.
No terrors of the burning lake,
Fancied or real, beyond the grave,
Nor purgatorial flames could shake
His manly soul, so firm and brave,
For he was neither fool nor slave.
True to himself, he lived and died,
Not wilful, nor elate with pride,
But steadfast in his honest thought,
Self-justified, self-ruled, self-taught.

Our Brother! wheresoever now
Thy spirit lifts its free-born brow,
Behold thy kindred! Not alone
In Canada will thousands own
Relationship; throughout all lands—
Wherever freedom shines or dawns,—
An army with uplifted hands,
Impelled by glowing links that bind
Nobility of mind to mind,
Will crown thee with their benisons.

Thus, Guibord! shall the commonwealth
Of truth's and reason's fearless sons—
Scorners of men who think by stealth,—
Now hold thee in fraternal trust,
And consecrate thine injured dust,
While woods grow green, and water runs.

G. MARTIN.

—Montreal Witness.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 27.

L. G. Felch, $10; Geo. L. Clarke, $20; E. M. Waddell, $3.20; S. B. Scofield, $2; W. F. Padelford, $3.20; L. Coellis, 75 cents; H. J. Young, $1; W. J. Potter, $2; S. H. Morse, $2; Jas. Davison, 80 cents; L. O. Bass, $10; H. Colt, $10; Chas. Richardson, $10; C. D. B. Mills, $12.50; O. F. Mason, $5; C. E. Gager, $1; L. P. Babb, $1; W. L. Ormsby, 25 cents; G. W. Park, 10 cents; James W. Bartlett, $20; Mrs. C. A. Tucker, $10; Thos. Mumford, $13; E. L. Saxon, 75 cents; C. H. Greene, $1.60; G. A. Atwood, $1.60; P. B. Dean, $3; Chas. Ochs, $3; A. C. Edmunds, $1; C. A. Greenleaf, $1.50; Leonard Church, $7.55; American News Co., $2.60; C. L. Wait, 25 cents; R. P. Halliwell, $10; John Weiss, $10; John Wilson, $20; E. P. Wilder, $1.60; J. Finlayson, $4; H. K. Oliver, Jr., $1.20; R. H. Ranney, $1.20; Frank M. Reed, $1.50; Cash, $2.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 2, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

THE FIRST number of the Pacific Liberal, a little eight-page monthly paper just started by Mr. A. J. Boyer at San Francisco, has been issued. Taking for its motto—"The Absolute Secularization of the State is the Hope of the Nation: Mental Liberty is its Chief Corner-Stone," and adopting as its platform the "Demands of Liberalism," it of course commands our hearty sympathy. It comprehends the crisis, stands unflinchingly for secular schools, and cannot fail to be very useful. Let such voices be heard everywhere.

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

THE EVANGELICAL reaction against the assaults of the Roman Catholic Church on the public school system has expressed itself in the establishment of a new sixteen-page monthly journal, called the National Protestant. The first number has been already issued, for November, 1875, at New York. The ground it takes is that of the overwhelming majority of Evangelical churches. Starting with the premise that "everywhere the foreign-born papistical priesthood make war upon the use of the Bible in the public schools," it proposes to defend the existing practice. But to do this, it must go further; and thus the way is paved for the advent of a powerful Christian Amendment party.

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican takes a jovial view of the religious situation: "Mr. Grant is too brave a man to be letting on to be 'scairt' of the Pope. We are not likely to see any closer union of Church and State in this country than the small one for a cent which has been brought about by our Methodist cardinal, Brother Newman. Nor is the administration called upon to borrow trouble about the public schools. We shall have to completely secularize them sooner or later; the sooner, the better. This once done,—and the justice and good policy of it are so obvious that the Protestant clerical mind is becoming reconciled to it,—Trustee Grant of the Metropolitan church need not lie awake nights worrying about the public schools. There is a real hardship and injustice in compelling the Catholic, or Hebrew, or Buddhist citizen to pay taxes for the support of schools in which the Protestant Bible is read, Protestant hymns sung, and Protestant prayers offered. Correct this, and all danger is at an end. The priests may feel themselves compelled by the Syllabus to go on with their complaints and demands for a division of the school-funds; but with many of them it will be very perfunctory and distasteful business, and the intelligent laity will not take any stock in it, even though, for peace's sake, they contribute to the support of the parochial schools. The fact is, that America is at once bigger and more vital than Rome; the Catholic Church can never become strong enough in this country to be a danger until it Americanizes itself; and then it will have ceased to be dangerous. The attempt to manufacture an artificial 'religious issue' for use next year is foredoomed to failure. The American people cannot be induced to look at the Pope's toe through a magnifying glass."

CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTEES OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

For years THE INDEX has been warning the people of the United States that the Constitutional safeguards of their religious liberty are insufficient, and likely to be subjected to a severe and perilous strain in the not distant future. These warnings have been received with indifference, with doubt, with incredulity, even with derision, by the majority of the liberals of the country, although some of them have had sufficient keenness and sweep of vision to comprehend the true state of the case. The cool reception given to these warnings, instead of convincing us of their inutility or superfluity, has only deepened our conviction of the necessity of arousing the people to take in season such precautions as may be effectual in preventing the sudden outbreak of a bitter religious strife in politics—which every patriotic citizen must deprecate as a terrible evil. With this conviction, we proposed, in THE INDEX of January 1, 1874, a form of amendment to the United States Constitution which would secure the desired object, and which has since been published every week on the first page of the paper. Recognizing, however, the fact that the time had not yet come when such a measure would seem to the people to be necessary, we have said very little on the subject directly, preferring to let the weekly publication of the Religious Freedom Amendment produce its natural effect, and to wait till events should prove the necessity of the measure. But last winter we made a private attempt to bring the matter before our countrymen in a way to command their serious attention, as explained by the following letter:—

BOSTON, Jan. 8, 1875.

HON. CARL SCHURZ, U. S. SENATE:

Dear Sir,—I had the great privilege of hearing your noble oration in memory of Charles Sumner, as first delivered in Boston; and still more recently I listened to your lecture on "Educational Problems" in Cambridgeport. The hearing of these earnest words has somehow convinced me that you would sympathize with a wish very near my heart—to secure some Constitutional guarantee of the rights of absolutely free thought and speech. The persistent efforts to secure a recognition of God and Christianity in the United States Constitution, and my own conviction that this movement is only just beginning a very dangerous career, have led me to perceive the fact that, although the Constitution is today wholly free from theology, it very imperfectly protects religious liberty in the separate States, which are not prohibited, as States, from establishing Christianity by law. The first Amendment of the United States Constitution is not broad enough to protect the rights of freethinkers from many kinds of practical violation; and I enclose a printed copy of an amendment of this Amendment, which I have published in THE INDEX for a year. May I hope that you will kindly give me your opinion of it? If it can be improved, I should be very glad to receive your suggestions and to follow them. It is too much, perhaps, to hope that you would propose such an amendment to the Constitution in the Senate; yet I cannot but think that it would be a memorable act in your most honorable Senatorial career to be the first to propose so just, wise, and liberal a measure. Mr. Sumner was so kind as to present in the Senate a remonstrance of over 35,000 names which I had collected in opposition to the "God in the Constitution" movement. Since his death, I know no man in public life to whom I feel drawn to propose such a step as I have ventured to indicate, except yourself; for we have no other statesman worthy, by personal character and public fidelity, to wear his mantle. I cannot repress a hope that you will be willing to propose in some such form an amendment which shall put an end forever to reactionary, bigoted, and illiberal schemes. If I were only in the Senate myself, I should have no object so dear to me as this; and I cannot help believing that you would most nobly signalize your closing term by sending forth this measure to the people. Pardon my enthusiasm in this cause, and believe me

Yours with profound respect,

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

On the last day of his Senatorial term, March 4, 1875, Mr. Schurz returned a very kind reply to the above, of which the following passage (all that is germane to the subject) may be quoted without impropriety:—

"The fate of Mr. Morton's Constitutional Amendment concerning the election of the President may have suggested to you that, during this short session, overcrowded as it was with business, Constitutional Amendments had no chance of even being fairly discussed. The minds of all were filled up with other matters. As to the measure you propose, I am not quite sure whether the cause of religious liberty will at the present time not be better served by the defensive attitude occupied by most of its friends."

It was evident that the time for a bold defence of religious liberty had not yet come.

But during the last summer and autumn the political campaign in Ohio has had the effect of opening many hitherto sealed eyes to the necessity of defensive action, as well as of a "defensive attitude." It is now more than probable that the Presidential campaign of next year will involve a general discussion on the relations of Church and State never yet paralleled in our national history; and, even sooner than we anticipated, the public mind bids fair to be occupied with political issues affecting profoundly the future of religious liberty on this continent. The persistent attack of the Catholic Church on our public school system and the strong Protestant Evangelical reaction against it, the evident coalition of Catholicism and Democracy (confessed by the former and not denied by the latter) in some of the States, the President's speech at Des Moines, and now (last but not least) the just published letter of Hon. James G. Blaine, ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives and a prominent candidate for the Presidency, who proposes a Constitutional Amendment expressly for the defence of an "unsectarian" school system, are so many very significant indications of the novel and grave character of the approaching Presidential campaign. Mr. Blaine's letter, addressed to a prominent Ohio gentleman, is too important not to be here reproduced in full:—

AUGUSTA, Me., Oct. 20, 1875.

My dear Sir,—The public school agitation in your late campaign is liable to break out elsewhere, and, occurring first in one State and then in another, may keep the whole country in a ferment for years to come. This inevitably arouses sectarian feeling, and leads to that bitterest and most deplorable of all strifes—the strife between religious denominations. It seems to me that this question ought to be settled in some definite and comprehensive way—and the only settlement that can be final is the complete victory for non-sectarian schools. I am sure this will be demanded by the American people at all hazards, and at any cost.

The dread of sectarian legislation in this country has been felt many times in the past. It began very early. The first amendment of the Constitution, the joint product of Jefferson and Madison, proposed in 1789, declared that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof." At that time, when the powers of the Federal Government were untried and undeveloped, the fear was that Congress might be the source of danger to perfect religious liberty, and hence all power was taken from it. At the same time the States were left free to do as they pleased in regard to "an establishment of religion," for the tenth amendment, proposed by that eminent jurist, Theophilus Parsons, and adopted contemporaneously with the first, declared that "all powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

A majority of the people in any State in this Union can therefore, if they desire it, have an established church—under which the minority may be taxed for the erection of church-edifices which they never enter, and for the support of creeds which they do not believe. This power was actually exercised in some of the States long after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and, although there may be no positive danger of its revival in the future, the possibility of it should not be permitted. The auspicious time to guard against an evil is when all will unite in preventing it.

And in curing this Constitutional defect, all possibility of hurtful agitation on the school question should be ended also. Just let the old Jefferson-Madison Amendment be applied to the States by adding the following to the inhibitory clauses in Section 10, Article 1, of the Federal Constitution, viz.:—

"No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; nor shall any money so raised ever be divided between religious sects or denominations."

This, you will observe, does not interfere with any State having just such a school system as its citizens may prefer, subject to the single and simple restriction that the schools shall not be made the arena for sectarian controversy or theological disputation. This adjustment, it seems to me, would be comprehensive and conclusive, and would be fair alike to Protestant and Catholic, to Jew and Gentile—leaving the religious faith and the conscience of every man free and unmolested.

Very sincerely yours,

J. G. BLAINE.

We shall have something to say hereafter respecting this notable letter and the proposition it embodies; but at present, wishing merely to call attention to the rapidly growing demand for some additional Constitutional guarantees of religious liberty, we conclude this article with the following communication and editorial reply, extracted from the New York Journal of Commerce, of November 23:—

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 13, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE JOURNAL OF COMMERCE:—In your issue of the 10th inst., in reply to a correspondent, you say: "As the Constitution of the United States guarantees perfect religious liberty to all the people, no State can restrict this legally by any power." I think for once you are at fault. The Constitution merely prescribes that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. Our religious liberty rests on State Constitutions, and the people of any State can adopt what provisions they please in their Constitutions, and restrict religions at their will. Papists are not absolutely free in New Hampshire, unless by a recent enactment.

WHO IS RIGHT?

REPLY.—We are quite aware that, as the Constitution of the United States stood up to the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, this question of religious liberty as between the State and its inhabitants was left to local authority. The general government had tied its hands, not only in the clause quoted above, but also (in the Fourth Article) as to test-oaths; but had left the States at liberty to do as they pleased. Hence many bigoted and unwholesome tests were adopted by State legislatures. We may quote that of Missouri concerning the oath to be taken by priests, which was thought to be within the province of the State, but was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in ex parte Garland, 4 Wallace, 393. The Fourteenth Amendment, it is believed by many, puts an end to this sort of legislation. It declares that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." And it declares "all persons born or naturalized in the United States" to be such citizens. Under this, therefore, they claim perfect religious liberty for all persons born or naturalized in the United States. This claim may not be conceded, but we present it as it is made by those who engineered the Amendment.

It is only necessary to add that the Fourteenth Amendment was as little designed to secure religious liberty as it was to secure woman suffrage; and the Supreme Court would undoubtedly so decide in a test case, following its own precedents. Mr. Blaine's view of the matter is much more practical.

A NOTE FROM DR. BARTOL.

There travels through the newspapers, under sharp commentary, a phrase attributed to "Dr. Bartol," that "the hand of a writer for the daily press joins to the shoulder, but not to the brain,—belonging to some buyer." He really said that it is not unfrequently so. He might add that the voices of pulpits, on platforms, and in judicial courts, are often ventriloquial—not issuing from the seeming places. He wishes not to make needless hits, either to draw the enemy's blood or the enemy's fire. He commends to editors and writers, many of whom he counts among his best friends and benefactors, the grain or two of truth in his remark. It will be a happy day, not far from the millennium, when the pen traces, and the mouth utters, and the types print, not a policy or purchased opinion, but a personal faith, proof against any retaining fee.

O. A. B.

LIBERAL BIGOTRY.

It was the remark of a liberal leader that what he most dreaded now was not the despotism of the conservatives, but the despotism of the radicals. The conservatives, in his judgment, are disposed to make concessions,—at all events, seem willing to do justice to the motives of their opponents; while the radicals, taking advantage of this attitude, showed an inclination to sharpen definitions, erect barriers, raise assumptions to the dignity of dogmas, and condemn the unbelievers in their creed, by the wholesale, to the only perdition they acknowledge,—contempt. It would be pleasant to think there was no truth in such an opinion; probably there is less truth than the giver of the opinion himself imagined. Still, facts, whereon such a judgment might be grounded, are too conspicuous to be put out of sight. The Investigator of the 24th inst. contained an article calculated to confirm the worst apprehensions in this regard; and as the Investigator holds the first place among "infidel" papers, on account of its ability and its frankness, it is worth while to make note of its utterances.

A correspondent writes a communication entitled "Free Religion—Faith," in which, after calling Free Religion "a kind of whitewashed infidelity," "infidelity in a Christian disguise," he accuses one of the professors of Free Religion of "timidity or inconsistency, which leads him to disguise his real opinions in order that he may curry favor with Christians, and make a covert attack upon infidels." The letter contains other things that betray the writer's ignorance; but the language quoted is evidence of precisely the same spirit of bigotry that has been made fairly chargeable with the worst crimes and the saddest woes of the religious world. The Orthodox Christians associated heresy with sin, and consigned the unbeliever to the fires of hell. The "infidel" associates what is heresy to him with meanness, and consigns the unbeliever in his creed of materialism to the limbo of fools and deceivers. To disagree with him is to be a simpleton; to speak of religion while discarding theology is hypocritical; and to recommend faith while discrediting the objects which technical Christians put faith in is to put on wolf's clothing in order to frighten the sheep.

The editor accepts the view of his correspondent. Instead of throwing the letter into the wastebasket as unworthy of attention, or printing it with corrective comments, he adds an emphasis to the insulting passages, by confessing his inability to understand how Mr. — can use the word faith, "unless it be in accordance with the sage advice that Hamlet gave his mother—'Assume a virtue if you have it not.'" This is a precise repetition of the error committed by the Orthodox Christians, without a shred of the Christian's excuse. For the "infidel" traces the sufferings and wrongs of ages to this very fault which a bitter experience should teach him to avoid; and he cannot pretend to the infallibility which was the Christian's justification. The Christian judged, as he believed, according to supernatural dictation. The "infidel" scorns the notion of such dictation, disavows all faith in supernatural power, yet pronounces a harsher doom; for to be classed with fools and hypocrites is a harsher doom than to be classed with theological sinners; to be branded with contempt among the living is worse than being sent to perdition among the dead.

The radicals, from policy if from no worthier principle, should try to do full justice to one another, in order that they may coöperate together in the immensely difficult labor of overthrowing superstition, defeating dogmatism, and making reason supreme in the domain of religion. They are few in numbers, poor in material goods, weak in organization, unsettled in opinion, greatly divided on the details of belief. Wisdom should suggest to them the practice of a generous confidence in each other. A prime necessity with them is an acknowledgment of the breadth of reason, the height and depth of knowledge. The difficulty of arriving at truth, and the value of every human faculty in the endeavor to reach it; the pretension to knowledge, the claim to a monopoly in the method of securing knowledge,—must be exceedingly injurious, must in the end be absolutely fatal, to the radical cause. If the spiritualists or idealists bear with the materialists or naturalists in spite of their crudeness, their literalness, their want of imagination, the latter should bear with the former, notwithstanding their sentiments and intuitions. The soldiers of the same army should not quarrel about weapons and uniforms.

The need of the Free Religious Association is felt to be a real one in view of such articles as this in the Investigator. As long as radicals fail to comprehend the principle, not of toleration, though that is not understood yet, but of rational liberty and justice, there will be call and work for an association organized for the purpose, and active in the task, of teaching different beliefs and believers how they may comprehend and help one another. The ancient unreasoning antagonism of beliefs must be completely overcome and wholly outgrown, before intelligent classifications based on fairly drawn distinctions can be made.

O. B. F.

FREETHOUGHT NOTES.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREETHINKER.

Number Nine.

MR. EDITOR:—

Here am I writing letters month after month, and nobody knowing what I am except by your courtesy in describing me as a "freethinker"; an honorable term, if it was understood as meaning pure independence of thought. As you never can be sure what some people do understand, a few words of explanation as to what directions their thoughts should take may not be ill-timed. I belong to the advanced party, as it is conventionally called. "Advanced" party is a better term than extreme party; for "extreme" party is taken by foolish people (and you cannot prevent people in England being foolish—it is one of our constitutional privileges guaranteed us by State and Church, and especially by the Church) to mean something violent, as well as something projecting far beyond the verge of the practicable; whereas it only means that when a principle is proved good and found to be generally desirable, the extreme party think it good and desirable to carry it out. An advanced party is imagined, by persons who never think, to be a party quite out of sight. A more appropriate term for myself would be that of a member of the thorough party; that is, a party who intend to do, not violently, or extremely, or remotely, but actually, reasonably, and completely, what ought to be done.

The longer I live, the more I am persuaded that fairness of statement and friendliness of act are indispensable means of advancing any cause. Paul, who had the most secular discrimination of all the apostles, said that "cleanliness was next to godliness." In such distant and humbler way as belongs to me, I should say that fairness of statement and respectful consideration towards others are next to principle. The cruel hand and calumnious tongue of Rome do more than all its adversaries to make it the terror and detestation of men of thought and humanity. To this day I do not reflect without some feeling upon the whole clerical party in England, Established and Nonconformist, who caused my imprisonment thirty-five years ago. At no time in my life did I undertake to speak upon one subject and introduce another. I had a theological mind, and I had a secular mind; but I never had a mixed mind. I always kept distinct things which are separate. My imprisonment arose, not out of the lecture I delivered, but out of an answer I gave in the discussion which followed it. A Wesleyan local preacher put a question concerning my opinions upon Deity, not because I had introduced that subject in my lecture on "Home Colonies," but because I had not. But upon this subject I need say no more, as I have related the whole in my History of the Last Trial for Atheism in England. All that is relevant here is that I was indicted for blasphemy for that answer, which Mr. Justice Erskine admitted was an honest one.

By attaching to me the disagreeable epithet of blasphemer, the Church imposed upon me an uncomfortable stigma for the future. In saying what I did, I had no meaning in my heart to blaspheme. The idea never entered my mind. I felt resentment against the Church, against the judge, against the jury, against the statute, against everybody and everything concerned in imputing so hateful an offence to me without taking the trouble to ascertain whether I could possibly intend it. It would have been as reasonable to have indicted the railway whistle for drowning the services of the Church, as to indict me for what I said. I merely uttered a cry of danger to warn honest people against those who put them to excessive expense in the name of spiritual service which might be rendered at a moderate charge. True, nobler men than I could hope to become had been branded with that hateful name. Even then I foresaw it boded mischief to me in all my days.

Some few years ago I entered a town during a contested election with the view of assisting a friend of mine (Mr. Bradlaugh) who was a candidate. He had enough himself to answer for in the way of heresy, and was not likely to be assisted on the platform by one who might be recognized as a more distinguished offender in the same way. A Freethought Society in the place asked me to deliver a lecture to them. I always agree to this, and I chose subjects which I thought might diminish theological prejudice in the borough. When the placards appeared on the walls, they announced my lecture as being by "the Mr. Holyoake who was imprisoned in 1841 in Gloucester jail," and so forth. It did not prove any political recommendation for the object which brought me to the town, that I was introduced to the notice of the electors as the Last of the Blasphemers.

A thousand times this inconvenient fact has confronted me, preventing me from obtaining engagements which otherwise would have been given me; sometimes preventing me from fulfilling engagements which had been given me; often obliging me to work in a nameless way, at a far lower rate than another person would be paid for the work I did. Not infrequently other persons obtained both the credit and the payment for the work they could not do, because I could not be recognized in the matter. I might give names of persons and journals where this has occurred; but this is of no moment. My purpose is to say it has occurred, and that I do not feel exactly grateful to those who occasioned it. I no more repine about it than a soldier does about his scars. Nevertheless a scar, if broad and deep, may imply disablement, and disablement is a disadvantage. I doubt not I have many times sharpened the edge of some sentences against theology in remembrance of that Cheltenham and Gloucester affair. It is pretty much all passed by now; but it has been a long time in passing, and I have had many opportunities of thinking of it.

The judges say that, though Christ prayed his Father might forgive his enemies, there is no proof which would be considered legal that he forgave them himself. Certainly judges make this distinction; they often pray that a culprit before them may find mercy at the bar of God, without thinking themselves called upon to show it; and forthwith sentence the culprit to be hanged, and despatch him to heaven with a halter round his neck, which must be a bad letter of recommendation to St. Peter. What I mean chiefly to represent is that injustice is wrong, and that no party can commit it without danger of being disliked so long as the remembrance of it remains. Not even Christ should have forgiven, or asked forgiveness for, his enemies, except upon the conditions of their being better informed, and showing regret for their error, and making what restitution they could. It was not quite true that they "knew not what they did." They knew quite well that they were putting a man to death because they disliked his opinions; and, as he never advanced his pretensions by force, their cruelty was inexcusable. It is a crime to visit the errors of the ancient Jews upon their race; but it is justice to humanity to hold in detestation whoever imitates them, in the Christian or any other name. I say this because I would have all who hold secular opinions to be animated by noble principles and distinguished among men for noble conduct.

We have sustained a great loss in England; the Church Herald is reported to be dead. It was one of the most scandalous, virulent, unpleasant, defamatory clerical journals we had among us. When a journal on the side of what is regarded as that of truth and progress is imputative and offensive, or is systematically wanting in that consideration for the conviction of others which every sincere man likes to be shown to his own, its existence is to be deplored. When a paper representing Orthodoxy has these vices, its cessation is a misfortune, because its offensive activity kept people from feeling any respect for the errors it represented.

We have established a Church Congress at Stoke-upon-Trent, where the Athanasian Creed made no way. Mr. Beresford Hope, the single saint of the Saturday Review, promised English support for the Irish Church, if it would stand fast by the damnable clauses of that unpleasant and vindictive saint, Athanasius. He was told by a prelate of the Irish Church that two-thirds of the bishops, and two-thirds of the clergy, had declared against that calamitous creed, and preferred to take their stand by the side of the American clergy in this matter. But I leave all these things to your eminent contributor, Mr. Voysey, who can treat these subjects with an art and authority to which I do not pretend.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

22 ESSEX ST., TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.

Communications.

WHY SECTARIANISM IS WRONG.

MR. EDITOR:—

In your "Open Letter" to the President, you do well, I think, to call attention to the fact that the full value of his Des Moines speech can be better determined by a clear understanding as to whether his condemnation of "sectarian schools" is to be considered as applying to all religious worship and teaching in the public schools, or only to the teaching of such special doctrines as separate the Christian sects.

That it is wrong to maintain religious sectarianism in institutions supported by the public seems to be now pretty generally conceded.

It costs but very little to denounce a word, and so long as the word sectarianism is used in the abstract, there is rarely a bigot or sectary so bold as to openly claim for it a place in the public schools. But, as you have said, when we come to a practical test, and find that making the schools unsectarian means to many merely to waive the few points of difference between certain Christian sects, and that the maintaining of distinctive Protestant teaching and worship against the wishes of the Catholic, or of Christian teaching against the wishes of the Jew and freethinker, is by them considered unsectarian, and therefore right and proper, are not such persons actually advocating the sectarianism they pretend to denounce? If they are not, I am curious to know what they can discover in the "sectarianism" they do denounce that is objectionable.

This brings me to the question I had in mind when I took my pen: WHY is it wrong to have sectarianism in our public schools?

The failure to ask themselves this question accounts for the fact, I believe, that so many well-meaning persons, who would not intentionally sanction injustice, take the position above referred to. To my mind the answer is that sectarianism is wrong in that it gives supremacy to certain classes and sects over others entitled to equal rights and privileges. For instance: if teaching the truthfulness of Unitarian doctrines be wrong in public schools, it is because by so doing the scholars are taught that Trinitarian doctrines are false; and, since Trinitarians as well as Unitarians have to support the schools, such teaching is an infringement of the Trinitarian rights of conscience, and a denial of their equality as citizens. If this be not the real objection to sectarian teaching, I am at loss to know what is. We find, then, that religious class supremacy, by whatever name it may be called, is essentially sectarianism in its only objectionable sense.

Now, Protestant ideas are no less repugnant to the Catholic-Christian ideas no less repugnant to the Jew, Freethinker, or Confucian, and vice versa,—than Unitarianism is to Orthodoxy; in fact, they are still more so, their difference being greater. Unless, instead of this being "a government of the people, for the people, by the people," it is to be an acknowledged hierarchy, I am unable to see why Christian worship and the reading of the Christian Bible in the schools of "the people" is not as great a violation of the rights of the non-Christian, as teaching in them the adequacy of "sprinkling" or "pouring" would be a violation of the rights of the Baptist, and as truly sectarian.

Whenever we hear any one speak of resisting all attempts to make the public schools sectarian, let us remind him that they are in fact so already; and that we have no grounds in justice for asking the Catholics to refrain from attempting to force their ism into the schools, unless we resolutely determine to banish from them forever all religious isms, and remand them "to the family altar, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions," and thus take another step towards the complete separation of Church and State—the ideal of the founders of this republic.

There is yet plenty and to spare of religious party supremacy in this country. People are taxed in various ways for the support of a religion not their own; compelled to observe religious customs not their own; and denied equal rights and privileges for the non-acceptance of a religion not their own. But the eyes of many, including the Chief-Magistrate of this country, are getting opened to some phases of this injustice; and let us hope the eyes of all may be opened to the justice of the demand that the State be made purely secular, until at last truth and error may stand or fall on their own respective merits, unsupported by the strong arm of the law.

Q.

BOSTON, Nov.

PRESBYTERIANISM FIFTY YEARS AGO.

It may be a matter of interest, as showing the change which is going on in the character of the preaching of the present day in contrast with what was taught in doctrinal sermons fifty years ago, to quote an extract from one of those old discourses.

In 1819, the Rev. Wm. R. Weeks published nine sermons in Providence, R.I. Mr. Weeks was the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Plattsburg, N.Y.

His text was Ephesians i., 11: "Who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."

"In discoursing from these words, it is proposed to show that God has decreed or foreordained whatsoever comes to pass, and that he executes his decree by his own agency."

That God has decreed whatsoever comes to pass, this learned divine says, is evident from the fact that he possesses infinite power, wisdom, and goodness; and in answer to the objection that, "if God causes a man to sin, he ought not to be punished for it," he says: "When God causes us to choose, does that prevent our choosing?" "When God works in us to will and to do, does that prevent our own willing and doing?"

"God evidently decrees who shall accept and who shall reject the offers of salvation," and in these offers of salvation he evidently desires the salvation of only a part, notwithstanding the offers are to all. "Is it then best, on the whole, that every sinner should be saved? And does God, on the whole, taking into view all the consequences, upon the whole desire the salvation of every sinner? And is this the desire which is expressed in the offers of life? No; this cannot be the case. For if God did on the whole desire the salvation of every sinner, he would save every sinner. It is God that saves sinners, and he is able to save all as he is to save a part. If he did, on the whole, desire that every sinner should comply with the offers of salvation, he would change their hearts, and cause them to comply."

"It is he that takes away the stony heart, and gives a new heart; and he is able to do it in every instance, if he chooses. If he does not do it, then, in any instance, it is because he does not, on the whole, choose that that particular sinner should be saved. If God does, on the whole, desire the salvation of every sinner, why does he not do all he can to save them? Why does he not use with them all the means he can? He could raise up more preachers; he could pour out his spirit; he could awaken the careless and secure; he could place before every sinner a lively view of the glories of heaven and the torments of the damned; he could send his gospel to all nations; he could furnish his preachers with all those miraculous gifts which were so instrumental in spreading the gospel at first; he could do a thousand things he does not do for the promotion of the salvation of all men. It is evident, then, that he does not, on the whole, desire the salvation of all men, but chooses for some wise reason that a part should perish, and, according to his own word, 'sends them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they might be damned.' Since, therefore, God does not, on the whole, desire the salvation of all men, the offers of life which are made to all do not express a desire on the whole for the salvation of all."

"But God does desire the salvation of all men, in itself considered. He views it as exceedingly desirable. And the offers of life, the invitations, warnings, threatenings, expostulations, and commands, express this desire, and they express what God sincerely feels. But they do not express any other desire, and God does not feel any other desire for the salvation of those he does not save."

"The salvation of a particular sinner may be exceedingly desirable in itself, while, on the whole, for some wise reason, it may be best he should not be saved. God, therefore, may, without any inconsistency, sincerely desire his salvation in itself considered, while, on the whole, all things considered, he desires his destruction. He may, therefore, express his desire for his salvation, in itself considered, by offering him life, and exhorting him to choose it, and be very sincere in it; while at the same time, since his damnation is best, on the whole, he may decree his damnation, and harden his heart, and 'send him strong delusion that he might be damned.'"

The above is a fair specimen of the logic and doctrine taught in the volume of sermons on the text named. A comparison with what may now be listened to from the average Evangelical pulpit will reveal a most astonishing change, showing that even the theological world moves.

SKYLIGHT.

THE SPHERE OF GOVERNMENT.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In THE INDEX of November 11, under the caption of "The Function of Government," I notice an article by S. P. Putnam which in my opinion properly defines the general principle on which a truly democratic government must rest; and I agree with him that its complexity must increase, and its authority be extended, with the growth of civilization.

With every word of the first part of this article I cordially agree, but must differ from him when he proceeds to point out some "directions in which this increased function of government must find play." He maintains that "a democratic form of government [and no other form of government is worth considering in relation to human rights] has a right to make democracy the method in every organization throughout the land." This position is not based on any principle, but rests solely on motives of expediency—the supposed necessity of defending ourselves from the power of Romanism. It seems to me unnecessary to dissect his argument, or to show the consequences to which the adoption of such a doctrine would lead. Nor is it necessary to point out that his analogy between a despotic Church and the public schools does not hold; the Church must be a public institution, as the school is, to make it complete.

Nor is his illustration with regard to Mexico, or any other independent nation, more successful. Monroe doctrine or no Monroe doctrine, we have no right to dictate what form of government its people shall elect to live under. It is none of our business.

It seems to me that Mr. Putnam's mistake is in mistaking the sphere of government. He rightly describes its functions in the first part of his article, but has overlooked the fact that its proper sphere of action is limited. What he describes as conscience is more clearly described by the phrase mental freedom, over which government should not have, and in reality cannot have, any power.

The proper function of government being to secure to each of its citizens "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," its sphere is confined to the full protection of each and every individual in the means of attaining and enjoying those rights. If any citizen thinks his happiness here or hereafter can be increased or made sure by voluntarily placing himself under the control of a despotic Church organization, it would be clearly an infringement on his right to "the pursuit of happiness" in his own way to prevent him; unless, of course, it can be clearly shown that by so doing he invades the similar rights of others.

W. G. H. SMART.

RELIGIOUS RAVINGS.

NEW YORK, Nov., 1875.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I write to say that I think Moody is insane, and a dangerous man to run at large. Here is one of his recent utterances. He says:—

"I have a son, and no one but God knows how I love him; but I would see those beautiful eyes dug out of his head to-night rather than see him grow up to manhood and go down to the grave without Christ and without hope."

Now, if this is not the raving of a diseased mind, what is? How can such shocking language be anything but that of a man who can do but little good and a great deal of harm? There will be born children of sensitive, ignorant, superstitious mothers, during this revival of superstition, who will be cursed with nervous disorders having their origin in the fear awakened in their minds by Moody. I have known such cases. The revival of religion, that is, of a sincere desire of the masses to perfect their lives and character as men and women, would do good; but Moody has failed in this,—he is not equal to it. He knows nothing of what religion is. Deluded man!

Truly,

M. L. H.

"HELL OR THE HALTER."

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 22, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Rev. George Thomas Dowling, pastor of the Central Baptist Church of this city, is opposed to capital punishment. Pity his Maker was not as far advanced! Which is most "capital," hell or the halter?

W. T.

Residence.	Name.	Assessments Total.	Assessments Paid.	Assessments Outpaid.
Amesbury, Mass.	Edward A. Brown	30		30
Fairhaven, Mass.	John A. Hawes	80	60	20
Lynn, Mass.	W. H. Gilmore	30	10	20
Lexington, Mass.	Jas. Purinton	30	10	20
	W. J. Currier	30		30
	Geo. W. Robinson	30	10	20
Chicopee, Mass.	W. H. Gilmore	30	10	20
Ipswich, Mass.	James Damon	20	10	10
Detroit, Mich.	E. B. Ward	800	400	400
"	M. H. Isbell	40	20	20
"	John J. Bagley	1200		1200
"	B. F. Stamm	40	10	30
"	Fred. Stearns	40	10	30
"	Geo. Jerome	40	10	30
"	D. J. Davison	40	10	30
Battle Creek, Mich.	Wm. Newman	40	20	20
"	John Harper	40	10	30
"	C. M. Stiles	40	10	30
Ionia, Mich.		40	10	30
Union City, Mich.	Geo. Hubbard	40	10	30
"	S. H. Nye	40		40
"	Chas. H. Spring	40		40
"	D. D. W. Rodgers	40		40
Castine, Me.		40	20	20
Ft. Fairfield, Me.	R. L. Baker	40	20	20
Minneapolis, Minn.	S. C. Gale	400	100	300
	R. E. Grimshaw	40	20	20
	Marshall Bros.	40	10	30
Long Lake, Minn.	S. Lydiard	40	10	30
Lake City, Minn.	D. E. Boutelle	40	20	20
Palmyra, Mo.	S. C. Eastman	40	30	10
St. Louis, Mo.	Henry Stag	40	20	20
"	J. C. Rooney	80	20	60
"	E. G. Weddiger	40	20	20
St. Joseph, Mo.	Jacob Sprinkel	40	30	10
"	P. V. Wise	40		40
"	C. Murat Masterson	1240		1240
New York, N.Y.	Asa K. Butts	80	340	940
"	E. F. Dinsmore	80	40	40
"	M. L. Holbrook	40	20	20
"	S. Sexton	40	20	20
"	Henry H. Richardson	80	20	60
"	Mrs. M. R. Van Rensselaer	40	20	20
"		40	30	10
"	W. E. Booraem	40	30	10
"	J. Lienau	40	30	10
"	J. P. Dinsmore	80	30	50
"	B. W. Pierce	40	100	140
"		200	100	100
"	D. Throne	40	30	10
"	Lewia G. Jones	40		40
"	J. J. Nichols	40	30	10
"	J. W. Bigelow	40	30	10
"	E. Naumburg	40	20	20
"		300		300
"		30		30
"	John Cowan	30	20	10
"	John Mills	30		30
"	W. C. Russell	40	30	10
Ithaca, N.Y.	J. Whitaker	40	30	10
Peekskill, N.Y.	J. Goldmark	60	40	20
Kerhonkson, N.Y.	Jas. W. White	40	100	140
Brooklyn, N.Y.	D. F. Sweet	40	10	30
	Titus L. Brown	40	10	30
Hornellsville, N.Y.	H. G. White	40	20	20
Binghamton, N.Y.	G. N. Stearns	40	10	30
Buffalo, N.Y.	Jno. M. Price	40	20	20
Syracuse, N.Y.	J. Henry Clarke	40	20	20
	E. B. Waldo	40	7	33
	M. Echlesing	40	20	20
	L. T. Osborne	40	20	20
Albany, N.Y.	W. J. Lewis	40	30	10
Auburn, N.Y.	Harvey Hakes	40	10	30
Troy, N.Y.	Louis Bristol	40	20	20
Ilion, N.Y.	Mrs. M. A. Wright	40	10	30
Vineland, N.J.		30	10	20
Jersey City, N.J.		40	20	20
Rutherford Park, N.J.	Jabez Elverson	30		30
Newark, N.J.	S. H. Dame	40	30	10
Dover, N.H.	Jos. Hayes	40	30	10
"	G. P. Folsom	40		40
Omaha, Neb.		80	5	75
Toledo, O.	David R. Locke	800	300	500
"		400	50	350
"		400	100	300
"	E. P. Bassett	400	200	200
"		120	60	60
"	Jas. M. Ritchie	120	30	90
"	Victor Keen	120	60	60
"	Alanson Wood	120	30	90
"	Wm. Kraus	200	50	150
"	J. G. Holzwarth	40	10	30
"	Wm. Clarke	120	60	60
"	C. L. Smith	400	300	100
"	Frank J. Scott	80	20	60
"	Henry Kiest	40	20	20
"	Otto Klemm	80	40	40
"	H. G. Neubert	40	20	20
"	H. Heyerman	40	10	30
"	L. Von Blessingh	240	100	140
"		60	30	30
"		600	30	300
"		40	50	110
"		200	30	170
Cincinnati, O.	Max Pracht	40	20	20
"	D. K. Innes	20	100	120
"	Peter H. Clark	40	20	20
"	J. T. Sutton	40	20	20
"	Chas. Churchill	40	40
"	Mrs. Mary Pracht	40	20	20
"	Wm. Bismark Pracht	40	20	20
"	J. J. Stevens	40	20	20
Defiance, O.	Geo. T. Alpress	40	10	30
Painesville, O.	Wm. Blockmore	40	20	20
Dayton, O.	D. Wilt	40	20	20
"	W. F. Heikes	80	60	20
"	L. S. Bryant	40		40
Salem, O.		40	30	10
Kelley's Island, O.	Chas. Bonsall	40	30	10
Bayan, O.	C. W. Farciot	80	40	40
Osborn, O.	J. E. Simon	40	20	20
Ashtabula, O.	S. F. Woodard	80	60	20
	H. E. Parsons	20	100	100
	W. P. Ewing	80	40	40
Oberlin, O.		30	30
Philadelphia, Pa.	W. C. Head	30	10	20
Pittsburg, Pa.	Walter F. Austin	40	30	10
Allegheny City, Pa.	Val. Ludwig	40	30	10
"	Mrs. Nancy Gebhart	40		40
"	O. A. Nicholson	40		40
Newport, R.I.	Jas. B. Brayton	40	10	30
Providence, R.I.	J. D. Frost	40	30	10
"	W. M. Jackson	40		40
Wheeling, Va.	A. Reymann	40	10	30
Madison, Wis.	R. B. Smith	40	15	25
Prairie du Chien, Wis.	W. H. Dyke	40		40
Milwaukee, Wis.	A. Mc D. Young	40		40
"	C. T. Hawley	40	20	20
"	Wm. Becker	40	30	10
"	C. M. Spencer	40	10	30
"	R. C. Lawler	40		40
"	Mrs. G. D. Norris	20	50	150
"	B. C. Chittenden	40	10	30
"	C. D. Kendrick	40		40
"	Thos. Hoover	40	10	30
"	Mrs. Mary C. Davis	80	40	40
Eau Clair, Wis.	H. E. Leland	40	10	30
Fond du Lac, Wis.	E. R. Marsh	40		40
Not known.	R. B. Smith	40		40
"	W. L. Rathe	40	10	30
"	Jas. R. Stone	40	20	20
"	James Fischer	40	20	20
"	J. L. Taylor	40		40
"	M. M. Pratt	40	5	35
"	M. E. Dayton	40		40
"	A. E. Whitmore	20	10	20

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Owen on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
HUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DAL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Marion and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.00
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Attractive Essays.....	3.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Southern Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelkies.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Form of Water in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.50
Elements of Geology.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.25
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith: Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Ecceism, and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans. Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeamnor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLX. A Christmas Story.....	.40
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovel the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with variations, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	5.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Lois.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS,

IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.

Two Pupils, $44.00; per Pupil, $22.00.

Three " 48.00: " " 16.00.

Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.

Five " 55.00: " " 11.00.

Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.

Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading.... The story is told in a very graphic style.... Mr. Holyoake... is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1-Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX. Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN, WEST NEWTON, MASS.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1836, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

No Gifts Better Appreciated.

JUST OUT—NEW, FRESH, AND HANDSOME.

Gems of English Song.

A perfect collection of songs, with piano accompaniment, comprising over 75 of the choicest Songs, Ballads, Duets, and Quartets known; selected with great care, and with especial regard to quality and popularity. 232 pages, full music size.

The New York Evening Mail says: "A most extraordinary collection of really fine songs.... One could hardly imagine so many veritable gems could be contained in a single volume."

Price, $2.50 plain; $3 in muslin; $4 full gilt.

Of the same form and price, full music size, are

"GEMS OF STRAUSS."

A new edition, comprising over 100 best Strauss Waltzes, etc., etc.

"ORGAN AT HOME."

"MUSICAL TREASURE."

"GEMS OF GERMAN SONG."

"PIANOFORTE GEMS."

"GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG."

"MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES."

Any of the above books sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. Frothingham, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Address for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

BY J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY 335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 30 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1875.

WHOLE No. 311.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to coöperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all the useful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

WILLIAM M. TWEED, the "ring thief," has escaped from custody in New York.

MRS. SARGENT gave a delightful reception in honor of Professor Proctor last Sunday evening, at which many prominent scientific and literary gentlemen were present.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND BLISS are following the revival business in the West. Why don't they come to Yankeeeland, where whittling has been bliss from time immemorial?

MR. BRADLAUGH, we regret to say, has been prostrated by the effects of overwork in New York city, but at last reports was slowly recovering. He will hardly be able to keep his lecture engagements, however.

SECTARIANISM is stiffening again out West. The General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran Church has lately adopted at Galesburg, Illinois, this principle: "Lutheran pulpits for Lutheran ministers only; Lutheran altars for Lutheran communicants only."

THE "COMMON SCHOOL LEAGUE," recently formed in New York city, is circulating a petition throughout the State for the repeal of the act of May 15, 1875, by which the Catholic Gray Nuns were enabled to issue certificates of qualification for public school teachers. Will some New York friend be so kind as to send us a copy of this petition, and also of the Constitution of the "Common School League"?

IS NOT this a delicious morsel from the Sunday-school column of the New York Independent? "A Bible drill at the breakfast-table is a good thing in a Christian family. It may precede the eating, or the two may proceed together. A good substitute for useless conversation or for uninteresting silence may thus be found. Let the head of the family say 'Genesis,' the next follow with 'Exodus,' and so run through the books. Topics, golden texts, dates, facts from the lessons, etc., may all be polished up in this way."

THE CATHOLICS of Boston are demanding representation on the new School Committee as Catholics, and the Democratic Boston Post of Dec. 3 concedes the justice of the demand! But the moment the people begin to elect Catholics, or Protestants, or Jews, or members of any other sect, avowedly to represent some religious creed in the administration of our public schools, and not to act as honest citizens with a single eye to the universal welfare, the decay of the public schools has begun. Are the Democrats of Boston to become allies of the Catholic Church in its secret and open warfare on the school system?

THE Harvard Advocate of November 19 had a remarkable article against compulsory attendance by the students at public worship. The Faculty has voted, we understand, to make such attendance for all the classes optional, as it is now for the Senior class; but the Overseers refuse to sanction the arrangement. By-and-by some student, willing to bear the penalties of a manly non-conformity, will refuse to submit, and the college will be forced either to yield to the demands of justice or resort to religious persecution. Here is a noble opportunity for some young Arnold von Winkelried to render a service of self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of religious liberty. The custom of "signing names to an open falsehood" should be broken, even at the cost of expulsion; and whoever is expelled for refusal to belie himself in this matter will be the conqueror, after all.

IN THE preface to the edition of his collected pamphlets on the Catholic question, Mr. Gladstone indicts the Church of Rome with consummate ability and clearness, summing up the case as follows: "Nearly the entire hierarchical power in this great communion, together with a faction everywhere spread and everywhere active among its laity, are now deliberately set upon a design distinguished by the following characteristics: Internally it aims at the total destruction of right; not of right as opposed to wrong, but of right as opposed to arbitrary will. Such right there shall be none, if the conspiracy succeeds, in the bishops against the Pope, in the clergy against the bishops or the Pope, in the laity against any of the three. Externally it maintains the right and duty of the spirituality, thus organized, to override at will, in respect of right and wrong, the entire action of the civil power; and likewise to employ force, as and when it may think fit, for the fulfilment of its purpose."

IN ONE of his recent letters, Arsène Houssaye writes: "Mérimée has described himself in his letters, but still more faithfully in speaking of his master Stendhal, the author of Rouge et Noir, a sceptic who was beyond scepticism: 'He was impious, an outrageous materialist, a personal enemy of Providence. He denied the existence of God, and yet he hated him like a master.' All atheists are like this. They deny God because they do not love him, rather than because they do not believe in him. But I preferred the scepticism of Stendhal to that of Mérimée. As Henry Blaze happily said, 'Stendhal, a man of imagination and originality, had that ideal scepticism which takes on all the iris hues and prismatic fires of the rainbow'; while Mérimée had the cold scepticism of a gray sky. You perceive no sun and no blue heaven in his spirit." When will the world of believers do justice to atheists? Without sharing their opinions or accepting their philosophy, we owe it to justice to say that the atheists we have met (and they are not a few) have nearly always impressed us with the conviction that they were pre-eminently lovers of truth for its own sake.

MR. MOODY is said by Mr. Beecher to hold the most dismal notions of this world: "Mr. Moody is a believer in the second advent. He continually wants to die, and says there is no use in attempting to work for this world; that it is a thing blasted; that there is no help for it so far as human institutions are concerned; that you are never going to build the old thing up. He says it is a wreck, and is bound to sink, and the only thing to be done is to get off as many of the passengers as you can and let her go; and that, therefore, the business of every Christian is to wait for the Master, for he believes that, when the Master comes, there shall be a destruction of the wicked, and the earth shall be filled with righteousness, and the devil will have a good time, and that up to that time it's no use to attempt any of those large recreations of society, as they are useless before Christ comes." What possible good to mankind can proceed from such dreary drivel as this? It is the religion of despair, not of hope or courage—of mental and moral darkness dense enough to cut with a knife, not of mental and moral illumination. It is a credit to Brooklyn that her "converts" have proved few and sparse.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. B. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHIE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BEEDESVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAT CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Centennial Thanksgivings:

1675—1775—1875.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED BEFORE THE TWENTY-EIGHTH CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY, BOSTON, NOV. 21, 1875.

BY W. C. GANNETT.

Not long since a friend sent me an account of Framingham as it was two hundred thousand years ago. It was very cold there then, for an ice-sheet several hundred, or possibly several thousand, feet thick moved southwards over the town about that time, grinding its rock to sand, grooving and polishing its ledges, sowing it broadcast with boulders, and ploughing out its valleys. Then, perhaps half way down to our day, came the thaw and the retreat of the great glacier, when the rushing waters filled the hollows with gravel, soaked the clay, and spread it into Sudbury meadows, pushed up the ridges, and scooped out the bed of Lake Cochituate. My friend was a geologist whose eyes were trained to read signs in the trail of the boulders and the trend of the hills; and he wrote as if he were the "special correspondent on the spot" sent by the enterprise of some primeval Herald to watch the manufacture of that town; and the straight-ahead science of his story became a grand, unconscious humor, as it told how "Baker's Corner," and "Rice's Ridge," and "Emily Warren's gravel-pit" were made a hundred thousand years ago!

It was pleasant reading, even if one did not understand it altogether; for at this Centennial season an American, after all, feels his youthfulness rather than his age, and it reminded me that age is only a question of the eyes you see with. The land is old enough! Geological eyes give us not one centennial but millennials to celebrate, and millennials that glorify our "New World," so-called by Europeans, as the antiques corner of the planet, in virtue of those great rock-beds north of the St. Lawrence which were among the very earliest, they say, to peep above the seethe of waters and become dry land. The people, too, is old enough, when we think of it. Why so proud if we can trace our ancestry back to Mayflower days? Eyes properly historical would see our blood, our blood, running in Saxon grandfathers when Iceland was settled her thousand years ago,—running somewhere when Jesus was born,—running somewhere when Moses came from Egypt. The river in our veins is just as ancient as the river that flows in any other human veins, although so short a winding of it bears our national name and allows us national memories.

Thinking of this brought into mind the fact that the anniversary which Thanksgiving week renews is, at least, doubly a centennial to New England. Not once, but twice, before—not by the day, indeed, but by the season,—Thanksgiving time has marked a crisis in her history. And this thought brought another,—that our Sunday words, though not at all a sermon in their sound, might be no less fit to-day if used to recall what befell our ancestors at this time in 1775 and 1675. For in November, 1775, when the patriot army was lying on the hills round Boston, and beginning to feel that its being there dated a nation's birth, doubtless the oft-told stories of "grandfathers' fights" were told again over the new camp-fires; and if no copy of old Hubbard's Indian Wars, just put to print again that very spring—a centennial edition,—had strayed across the lines from Boston, yet some readers must have seen the "Proposals to Subscribers" in the January newspapers, and the thoughtful ones must have remembered that, that autumn, just a hundred years before, the anxious farmers of New England had rallied, as they themselves were rallying now, to defend the colonies against a foe more deadly than the British regulars.

June of 1675 began the "year of trouble" called King Philip's War. New England was still essentially New England of the Pilgrims and the Wilderness. The four colonies probably held some sixty thousand whites, perhaps not more than half as many Indians. But the whites were only to be found in clusters towards the sea-coast and here and there in a lonely river-settlement islanded in the deep forest. All else was Indian roaming-ground, and no outlying village was complete unless it had its block house,—although there had not been war for forty years, so firmly just were all dealings with the savage neighbors. Thirteen of the Mayflower's company were still living. It was still an age of quaint dress, and solemn face, and strict morals, of faith in prayer and fastings, in "remarkable Providences," in portents, and in witches. The minister was still chief man in every settlement, the voting "Freemen" were almost all church-members, and everybody was expected to attend public worship. True, the gray heads, remembering the earlier godliness, already talked of the decline of piety: "How is New England in danger to be lost! How is the good grain diminished and the chaff increased! How is our wine mixed with water! Ah, the unsoundness, the rottenness, the hypocrisy! Have we not in good measure forgot our errand into the wilderness?" A cry like that was oft repeated in the Election Sermons of the second generation. Yet nothing shows better the might of religious faith that still existed than the way in which the fathers met the danger threatening them. There was no thought of looking to the mother-land for aid. "Poor and yet proud," said the English lords. Their help lay in their own right arms, and in the Lord from whom in truth they expected much. For were they not "His people"? "The wars of the Lord," Cotton Mather styles the conflict with these New England "heathen"; and his father's annals, written at the time, sound like chapters out of Joshua and Judges, so full are they of the divine deliverances and judgments,—judgments, too, for the whole great woe, and each reverse in it, was regarded as the retribution of the Lord for sin.

The attack began in June, and before the leaves fell it had flashed from town to town along the inland border. Save in Connecticut no settlement seemed safe. If not to-day, it might be to-morrow, that the whoop would sound from the wilderness close by, or some little band returning home from meeting, on Sabbath afternoon, would find itself waylaid. The farmer in his field, the wife at the house-door, the child at the spring, were shot down till they listened all the night and peered all the day. By mid-autumn the villages by Taunton way were burnt; the meadow-towns in the extreme west—Deerfield, Hadley, Northfield, Hatfield—had been furiously assailed; the tragedy of Bloody Brook had cut off the "Flower of Essex," a "black and fatal day"; and, more startling yet as witness to the wrath of God against the froward people, He had permitted His own sanctuary to be burnt, "a Candlestick had been removed,"—the meeting-house at Springfield! The farmers, meanwhile, did their best; but the stout fight through the loop-holes of the garrison-house, the sudden march, the bold hunt, only revenged the attacks, not lessened them; and as they pushed through the morasses to the Indian hiding-places, sometimes it was to fall into an ambuscade themselves, sometimes to find the wigwams empty, but for half a dozen English heads left behind to tell the fate of friends. More than this must somehow be accomplished. Unless the Indians were daunted, another June might see all the "candlesticks" removed, and the Church of the Wilderness well-nigh blotted out. The Commissioners of the United Colonies called out an army of a thousand men, and soon another thousand, while the Governor and Council of Massachusetts Bay, acting in character, appointed "a Day of public Humiliation with Fasting and Prayer throughout this whole Colony, that we may set ourselves sincerely to seek the Lord, rending our hearts and not our garments before Him, and pursue the same with a thorough Reformation of whatever hath been or is an Image of jealousy before the Lord to offend the eyes of his Glory; if so be the Lord may turn from his fierce anger that we perish not." So ran the reverent proclamation. The prayer with which it closed did not avail. That very day at evening the sad tidings of Springfield's calamity reached Boston, "Surely," says Increase Mather, noting the coincidence, "surely, the solemn voice of God to New England is still, as formerly, Praying without Reforming will not do."

So in a few days a committee was appointed to determine the particulars of the "Reformation" needed. We read them with some amusement at the Boston notions of 1675, some reverence for the high morality when such was the list of crimes, some shame for ourselves, perhaps, in contrast, and yet with a feeling, too, that in our sins we are the Fathers' true descendants. These are the public sins that needed cure two centuries ago in Boston:—

First and foremost: "That some effectual course should be taken for the Suppression of those proud Excesses in Apparel, hair, &c., which many (yea and the poorer sorte as well as others) are shamefully guilty of."

"A due testimony should be borne against false Worshippers, especially Idolatrous Quakers."

"That whereas Swearing hath been frequently heard, they that hear another Swear profanely, and do not complain of it to Authority shall be punished for that concealment."

"That the fourth and fifth Commandments' about Sabbath-keeping and honoring parents, 'be better observed than formerly.'"

"That more care should be taken respecting the Rising Generation that they might be brought under the discipline of Christ."

The other items suggest reforms that would still be timely in this day of Strikes, and License-laws, and Indian Rings:—

"That whereas excess in drinking is become a common Sin, means should be used to prevent an unnecessary multiplication of Ordinaries, and to keep Town dwellers from frequenting taverns."

"That there may be no more such Oppression, either by Merchants or Day Labourers, as heretofore hath been."

"And that the Indian Trading-houses, whereby the Heathen have been debauched and scandalized against Religion, be suppressed."

These resolves were unanimously consented to, and a committee was appointed to draw up laws accordingly.

This was in the middle of October. That year no public Thanksgiving was celebrated. It was a time of gloom too deep, of heart-rending too sincere, for worship to take other form than prayer and fast. The perils of a winter campaign in the New England forest of that day were only less dreadful than the thought of the next spring with the Indians lurking in every thicket. At Thanksgiving-time the army was gathering more than a thousand strong—among them "a meet number of able ministers and chirurgeons,"—and Governor Winslow of Plymouth Colony was appointed General to lead them against the great stronghold in the Narragansett country, there "to execute the vengeance of the Lord upon the perfidious and bloody Heathen," says Mather. But again, "before they set out," he continues, "the churches were all upon their knees before the God of Armies, entreating his favor and gracious success in that undertaking wherein the welfare of his people was so greatly concerned."

The bold stroke was successful. On a Sunday in the middle of December the Indians were found, defeated, burnt up, scattered; but the success was dearly bought by the loss of six brave captains and many men. It was the great blow of the war. Through the whole winter and the spring the Indians were everywhere, striking here, burning there, dashing in even on Plymouth, and winning some of their most grievous victories within twenty-five miles of Boston. Once, at Weymouth, they were only a dozen miles away. But everywhere, too, they wasted away. Pestilence, cold, famine, besides the Englishman, chased them. They were found starved and frozen in the woods. They came to believe that the spell of the Englishman's God was upon them; and, at last, but not until far into the summer, Philip himself, deserted by his followers, hunted from spot to spot like a wild beast, was brought to bay, and shot in his old home, whither he had come back to die, Mount Hope. Many of the captives were tried and hung; many more were sold into slavery in the West Indies; and Philip's head, set upon a pole at Plymouth, graced the public Thanksgiving of the grim victors, who remembered well such Bible passages as that where "Samuel hewed Agag to pieces before the Lord in Gilgal." In the Maine district to the northward the muskets were kept busy for nearly a two-years longer; but all real danger from the natives to the settlers of New England was forever over.

That danger had been great, and the loss in quenching it was very heavy. One man in ten or twelve, it is said, of all able to bear arms, lay dead. This must be exaggeration, or else the census-estimate must be all wrong; but it is certain that of the eighty or ninety towns in Plymouth and Massachusetts, a dozen had been utterly, and thrice as many more in part, destroyed. "If only the interior towns had been wholly devastated, the result," thinks our New England historian, "could scarcely have been other than the total abandonment of New England by the portion of its civilized people that should be left alive." Both the colonies, moreover, were left staggering under heavy debts. Massachusetts in 1676 laid a tax of seven per cent. on her total valuation; and for years Plymouth pinched and saved up money, like an honest bankrupt, to pay off what she owed,—which at last she did, principal and interest.

Long Indian wars and many an Indian tragedy remained for the different colonies to face in after years; but in that Thanksgiving muster of the New England farmers in 1675, the seal was set to the Doom which since that day has hunted the Indian far beyond the Mississippi, and even there has left him no sure abiding-place save in his grave. The spell of the Englishman's God has been indeed upon him,—that Fate which moderns phrase "The Struggle for Existence with Survival of the Fittest." There is another phrase as true for all man's higher life, "We are members one of another." May it be one of the nation's deeds within its second century to interpret that, and, before it be too late, to gather the relics of the fated race under a guardianship that shall save us from the burden of a curse in the nobler centuries to come!

A hundred years pass by, and again New England farmers are mustering on the hills near Boston. In a semicircle of several miles they lie around the town, one camp at Roxbury, one at Cambridge, others on the slopes of Somerville. For six months they have been there, some fifteen thousand men in motley garb, armed, most of them, with the guns that used to hang over the chimney-piece at home. Washington is in command, and his letter to Congress in July still holds largely true; he had reported want of engineers, want of tools, want of men to man the works against attack, want of tents, want of clothing, want of a military chest, want of a commissariat, and, above all, want of ammunition. "Materials for a good army," that is all,—men "whose spirit has exceeded their strength."

Since July, indeed, much has been done in the way of discipline and fortifying; but Powder! Powder! is the constant cry. The general cannot attack, he can only dread attack, for lack of it. Only now and then a shot is fired back, and the men save all the British balls that come rolling in. Not much happens in the camp-life, yet all is stir and eagerness, because at any moment much may happen. The men are still unused to soldiers' discipline, and occasionally one stands in the pillory or rides the wooden horse. Night alarms are frequent. Now and then a few regulars are killed or captured in some little island-skirmish down the harbor, or a sentinel on guard at the Neck deserts to the American lines. The men are busied digging and on guard. But there is time for wrestling-matches between the regiments, and for hearing sermons at least once on Sundays, and for welcoming the friends from home who bring with them, perhaps, a new flag for their boys, inscribed with the words, "Appeal to Heaven." The Massachusetts Committees are doing their utmost to provide the army with supplies. For ten miles around the axes are sounding in the woods; from fifty miles away the teams are moving with provision. There is probably a liberty pole in every village. The papers of the day appear with mottoes like those upon the flags—"Unite or Die," "Liberty or Death." And in the meeting-houses the ministers, by recommendation of the Provincial Congress, have been preaching "on the nature of civil and religious liberty, and the duties of magistrates and rulers."

Meanwhile the union between the colonies, and the feeling for independence, are growing stronger every day. Georgia at last has joined the rest, and the thirteen colonies now stand shoulder to shoulder. But the other feeling, for independence, has grown somewhat slowly. After Lexington and Concord, the Massachusetts Congress still held firm allegiance to the King. When Washington took command of the army, he "abhorred" the idea of independence. The general hope was still to wrest from Parliament a colonial Bill of Rights, embodying constitutional conditions, at once of liberty and loyalty. But already in October Dr. Belknap, down from Dover on a visit, and preaching for the Cambridge minister, got a whisper from the chaplain after his loyal prayer that "it was disagreeable to the generals to pray for the King." "I answered that the same authority that appointed the generals ordered the King to be prayed for at the late Continental Fast." All through the next month, both in the camp and in the Philadelphia Congress, the talk ran more fiercely every day for genuine revolution, so that by January most minds were ready for Tom Paine's Common Sense.

And in Boston, what was the November month? A season of gloom both to the British and to the natives, cabined with the British in the small peninsula. There were some six thousand of the latter, twice that number of the former; and food and fuel enough for the soldiers, but so very scant for the others that the suffering was great. Add to this, small-pox broke out. Prices rose high. There was no milk. Eggs were half a guinea a dozen, bread was four times its former value before the siege was over, and fresh meat was hard to get even for rich Tory aristocrats. Faneuil Hall was a soldiers' theatre; the Old South was a riding-school for the dragoons; Hollis and Brattle Street churches were barracks; the famous Liberty Tree had been cut down (it gave the British fourteen cords of wood; but the green tree had fired a brighter flame already in the spirit of Boston men); and besides the trees many old buildings had been torn down for fuel. The Tories had volunteered, and were drilling. A dozen men-of-war were lying at anchor in the harbor. All the letters from England came crazy with threats against the American traitors, and the soldiers themselves were still proud and braggart; but Gage had been recalled to tell what he knew about Bunker Hill, and the tone of Lord Howe's despatches was getting solemn as he faced the more than possibility of flight. The homespun fellows who had chased Lord Percy home through Cambridge Farms, and had twice repulsed himself upon the Charlestown Hill, were no cowards to be despised.

Such was the general scene within and without the town. And as Thanksgiving week approached, the situation outside seemed to darken. Cold weather set in, and the barracks were not finished; fuel was far to bring; supplies were scant; already army contractors were at their work shortening the cords, and army officers were among the speculators. Washington's anxiety grew intense. With the end of the month the time of the Connecticut troops was to expire, and they, half-frozen, threatened to desert him on the day. Only a little later the other troops must be set free. And not only were the new recruits most slow in coming in, but he had been obliged to attempt and carry out an entire reorganization of the army right across the jealousies of the transferred officers and the loud grumbling of the men. And all this reorganizing and disbanding went on, without powder, in the very face of the enemy. His letters frankly told his fears and his disgust. The last week of November and the first days of December held his lowest dip of hope. "Our situation is truly alarming, and of this Gen. Howe is well apprised. I tremble at the prospect. Such a dearth of public spirit and want of virtue, such stock jobbing and fertility in all the low arts, to obtain advantages of one kind or another in this great change of military arrangement, I never saw, and pray God I never may be witness to again. Could

I have foreseen what I have and am like to experience, no consideration upon earth should have induced me to accept this command."

That was written on Nov. 28th. "Thanksgiving" came on the 23d. It was a pleasant day, with ice in the road from an early snow-fall,—"so I did not go to meeting," says a diary of the time; but the churches were open as usual by order of the Provincial Congress, and we can imagine what was preached and prayed in them, what war-resounding texts the parsons chose from the Old Testament arsenal. All was quiet on the lines that day, although Gen. Putnam threw up some works the night before on what is now McLean Asylum Hill, and Washington could only explain the British silence by supposing Howe was planning some important enterprise. The next day, for cheer's sake, the General Officers made a long, encouraging address to the soldiers. Three days later some three hundred of the Boston poor were boated off, and landed, half-starved and sick, at Point Shirley. Then came good news that Montreal was captured by the expedition sent to Canada. And then, best news of all—and still within a week from the Thanksgiving,—word that Captain Manly, out privateering, had brought in an English brig loaded with military stores. At that the Cambridge army brightened visibly, and the recruiting started up more briskly.

The anxious fortnight wore by. It was the crisis of the siege of Boston; and that was in a sense the early crisis of the war; for if Washington's Thanksgiving fears had been realized, and this first deliberate operation by the Provincial troops had fallen through, the disaster would have affected greatly the whole after-history. The colonies needed that success; the British ministry needed that cooping up and that retreat. By the middle of December the new militia had come in, and the prospect looked more favorable,—and kept that look until the happy day in March when the new flag with thirteen stripes waved over Dorchester Heights, and signalled the British General that the time had come for him to quit Boston. Our Centennial glimpse must end with that gray November Thanksgiving—blue without, but gray enough within—in the camp.

But now what was it all for? Why were they encamped upon these hills a hundred years ago this week?

The reason why, what for, had shifted somewhat even during the six months of the siege; but the reason, whatever form it took, was rooted in the whole long century of discipline that lay between the old crisis of 1675 and the year that now was passing. The Fathers had learned well the lessons of independence in three schools,—in that hundred years of self-reliant combat with the Indians and French within the wilderness, in the town-meeting at which they had been wont to self-reliantly conduct their civil interests, and in the congregational church meeting, at which, unbishoped, they had so long practised ecclesiastical republicanism. Underneath all these, and underlying all their citizenship, lay their common-school system. And besides this training, ten years of special preparation had been accorded them since the Stamp Act roused their cry, "No Taxation without Representation." That cry was merely their concrete way of claiming that the people were the source of political power; was merely that day's way of uttering what Lincoln uttered in his world-famous phrase at Gettysburg, "The Government of the People, by the People, for the People." That was, first and last, the essence of the stand the Fathers took. But as England pushed through those ten years her foolish thought to conquer a supremacy by the Tea-Tax, the Boston Port-Bill, and, finally, by the "Regulating Acts," which struck clear through the charter government, from the right to elect the council to the very summoning of juries and the calling of town-meetings, the Americans grew more deeply conscious of their own intent, and the necessity laid on them. They had aimed at no revolution, at no independence, at nothing new, indeed. "They asked for the old paths; they claimed for the town its ancient rights, for the colony its ancient liberties," says Frothingham. The caucus-clubs, the liberty-trees, the patriotic pulpits, the Boston donations, and the intimidation of the royal appointees meant only this; the Committees of Correspondence, even the drilling of the Minute-men, and the assembling of Provincial and Continental Congresses, and the military stores collected at Concord and Worcester, only looked to this. But the English Parliament was struck with blindness; the king was deaf with stubbornness; and there came the day to which the century and the whole ten years of steady preparation led, "from which hundreds of the muster-rolls of the Revolution date,"—the day of Lexington. That placed the farmers on the hills, and held them there until the dawn of Revolution rose and broadened in their hearts, and they felt that they were born to be a Nation!

Another hundred years have passed. It will take all next year's eloquence to tell the thousand things for which we have occasion, as a people, to be reverently grateful. For nothing need we feel a deeper gratitude in 1875, than that the Thanksgiving season brings no crisis as it did a hundred years ago, as it did two hundred years ago, as it might have done for us had not the martyr of Harpers Ferry hastened the inevitable conflict. Yet a chronic danger disregarded holds worse peril for a people than a crisis known and bravely met. Over and over next year we shall hear that the best gratitude to the Fathers will be our imitation of them; the best centennial revival will be re-baptism in their spirit. A stirring voice in Virginia has just told Virginians what should be laid to mind by all the land to save centennialism from being a vulgar braggadocio and a fruitless sentimentality: "No spur to good deeds should be so sharp as the consciousness of descent from an honorable stock; but the man is beggarly who boasts of it without having himself added to its lustre."

Through this first century, the nation has been depending largely on an inherited capital of Moral Force, funded in the institutions which the fathers gave us. That capital sufficed to compact the government in its infancy, to gain us place among the other nations, to solve the early problems of State and Central Sovereignty; it bore us nearly down to the great, sad Civil War, which has left us with our unity secure, our freedom—in the sense in which other people use the term—secure, and our national life cleaner by at least one source of evil closed forever. But so greatly has that life expanded during the century that the institutions are submitted now to strains such as the Fathers never felt nor planned for; and the Moral Force of old infused does not suffice to keep them longer stable. With the thirteen colonies grown to eight and thirty States; with the Pacific for our boundary instead of the Alleghenies; with the people of three become a people of forty millions, and with nearly twice as many foreigners among them as there were natives then; with a mercantile marine larger than that of any nation save Great Britain, the agricultural centre lying in States which white men then had barely visited, and manufactures, then almost unborn, adding four thousand million dollars yearly to the land's production; with a national debt of over half that sum; with a yearly revenue of three hundred millions, and a Civil Service whose officials constitute an army by themselves; with all these vastly changed conditions of the nation's life, the nation needs a new supply of Moral Force. No material development, no intellectual culture, no refining of the sense of beauty, can take its place to keep us safe. Rather, each and every growth without it is ominous of danger.

Almost untouched, the hardest problem and by far the most momentous of a republic lies now in our immediate future; else, "after us, the deluge!" It has hardly been approached as yet save by attempts that mark its difficulty,—by the public attempt, and failure, to reform our Civil Service, by the spam in which New York threw off for a moment its Tyranny of Thieves, by the ache with which the South slowly strains towards social reconstruction. That problem is, How, under the people's government, to keep the best men at the front,—men such as those who led a hundred years ago, whose names are shining in our history. That not to keep the best men at the front condemns us to the universal mediocrity for which the European sneers at us,—this is of moment; but in a republic not to keep the best men there is to let the strong, bad men go forward; and that is a matter beyond all others in its consequence. In Plato, who will can read the theory of a republic's ruin sketched at length by one who had experience of the decay in his country's history. May it be long a thing for us to read, not watch! But for primary lessons in the theory we need hardly go to Plato. The best things turned to curses make the sorest curses. That ideal of which all the nations dream, towards which they strive—"the people's government,"—in its very nature holds the deadliest dangers for the people careless of the trust. To give up universal suffrage is what we cannot, would not, do; it is our corner-stone. But with the bulk to which our nation now has grown, universal suffrage involves masses of utterly ignorant suffrage; involves the "Boss Rule" of the large cities where immigration centres; involves the "Rings" with which each public money-chest is beset at all the capitals; involves the "Spoils System" on which our later politics are based; involves the "Catholic Danger" rising here amid the opportunities of freedom as it subsides under more arbitrary governments. These perils, and such as these, go with the people's government.

For us in 1875 they are no longer omens; they have passed into the stage of burdens. To bear them safely, and to throw them off, we need a new supply of the old Moral Force. Many people have aspired before us to be self-governed,—and have failed. Many spurred by our success have since tried,—and failed. And there is no power in heaven or on earth pledged to save us from failure if, in the children's heart, to day's "Thus saith the Lord!"—that word which the fathers by the light of their day so loyally obeyed,—dies out. The chronic danger disregarded holds worse peril for a people than a crisis known and bravely met.

But it is Thanksgiving time. And more, not less, shall these words "danger," "crisis," make us thankful for what we are to-day,—ay, and, amid all omens, trustful. In high courage as well as in humble thankfulness, in that courage which is highest when it springs from reverence, it becomes us to fulfil our century. Let centennialism stand for no young folly of a braggart nation, but again for self-reliance based on moral loyalty; and then—when still another century shall have tried "the people's government," and in 1975 the children, whom we shall never see, praise God for homes and friends, and the constant bounty of the seasons, and the pleasant places that they love then as we love now—they will not forget to add as fervently as we do now, Good Lord, we thank thee for our Fathers!

A COLORED BROTHER rose to pray in a conference meeting, the other day, but before that exercise he indulged in brief preliminary remarks as follows: "Brethren and sisters, it don't do me a bit of good to hear any of you speak or pray; I feel as though I must do it for myself; for, you know, as our Lord and Savior said, 'Every tub must stand on its own bottom!'" As may be imagined, the effect of the quotation did not add materially to the serious aspect of the meeting.

[OF THE INDEX.]

LEAVES FROM MY JOURNAL.

BY S. H. MORSE.

"WE ARE ALL CHILDREN of the State," said one whose whole nature and life refutes the slander. "Children of the State" we may be; but 'twere far better were we the children of God.

"OUR LIBERTY is in God," is, I believe, a quotation from somebody. But this God, we are told again, has not liberty in the sense of escape from law; he, at least, is bound by the law of his being. Most true; unite us all to that liberty, O Statesman! and we shall be satisfied.

"WE OUGHT TO OBEY GOD rather than man," is a saying I have often heard quoted, and that by liberal-minded people as frequently as by others. But latterly I find my radical friends, some of them, preaching obedience to men as the highest duty. When one says he has a conscience, a God, in him, he cannot well turn his back upon, they say, "Whim," and smile a derisive smile. It is bad business for them. I have as much right to my "whim," friend, as you to your "wisdom." I'll not pelt you with it—if you can keep out of my door-yard.

I SHOULD LIKE to hear Mr. Conway's lecture on the Devil, and see the illustrations of his Infernal Majesty which accompany the lecture. I suppose, however, they all have heads with horns, or their equivalents, and forked tails. It sometimes occurs to me whether the universe is not a dual concern run by a God and a Devil, the problem being which shall die. If it be a question as to the "survival of the fittest," I, for my part, shall never think it safe to bet on the Devil. And yet, "how long, oh Lord, how long!"

WHAT IS IT to have faith in ideas? I ask the question of myself, and answer: It is to believe in them as being in and of themselves most potent and powerful to persuade, command, and sway the destinies of mankind. But a friend at my elbow will not allow me this response. He says, "I mean that I have more faith in the leadership of an idea than in a personal leadership; but of course the idea must be put through." Exactly. This is where he always brings up. The idea, in his judgment, never sprouts and comes to any practical potency save in the hot-bed of legislation, or in soil saturated with human gore. The ballot and the bayonet, or no civilization; but a backward plunge into midnight. In vain that I point out that his faith, by this very confession, is in persons—for how otherwise ballot or bayonet?—and not in ideas.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATIONS are in duty bound to state the case prosperously, for the faith of man is scarcely up to giving thanks for famine. Though famines fall within the providential order, 'tis hard for mortals to confess it. And it may be supposed, too, that the Almighty would have a poor opinion of a people who should thank him for "distinguished benefits" of that description. Yet were a famine actually present in the land, it would hardly be the thing for a great people to announce to the Lord of hosts in the person of their chief-magistrate that "plenty reigns within our borders." The Heavenly King who bestowed the famine would be apt to think his earthly children were mocking the wisdom of the bestowment; for he would not like to think them fools or liars. In view of these remarks, I would ask just what our President means when he says, "Labor and enterprise have produced their merited rewards." He, in all probability, did not mean much of anything. "We have been accustomed," he says, "to express our thanks." The custom holds—though 'twould be "more honored in the breach than in the observance"—that we must, as I said, state the case prosperously. The fact, in regard to "labor and enterprise," as everybody knows, is quite the contrary. Even our well-to-do business men, we are informed, are "unable to keep a horse." And the day-laborer, he, though he toil ten hours, can barely keep the wolf from his door. Why not tell the Lord, Mr. President, the exact truth of the matter? It might be of some advantage to us as a people.

"DO YOU LOCK YOUR DOOR?" quoth a friend to me. "Why, yes, I do; why not?" "Why, then you have not faith in man." This he said ironically, believing he had placed my logic in a very uncomfortable fix. But his wit is dull; and I know not that I can "mend its pace by beating." Nevertheless I will try. I never say mankind are perfect. I know there are those who might steal from me—they have done so; there are those who might take my life, as the experience of others assures me. That I should not defend myself against such as these is no part of my philosophy. But that such defence should be conducted with as little resort to violence as is possible, I fully believe. Locking my door has no violence in it. If some one burst through, why, I will act in that emergency as I am capable of acting. On such an occasion a man will act out what he is, not his theory, nor even his principle, unless it flows in his blood. Locking my door is my business, and argues nothing. But now, the man who would steal from, or slay me, how shall I treat him? One thing: I will not unlock my door to pursue him with my vengeance, nor give aid or countenance to society in doing so. My faith is that this bad spirit in this universe of man can be starved out. It is to be disposed of; but how? For the time this; it flourisheth, it has a wholly natural and beneficent function. It is the representative in our race of life, and it announces the spiritual deadness that prevails. The universe is so constituted that in self-defence it says, "A live devil is better than a dead god." Now if the god be asleep, or impotent, the devil will rage, and the wit of man will be put to it to say why he should not. But what constitutes life in the god? Not a hand-to-hand scuffle with the imp of darkness, each raging for the throat of the other. That would be a descent of the god into hell, which he can ill afford. No; let him be divinely alive, and he will cease to furnish his diabolical majesty with the food that enableth him to wax in strength. For as maggots spawn in cheese, so is the devil spawned from and preserved by the deadness of the god. I say this with reference to the two characters that have their abode in most mortals.

Turn the key? Yes; the god has a right to his own ground. Key-turning is Life!

THE DOCTRINE OF THE second birth has received the cold shoulder from rational or liberal thinkers. It is put aside in various ways. Some say they prefer the doctrine of being born well at the start. Others would like to be born anew any number of times; as Paul said, "I die daily," so would they like to say, "I am born daily." But the drift of all this opposition to the second birth is an indisposition to in-dorse the idea of a supernatural somersault. We of this modern time like very much to hold fast the thought that all progress or growth is natural, and under the certain guidance of uniform law. I do not propose to controvert this theory. If I did not suspect it was entirely true, I should doubt very much where we were any of us going to arrive. In other words, if there was a Supreme Will in the universe with any variableness or shadow of turning as its prerogative, I should feel that human dependence on the nature of things was not merely a more foolish thing than we are all accustomed to regard it, but a thing absolutely impossible. Not to accumulate words, is not the idea of a second birth—not to speculate about succeeding births—in the order of things? In individual cases, something equivalent thereto has undoubtedly often occurred. The disposition of men, their first hunger, thirst, has been wholly changed. Whereas, up to a certain time—or movement of time—they faced one way; after that they faced precisely the opposite way, and with equal delight. From doing what they condemned because they loved to, they changed to doing what they approved because they loved to: a change of loves. Well, say new birth, or say what you will; there is the fact. I do not call it miraculous, nor contrary, to natural. I call it natural; as natural as anything else is natural. I could proceed to say more particularly what I mean, but rest with stating the fact, which answers my present purpose.

I am told that Fourier looked for a new birth of the race. Whereas now, let us suppose, nine-tenths indulge in strife, war, annihilation of each other's life or property,—indulge in this because, as at present enlightened, it is the way their natures must express themselves,—and one-tenth is disposed to peace, brotherhood, harmony; the time shall come when these conditions shall be reversed: the peace party become nine tenths, the war party be reduced to one-tenth. This will be the new birth of the planet. But it will come suddenly as the sun-burst from a terrible world-conflict. Are there any signs in the heavens of a birth so auspicious?

IT WOULD seem that Mr. Tucker has been at work upon the "foundations," "strengthening" them; but not as the President would approve, I suppose. Nevertheless, the President has referred us to Lexington, and so furnished the text for a better gospel than is much preached by the great majority of his countrymen, or, for that matter, by himself. Even the Lexington farmers were not as wise as their words: "No taxation without representation." That was where they stood. And to their side came all the colonies. The war over, they commenced the "structure" we are now invoked to make secure by "adding all needful guarantees." Let us agree that "taxation without representation is tyranny." There arises the question, What constitutes representation? When may one say that he is represented? A few questions of this nature will bring our present system of representation before the judgment seat, and it will appear there with no very valid defence.

The principle involved is clear enough to many minds in affairs of religion, and cannot be stated better than the editor of THE INDEX has done in these words: "That no man shall be taxed for the support of a religion which is not his own." He cannot be so taxed, because that would be "taxation without representation." It follows, then, in matters of religion, that a man cannot be taxed. Religion, as the President says, must be "supported entirely by private contributions." No tax for a "religion not his own"; no, nor for the religion that is his own, either. The support he shall give even his own religion must be voluntary. The whole thing is brought down to a business transaction. What religious help a man wants, as far as he is able, he will buy and pay for. If he does not want any, it cannot be forced upon him, and a tax levied in payment thereof. It will not do to say, "Religion is a good thing, a necessary thing; and, if you live in our community, you are benefited thereby; and so you must bear your share of the expense. Either do that, or bid us good-by and go to Africa." No; we have, it is presumed, passed by all that. And yet, suppose a man is unable to divorce his religion from his life; suppose all the religion he has consists in righteous dealing with his neighbors. That is the religion he believes in; it is his own, and not another's. Now, is he left in freedom to support his own religion? or shall he be taxed to defray the cost of institutions that will deal with his fellowmen after a manner he can with no good conscience approve? This is the attitude of the world; it separates religion from all social human relations, and says religion has to do only with one's relation to his God, if he have one. But the man I have been speaking of says, "The relation I sustain to my God determines my relations with my fellowmen."

"HELP US SUPPORT the institutions of the country, or leave the country." This is the polite notice which modern, free civilization posts on every man's door. Then comes a friend and explains: "If you avail yourself of the benefits of society, society has a right to bring in its bill. You were not consulted as to being born; you cannot have your way after you are born; born of society, you are the creature of society, and it may dispose of you." This last clause the friend would immediately interpret so that it should mean that society must not in any way wrong or injure the individual. Thus we reach the turning point of the dispute. It seems, then, that society may not dispose of the individual as it pleases; but that the individual has some rights society is bound to respect. I will call upon the individual to make a short address. Thus he speaks:—

"I came from God to abide awhile on this planet called earth. As I departed, the God said to me: 'You will find matters there much confused. The greed of those I have sent before you has high everywhere o'ershot the mark. There is a vast monopoly of the earth by the most powerful of the inhabitants. I seek to overcome it. Into their midst I continually send my messengers. I now send you. As soon as you are there long enough to get acclimated, and to understand their tongue, they will begin to tell you of the indebtedness you are under to their fostering care and continued protection. Well, for all they have done, and done well, be grateful. Seek to repay them by a like service. But bear ever in mind that they are first under obligation to me; and that I have sent you thither to judge the earth, not to acquit it. I never sent a soul thither whose mission it was to forestall you in your advent, and deny you a due inheritance of earth, air, and sky. But you will find the earth all claimed by titles the strong enforce. True, there has been much improvement of its condition; but I send you to change the manner of this improvement. I send you to represent the true dignity of the individual. So shall you turn the wheel of time to my purpose. This be your service to your fellowmen.' What now shall I do? Shall I remember this my commission, or join you who are rebels and deserters of the Most High? I think I will abide among you, and put you ever to the test of the justice you proclaim, yet deny. I was sent here. I cannot abandon you. In the words of one, who a century gone by, sought to reclaim mankind to the common sense of God, 'Where liberty is not, there is my country.' To this my country am I wedded, not with free choice to forsake it, but bound with it to abide, and win it upward, by non-conformity to its erring ways. I claim this right from the owner of both heaven and earth, and do hurl this my gentle but unalterable defiance at all who contest it."

WHEN SOCIETY RESPECTS individual conscience, society is born. Now strip the word of its misleading import. What is society? It is a meeting of individuals. So, then, what have we? Where no individual has a conscience that invades or overrides the conscience of another, there can be no oppression. In other words, liberty demands one conscience on the question of respect for conscience. Thus vanishes Thug, Christian, or invading Liberal.

A DOMINGO NEGRO in the French colonies is reported to have said: "There was a time when I knew nothing of God or the devil; but now I know and love them both."

A FRIEND OF MINE dropped in upon me this morning and, while I was at work, produced and left with me the following:—

THE SOUL.

Rippling on sands of time,
Toying with weeds and shells,
Pulsing in inlets dim,
Chafing with sun-beat wild
'Gainst barriers of sense,
The soul no more is found;
But, inward far withdrawn,
Regains the immortal sea;
Its native ocean vast
Rolling on brighter shores,
On other strands of dream,
Where surf Elysian pours,
And isles Elysian gleam.

B. W. Ball.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Daily Telegraph writes from Cardiff to the effect that the Marquis of Bute has leased to Monsignor Capel his ancient family seat at that town, which has served as a residence for his ancestors for centuries; also that the extensive picturesque park and grounds, comprising several hundreds of acres, have been made over to the same eminent ecclesiastic for the purpose of the Roman Catholic Church. The length of time for which the grounds are to be given up to Monsignor Capel—whether it is to be in perpetuity or only for a short period of years—has not yet transpired; but it is supposed that the new Catholic College, which is said to be only temporarily established at Westminster, will be transferred to this ancient seat of the Bute family.—Galignani's Messenger, Oct. 2.

A LOQUACIOUS BLOCKHEAD, after babbling some time to Lord Erskine, observed he was afraid he was obtruding on his lordship's ear. "Oh, not at all," said Erskine; "I have not been listening."

MR. BLAINE ON THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

The letter [published in last week's INDEX] written by Mr. Blaine over a month ago, vindicates his sagacity as an interpreter of the tendencies of the times. At the date of the letter, just after the election in Ohio, it was generally said that the designs of the Roman Catholic priesthood in that State had not only been defeated, but had been abandoned, and that the school question was but little more than a transient flurry on the surface of public opinion. Mr. Blaine, however, like all thoughtful and far-seeing minds, is not of this view. He sees that, whatever reasonable disposition may be felt by the great body of our Catholic population, the priesthood are pushed on by the spirit and the direst instigations of Rome to demand either a control of our public schools or a division of the school money, and that they will never cease in this agitation. In this respect they are not unlike the pro-slavery leaders in the generation before the war; no matter what compromises were made, or how well satisfied the better portion of slaveholders might be with the position of the institution, these leaders felt a ceaseless impulse to play the part of propagandists, until they involved the whole country in the results of their madness.

Mr. Blaine, therefore, thinks it best to meet this new menace in season, by proposing that the American people shall make a just establishment of our public school system on the ground that has often been advocated in these columns; namely, on the non-sectarian principle. He suggests the adoption of a constitutional amendment prohibiting to the States any interference with the freedom of religion, or any control of money raised by taxation for the support of schools, by any religious sect, or its division among such sects. The object thus aimed at is the right one, and the method proposed is substantially sound. As Mr. Blaine remarks, it would not interfere with the right of every State to have just such a school system as its citizens may prefer, subject to the simple restriction that the schools shall not be made the arena for sectarian controversy or theological disputation. In case the Roman Catholics should get a majority in any State, either by their own strength or through partisan influences, this amendment would undoubtedly prevent the carrying out of the designs adverse to the schools, now harbored by the priests. Their ecclesiastical training and spirit impel them to rest satisfied with nothing short of getting an absolute control of all public education, if they can; of the education of Catholic children at least; and this amendment, if adopted, would effectually debar them.

Whether its terms as expressed by Mr. Blaine are those best calculated to render harmless this priestly agitation, by arraying the great body of patriotic citizens of all denominations and religions in an invincible phalanx in support of our public school system, will require further consideration. The subject, as one for definite legislation, is a delicate and many-sided, if not a new, one; and we have had experience enough already with our last three constitutional amendments to feel the need of extreme caution and the most dispassionate deliberation in recurring to any similar undertaking. That, however, only renders conspicuous the obligations which the people are under to Mr. Blaine for calling their attention to the whole subject now, when there is a lull in political movements and the whole subject can be considered more fairly, and its treatment—if anything is to be done nationally—can be entered upon more wisely and effectually than at any time hereafter.—Boston Journal, Nov. 27.

HOSPITALS AND CHRISTIANITY.

Last week we drew attention in these columns to the denial given by Mr. Green, minister of the Central Synagogue, to the statement of Canon Lightfoot, that "hospitals were the creation of Christianity." On Thursday, the 23d instant, the following letter upon the same subject appeared in the Daily News: Sir,—Mr. Green is quite right to call in question Canon Lightfoot's assertion that hospitals are a "creation of Christianity"; because, although among the Jews they seem to have been confined to "separate houses" for the use of lepers, yet they existed in India long before Christianity appeared in the world. Among the edicts of King Asoka (4th Cent. B.C.), which still exist, inscribed on pillars and graven in the living rock, there occurs one which commands that "medical aid" should be established throughout his kingdom, together with "medicaments of all sorts which are suitable." Nearly seven hundred years after Asoka's death the Chinese pilgrim Fa-Hian visited India, and found hospitals flourishing at Asoka's city of Patna: "The nobles and landowners of this country have founded hospitals in the city, to which the poor of all countries, the destitute, the cripples, and the diseased may repair for shelter. They receive every kind of requisite help gratuitously. Physicians inspect their diseases, and according to their cases order them food and drink, decoctions, and medicine—everything, in fact, which may contribute to their ease. When cured, they depart at their own convenience." (Travels of Fa-Hian Beal's Ed., p. 107.) In the toleration which opened the hospitals to the "poor of all countries," in the liberality which gave "help to all gratuitously," we recognize the practical working of that catholic charity which knows no distinction of race or creed in the presence of suffering humanity, and which formed so striking an illustration in the story of the Good Samaritan—"Take care of him; and when I come again I will repay thee." I am, sir, your obedient servant, John N. Hoare, M.A., Rector of Killiskey, Chaplain to Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. Mr. Thomas B. Henderson, M.B., Barnard Castle, writes in the Daily News of Monday last: "In reading Mr. Hoare's letter on the 'Existence of Hospitals in India before the Christian Era,' I was reminded of the following passage in Prescott's History of the Conquest of Mexico. Speaking of the civilization of the Ancient Mexicans, who were certainly anything but Christians, Prescott says: 'I must not omit to notice here an institution, the introduction of which, in the old world, is ranked among the beneficent fruits of Christianity. Hospitals were established in the principal cities for the cure of the sick and the permanent refuge of the disabled soldier; and surgeons were placed over them, who were so far better than those in Europe, says an old chronicler, that they did not protract the cure in order to increase the pay.' When I read this for the first time, I was very much astonished to find evidence of such an institution among a ferocious people like the Aztecs, especially as I had previously been of Dr. Lightfoot's opinion that hospitals are the creation of Christianity."—National Reformer, Oct. 3.

THE BERLIN correspondent of the London Times draws a somewhat dismal picture of the commercial outlook in Prussia during the coming winter. Prices are high, business dull and declining, failures numerous, and money under the new banking law very tight, and the number of the unemployed large and increasing. As this comes close on the receipt of $400,000,000 in hard cash from France, it furnishes one of the happiest illustrations on record of one of the truths which sensible men are just now trying to hammer into the heads of the inflationists; viz., that supplies of money which are not drawn to a country by the legitimate demands of trade are sure, sooner or later, to work mischief. The money of the world has been well compared to a great ocean, with the various civilized nations lying along its borders, and with tides which ebb and flow in any particular place under the influence of an increase or diminution of business. If a particular community wishes greatly to sell, in it rushes to enable them to do so; if they greatly wish to buy, off it goes to the place where they desire to make their purchases; and the whole process, if not interfered with by crazy legislation, goes on with as much certainty as the rise and fall of the sea under the attraction of the moon. But the minute, through any agency whatever, money is forced on a community in which trade has not called for it, or in greater quantity than trade has called for it—whether it be gold, or silver, or greenbacks, or three-sixty-fives,—a state of disease is established which sooner or later brings on a collapse. When an inflationist therefore says that specie has not prevented trouble in Prussia, he furnishes a new proof of his folly or ignorance; but he is very angry when you call him foolish or ignorant, just as the Chinaman is if you laugh when he is beating a gong to get the dragon to stop eclipsing the sun. When you tell the Chinaman that he can't interfere with an eclipse, he replies, as the inflationist does, that this is your opinion, but that many thinkers of his acquaintance hold a different one; that there are astronomers in China as well as in Europe or America; that a little more modesty would well become you; and that your arrogance is intolerable; your astronomical notions have probably been put into your head by persons anxious to injure the gong business; and that there is not a province in the country in which the people would not give heavy majorities in favor of the gong theory of eclipses.—Nation, Nov. 25, 1875.

THE BALTIMORE Katholische Volks-Zeitung, a German newspaper published under the sanction of the Archbishop and other ecclesiastical authorities, recently, by way of showing up the iniquity of the Falk Laws, gave its readers a glimpse of court life in Berlin, for which we trust the editor is doing heavy penance. He says that "unbelievers" in all states are the most immoral, dishonorable, shameless, filthy, and depraved persons, and declares that "the most terrible immorality and frightfully vicious life have assumed shocking dimensions among non-Catholic people." Of this the pious rascal gives the following horrid examples: In Berlin there are one hundred and fifty thousand depraved women, many of whom assail passers-by in broad daylight in a state of Nature, and, if a policeman interfered, he would be murdered. The Crown Princess, Queen Victoria's daughter, has no more faith than a horse, was an intimate friend of the infidel Strauss, and gave a masked ball not long ago at which drunken military officers appeared as monks and nuns, and "indulged in offensive, immoral gestures and movements." The Princess' character is notoriously bad, and she has many illegitimate children, while her husband has at least thirty; in fact, all the officers of the guard are illegitimate sons of high personages, and there is a special department in the Cabinet whose duty it is to provide names and coats-of-arms for this class of the population. The morals of the local bodies are no better, and, in fact, the rest of the exposures of these German Protestants are so grossly indecent that they will not bear reproduction in any form. Now, we should greatly like to know what Archbishop Bayley and Bishop Wood, who allow themselves to be advertised as patrons of this journal, think of the foregoing account of Prussian manners, and what they think of a religious paper which feeds the faithful in this manner. Their fellow-citizens have a right to know whether it really goes into Catholic families with the stamp of their approval.—Nation, June 10, 1875.

ARSENE HOUSSEY says: "Chivac, the Duke of Orleans' physician, was an original, clever to the last word. He never noticed that he was ill, being so anxious about the health of others; but one day he felt his pulse and said: 'The devil! He's a dead man! I have been called in too late.'"

Poetry.

AMSTERDAM STATION, ILL.

THE SKIPPER'S STORY OF THREE SAINTS.

They sat on the steps of the station,
And waited for trains to connect—
A colporteur eating his ration,
And a skipper who twice had been wrecked,—
And the strangers began conversation.

The skipper was wrinkled and hoary,
His skin was the color of leather;
The other looked hungry and sorry;
And after discussing the weather,
The skipper struck into his story:

"I'll tell ye of three saints I've know'd of,
That giv' up their lives for their brothers—
A sort you may not hev allowed of,
But folks that'll die to save others
Is bein's for God to be proud of.

"The ship Swallow, Cap'n James Bee,
In a fog off the Hatteras coast,
Was wrecked on a ledge to the lee;
Jim stood like a rock at his post,
And went down in a gulp of the sea.

"He showed us how to build a raft,
And crowded her full as she'd float;
He sprung to the davits abaft,
And lowered and loaded each boat,
Then stuck to the battered old craft.

"He saved every life but his own—
Women, children, the men, and the crew,—
Cheered when the last dory was gone,
No room for him in her, he knew;
And he went to the bottom alone!"

"My friend," asked the colporteur grim,
"Had Bee made his peace with the Lord?"
And he laid down his cracker. "What, Jim?"
Said the skipper; "I shouldn't s'pose God
'D be mad at a feller like him!"

"Another was young Andy Bell,
Who worked in the Cumberland coal;
He stood at the mouth of the well,
The mine was afire, and the hole
Blazed up like the furnace of hell!"

"The men was imprisoned below;
The women was screamin' above;
The boss shouted, 'Who'll face the foe,
And fly to the rescue for love?'
And Andy remarked, 'I will go;

"I kin die in the shaft, for I hain't Nary father, ner mother, ner wife!"
And down in the bucket he went;
Saved fifty by losin' his life;—
I say Andy Bell was a saint."

"Did he pray God," the colporteur cries,
"To help him to fight with the flame?"
"Now I think on't," the skipper replies,
"I've heard Andy mention his name—
More frekent than some would advise!"

"The third one, Newt. Evans, my friend,
Took his engine to Prairie du Chien;
Saw a speck on the track at the Bend,
And cried to the stoker, 'Eugene!
Ef that a'nt a brat I'll be dinned!'

"A baby—an' makin' mud pies!
Mind the train, To the shriek of the bell
He ran forward; sprang out for the prize;
Saved the girl? Yes; but, parson, he fell—
Both his legs was cut off at the thighs."

"Was he washed in the blood of the Lamb,"
Asked the preacher, "and cleansed from his sin?"
The skipper arose—"Am-ster-dam!—
Let me jest get my bearings agin,
An' sorter make out where I am."

He walked to the office—was mute;
When the agent asked what he desired,
He tapped on his pate in salute,
Then turned out his thumb, and inquired,
"Who—is—this 'ere crazy—galute?"

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 4.

Cash, 28 cents; Morris Einstein, $10; John Gillies, $1; Harry Hoover, $3.20; William Wiswell, $3.50; M. P. Hanchett, $1.50; H. T. Appleby, $1.20; Daniel Cony, $1.60; Frank M. Reed, $1; Cash, 45 cents; T. Lees, $3; Gorham Blake, $3.20; Mrs. S. F. Russell, $50; Sam'l Warbasse, $10; Jos. Warbasse, $10; F. H. Giddings, 10 cents; C. E. Hewes, 10 cents; M. A. Kimball, 10 cents; T. W. Davis, 35 cents; Cash, $3; W. A. Thurston, $10; Gabriel Crane, $3.20; Sarah Emerson, $13.20; Lizzie E. Dorr, $10; Mrs. J. G. Kinley, $13; Warren Emerson, $13.20; J. H. Emerson, $3.20; C. A. Day, $3.20; Thos. Ranney, $3.20; Sam'l Sewall, $3.20; W. C. Gannett, $3.20; A. E. Giles, $3.20; A. M. Howland, $3.20; John Verity, $3.20; Jos. Singer, $3.20; Theo. Brown, $3.20; J. E. Cass, $4; H. R. Plimpton, $3.20; A. Folsom, $3.20; E. F. Blaisdell, $3.20; John Adams, $3.20; Harvey Brown, $3.20; Edwin Brown, $3.20; C. A. Bartol, $3.20; H. E. Stevenson, $3.20; W. I. Bowditch, $4; P. D. Moore, $10; Wm. Wiswell, 50 cents; A. H. Raymond, $6.20; Mrs. G. F. Thayer, $3.20; Mrs. Horace Stone, $3.20; Victor Bishop, $2; D. M. Bennett, $2.45; A. S. Briggs, 80 cents; E. D. Kingman, 10 cents; W. B. Williams, 10 cents; A. J. Rich, 10 cents; Cash, 25 cents; G. F. Ransom, 50 cents; W. L. Heberling, 90 cents; L. G. Jones, 25 cents; B. M. Smith, $1; Jas. T. Dickinson, $140; J. L. Whiting, $13.20; E. Wigglesworth, Jr., $3.20; E. H. Warren, $3.20; W. H. Crocker, $3.20; E. Z. Penfield, $8.25; Mrs. J. E. Judd, $3.20; C. A. Miller, $1; Miss. C. G. Tallman, $3.20; P. G. Greagh, $3.20; F. O. Dorr, $3.20; A. M. Wright, $3.20; A. T. Linley, $3.20; A. Morrison, $3.20; C. H. Shepard, $3.25; J. H. Clark, $3.20; M. B. Bryant, $3.20; J. F. Bradley, $3.20; Lewis Hunt, $3.20; J. L. Patrick, $5; Watson Gill, $3.20; F. M. Vaughan, $3.80; L. P. Babb, $1; Cash, 10 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 9, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

MR. GANNETT's very interesting essay on "Centennial Thanksgivings," which occupies the leading place in THE INDEX this week, is a timely word. "Moral force" is preëminently the need of the nation to-day.

MR. B. R. TUCKER's translation of Proudhon's works, of which the first volume will soon be issued, is sure to be in great demand. If we can judge by what we have seen, the translation will prove to be of unusual excellence. Together with Mr. Holyoake's incomparable book, this new volume will greatly enrich the literature of the labor reform.

MR. BABCOCK says: "On the point of 'advocacy' it seems we have silenced THE INDEX." O no; he silenced himself in his third number by coming out as a strong "advocate" of Woman Suffrage! We should not have referred to this but for the above remark. It does not always do to mistake the "last word" for victory—especially when one's last word is an amusing contradiction of his first one.

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

WHETHER the spirit of persecution is dead, or only repressed by our secular system of government, may be gathered from this paragraph, published in the Lebanon (New York) Shaker and Shakeress: "The Rev. Mr. Wells, Secretary of the Ohio State Y. M. C. A., made the statement to an audience of several hundred people that 'the time is coming when Christians will love God so intensely that they will put to death even their own children who may be found holding and teaching heretical opinions.' Has the doctrine of vicarious atonement begun to bear such fruit as this in these latter days of 'boasted civilization?'"

THE Christian Union, quoting approvingly Zion's Herald's noble declaration in favor of secular schools, lately said: "To this complexion the school question is fast coming with all but a fraction of Protestants, and to this complexion it must come at last with all Catholics save those who hate the Republic and would subject it to the authority of the Pope." To what purpose does the ostrich bury its eyes in the sand? Whoever notes the action of Protestant ecclesiastical bodies sees that they are massing themselves in determined defence of the Bible in the schools; and whoever reads the Catholic papers sees that their unanimous voice is against State schools altogether. If the Republic is to be under the control of educated voters, it must yet fight a desperate battle for the very existence of its schools, over which the Protestants and Catholics are beginning a great battle for power. It is folly unprecedented to ignore the issue or underrate the necessity of herculean exertions to make the school system just by making it secular. The Independent says truly that "the comments of the religious press upon the action of the Chicago Board of Education are positively mortifying." Friends of justice and freedom, continued inactivity must prove fatal to our noble system of public schools, which cannot be perpetuated on its present sectarian basis. It must grow just, or die.

A GOOD RECORD BEGUN.

The Philadelphia Liberal League is earning the gratitude of the whole country by being the first to take active measures for the complete secularization of the public schools. The following preamble and resolution, having been under debate for several weeks, were adopted on Nov. 14:—

Whereas,—The use of the Bible in the public schools is a violation of the recognized American principle that the Church and the State ought to be absolutely separate; and

Whereas,—It is a practice which gives a distinctively Protestant character to the public school system, is grossly unjust to all non-Protestants taxed to support it, and thereby dangerously aids the Roman Catholic Church in its openly avowed warfare upon it; therefore

Resolved,—That the Liberal League of Philadelphia hereby respectfully petition the Board of Education to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools of this city; and that the officers of the League are hereby instructed to carry this resolution into effect.

Although aware that the above resolution was the subject of discussion by the Philadelphia League, we forbore to mention the fact until we could also report the action taken upon it; and of this we have only just been apprised. It appears that the meetings of the League have been very numerous attended; and Sunday before last, as we are informed, "several hundred persons had to go away without finding room." The resolution was adopted by a "pretty decisive majority." We congratulate the League on having bravely taken the necessary steps to arrest public attention to the injustice of the present sectarian character of the school system, and on having come forward publicly as advocates of the only measure which can establish justice in this most important matter. The day will come when the public service thus rendered by the Philadelphia League will be publicly acknowledged and appreciated; nor are those altogether wanting who will acknowledge and appreciate it to-day.

In order the more effectually to make their appeal to public opinion, the League, in addition to holding their meetings, have published in pamphlet form the able and admirable address of Mr. Damon Y. Kilgore, on "The Bible in Public Schools," delivered before the League on October 17. This pamphlet of twenty pages is a very powerful plea for the great reform now absolutely necessary to put the school system on an impregnable basis, and will be of great service to other communities where the same question may be raised. The price of a single copy is ten cents; for one hundred copies, five dollars. Address Mr. John S. Dye, Secretary of the League, 2527 Brown Street, Philadelphia. We hope that every reader of THE INDEX will send his ten cents to Mr. Dye for the pamphlet, and thus encourage our Philadelphia friends in the noble task they have undertaken.

Mr. Kilgore has urged the exclusion of the Bible from the schools both on general and on special grounds,—both because the genius of our political institutions requires them to be absolutely secular, and also because the Bible in itself is in many respects an unfit book to be used in historical, scientific, or moral instruction. On both grounds we entirely agree with him. At the same time it should be distinctly understood and constantly remembered that, were the Bible faultless in all these respects (as a great many people believe that it is), none the less ought it to be excluded from the public schools, just so long as it is used for the religious purposes of only a part of the people. It is solely on the ground of the equal rights of all that the Liberal League can appeal to the whole country for support, or expect the vast Protestant majority to carry out the reform it proposes. Now in perfect good faith, and with none but most friendly feelings, we do appeal to this Protestant majority to look at the matter calmly and candidly, and to prohibit the use of the Bible in the schools, not because it is a bad or imperfect book (which most of them strenuously deny), but simply because their own Golden Rule requires them to treat the Catholics, the Jews, the Buddhists, the free-thinkers of all kinds, with the same fairness and equity which they would wish to receive, in case they themselves should become a minority of the population. Unless we can succeed in keeping the Liberal League movement as broad as American citizenship,—unless it shall be seen to contemplate nothing but the better establishment of that universal justice and equality of rights without which American citizenship is only a delusive name,—our labor will be all wasted. Nothing will be able to defeat the ultimate success of the Liberal League movement, except a wide-spread and well-grounded belief that the secret animus of this movement is a bitter and indiscriminating hostility to the Bible per se. That is not the fact, at least so far as THE INDEX is concerned; and it is not the fact with Mr. Kilgore's address, which carefully discriminates between that which is "true and elevating in the Bible," and that which is the reverse of this. It would be an unfortunate thing for the movement, however, if it should degenerate into an endless controversy about the true value of the Bible, and lose sight of the great general principles which are alone really involved. Opinions about the Bible may vary without limit, as they do. But the Liberal League asks that the Bible be excluded from the schools because equal rights require this course, not because the Bible is either this, that, or the other; it asks for the cooperation of all citizens, of whatever private belief about the Bible, in making the public schools a place for that exclusively secular instruction which all may be justly taxed to support. While the League adheres to this self-evident principle, it can properly ask and properly receive the support of all classes of citizens; in comparison with this principle, the actual character of the Bible is of no practical importance; and, whatever may be said on this side issue, we trust that the main principle will always be kept distinctly in the foreground, as the real point at issue between those who favor and those who oppose the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools.

"GODLESS."

In the controversy now waging with reference to our public school system, it is common for Roman Catholics to apply to it the epithets "godless," "atheistic," "immoral." Protestantism is denounced as "godlessness." It is thus implied, of course, that their peculiar forms of religion and education are the opposite.

Now, without stopping to consider this position, let it be admitted, for the moment, that it is strictly fair and tenable. The two systems are properly designated, then, by the terms applied to them; and as "a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit," nor "a corrupt tree good fruit," the product of each must correspond to that from which it proceeds. According to such a view, Roman Catholicism, and especially its distinctive mode of education, ought always to present very palpable signs of its superior results, in a higher type of character, in better citizens, better men and women. What are the facts? Is there really a greater degree of genuine morality among those who have been bred and nurtured under Roman Catholic influences than among those reared under Protestant influences, or even outside of both?

For several hundred years Roman Catholicism was the supreme power of the Christian world. It was "monarch of all it surveyed, from the centre all round to the sea." Not only the education of the time, if it was entitled to the name, but government and society in all their forms were under its complete control; and yet these ages are the darkest of modern history. The lamp of moral and intellectual progress seemed quenched, and the human mind seemed to recede rather than to advance. Hume declares that men did not hesitate to take the most solemn oaths and break them on the simplest provocation. All historians bear evidence to the corruption of the times; wars civil and national, robberies, murders, persecutions of the most cruel and merciless sort, and the grossest vices even among the official representatives of religion (the clergy) from the Popes downward, and intense ignorance pervading all grades of society, were their chief distinction. "That Europe," it has been said, "should have ever emerged from such a state is the most decisive proof of the extraordinary energy of man, since we cannot even conceive a condition of society more unfavorable to his progress." A similar picture is presented in those countries to-day where Roman Catholicism prevails, as in Ireland, Spain, South America. "The activity and prosperity of the Pope's subjects," says Edmund About, "are in direct ratio to the square of the distance which separates them from the capital."

But to look nearer home. Does Roman Catholicism substantiate its claims in our American life? Are theft, drunkenness, quarrelsomeness, wife-beating, and criminality generally less common among its adherents than others? Are they more truthful and honest? Have they a finer sense of honor or a better development of conscience? Are they more successful in subduing and controlling the animal part of their natures? Have they as a whole broader human sympathies, more of the real spirit of brotherhood, a truer spiritual culture? All these things ought to follow, if their position is a true one. Unfortunately there is no such evidence. It is plain to every one that Roman Catholicism, notwithstanding its assumptions, has but little cause for boasting in these respects. It needs but to consult our station-houses, police-courts, and prison records, if there is any question as to this. Therefore, not until Roman Catholicism can present a better showing in respect to its practical results, will the epithets with which it assails our school system have much weight or influence. Will non-Catholic citizens be likely to look to its system with special confidence or sympathy, even though their own mode of education be "godless," "immoral," or whatever else it may be called?

And now to return to the charge itself. If it is intended to be understood that the supporters of our school system are "godless" and "atheistic" in the sense of belonging to the class these words ordinarily designate, the representation is untrue. Among those devoted to the support of our school system, the number of avowed disbelievers in a Supreme Being is unquestionably very small, and their influence is virtually nothing in determining its character or policy. The fact that such an insinuation as that referred to should be made so generally as it has been by Roman Catholic teachers, and should be allowed to remain uncorrected by their own authorities, is in itself conclusive testimony to the immorality of the Church itself, to its inability to quicken the conscience, and render clear the perception of even the most obvious principles of right and justice.

D. H. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Your readers will, I am sure, be interested in hearing of my progress in thought, and will welcome any fresh token of the scientific spirit on the part of our ecclesiastical leaders.

At the opening of the session of the Edinburgh University Philosophical Society, the Rev. Professor Wallace (author of that wonderfully fine lecture on the poet Burns) delivered an address on the relations between philosophy and faith, which, with two or three exceptions, stands far in advance of any clerical utterances we have heard for a long time past from the other side of the Tweed.

The Rev. Principal Caird had quite recently given at Glasgow a most encouraging account of the progress of the scientific spirit, and this was alluded to by Sir Alexander Grant on the occasion of Professor Wallace's address, and the allusion was heartily welcomed by the audience. It is worthy of note that Principal Tullock of St. Andrews, Principal Caird of Glasgow, and Professor Wallace of Edinburgh, are the three most eminent divines in Scotland, and will before long carry all before them. There can be no doubt that our Scotch kinsmen are better gifted by nature and better prepared by education for the pursuit of truth than we Englishmen generally are; and therefore it is to be expected that when they once break away from their old moorings they will sail with greater speed and courage over the boundless sea of inquiry. Professor Wallace drew a very happy distinction between faith and philosophy. "Faith," he thought, "might be defined as the mind in a state of conviction merely, while philosophy might be said to be the mind in a state of reasoned conviction. Faith was the mind in a state of conviction regarding supersensible things, no matter whether philosophical or not, and philosophy was the mind convinced one way or another, after a thorough sounding into the profoundest principles concerned."

Having laid down this distinction between faith and philosophy, the professor proceeded to inquire how far these two conditions of mind could be made harmonious. He illustrated in the best manner possible how faith had been sometimes master, sometimes servant, to philosophy, and finally reached the conclusion that instead of occupying these relations alternately, faith and philosophy should be the nearest of friends and the most staunch allies. He unflinchingly repudiated the notion that faith could reasonably subsist without a substratum of philosophical truth:—

"In reference to that view which would represent faith and philosophy as having nothing to do with one another," he said "that to speak of faith in an unknown and unknowable God was really just as meaningless as to speak of faith in abracadabra. If there be no knowledge of God before the mind, how can we stand in any conscious relation to the matter. If the object of faith be utterly incognitable, then Comte and Spencer and the Positivists are right, and we had better attend to things that are actually before our minds, instead of wasting our energies in a vain attempt to draw riches out of emptiness."

The professor admitted that "some philosophies were inimical to true faith, but that was just because those systems were wrong in their conclusions."

He went on to define the limits of the two claimants for supremacy, asserting that faith held a promise into which philosophy could not be allowed to intrude except as a friend and ally, while philosophy was empowered to eject from the presence of faith all those "intellectual squatters" who had no right or title to be there.

"A period arrived when reflective thought was born and asserted its natural prerogative. Then commenced a process of clearance. Philosophy turned adrift those baseless convictions which too long had played the part of impostors. Only those against whom no rational indictment could be established remained. In the case of the false, the mastery of philosophy was made abundantly clear; but it was not less so in the case of the true."

"If convictions remained within the mind, exercising the power of impelling the will to action, it was simply because their title-deeds had been examined and found to be regular and valid."

The professor then turned to the question of revealed religion, stating that, whether it was real or not, it rested on the primary truths of natural religion, and that these could only be tested by philosophy.

"Natural theology was simply and entirely a department of philosophy."

So much more was the subject of revealed religion under the absolute control of philosophical inquiry and research. The harmony between faith and philosophy is thus pithily expressed:—

"Faith existed before philosophy, and furnished the latter with materials; philosophy revised faith, and legitimized its position. In these circumstances, the proper relation was rightly set forth neither by the figure of the servant, nor by that of the master. The right conception was that of a relationship of alliance and friendship."

"The highest acts of friendship were service, correction, and defence; and genuine philosophy did all these things for faith."

No wonder that the address was listened to with profound attention, and only interrupted by bursts of applause. The professor wound up by saying:—

"Let simple love of truth be your animating motive; let courageous, yet wise, circumspect, and many-sided reflection be your guide; remember that dashing speculation is not philosophy; that it is only by cautious, laborious, steady searching and groping that wisdom is to be found."

From such philosophy neither faith, nor aught else, has anything to fear. It is not philosophy, but "vain philosophy," that is forbidden; not science, but "science falsely so-called." I only wish there were more of such religious, believing, philosophical minds in our country and in yours, to disarm philosophy of its terrors, and to redeem religion from the "intellectual squatters" which infest the realm of faith. I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., Nov. 20, 1875.

ON ONE OCCASION, Charles Dickens was upholding the theory that whatever trials and difficulties might stand in a man's path, there is always something to be thankful for. "Let me, in proof thereof," said Dickens, "relate a story: Two men were to be hanged at Newgate for murder. The morning arrived; the hour approached; the bell of St. Sepulchre's began to toll; the convicts were pinioned; the procession was formed; it advanced to the fatal beam; the ropes were adjusted round the poor men's necks; there were thousands of motley sight-seers of both sexes, of all ages, men, women, and children, in front of the scaffold—when, just at that second of time, a bull, which was being driven to Smithfield, broke its rope, and charged the mob right and left, scattering people everywhere with its horns. Whereupon one of the condemned men turned to his equally unfortunate companion, and quietly observed, 'I say, Jack, its a good thing we ain't in that crowd!'"

A VERY OLD STORY is extant of a Presbyterian divine, the incumbent of two barren rocks in the Frith of Clyde, with a scanty population of some hundred souls, who, in offering up a prayer for the prosperity of the rocks in question, was wont to beseech the Almighty at the same time and in his great mercy not to overlook the adjacent islands of Great Britain and Ireland.

IT IS SAID that the trouble with the prohibitory law is that it is ahead of public sentiment. That's what's the matter with the ten commandments, too. —Boston News.

Communications.

A NOTE FROM MR. DAVIS.

I do not care to prolong the discussion of the finance question in your paper; but the fact that I have apparently misquoted "R. P. H." requires me to say a few words. I admit that I should not have added quotation marks to the sentence he objects to—it was done inadvertently; but I do not admit that I misrepresented the spirit of his statement. In his last comments he says that the bonds are "not as a security for a loan to the banks." In my article I quoted him as saying that the bonds are not as a security for the notes. Now as the notes were what were loaned, I do not misquote him, nor is the statement on my envelopes false. That the notes are a loan, and not a gift, is proved by the fact that the government, by the 73d Act of the law creating the banks, can recall them at any time it wishes to, upon handing back to the banks the security: namely, the bonds. "R. P. H." weakens his position by the false assumption in his first article that the banks do not borrow of the nation the National Bank-notes.

"R. P. H." says the greenback is a promise to pay "coin." Read the first greenback you see. The word coin is not there. The promise to pay is dollars, and the Supreme Court has decided that the greenbacks are dollars.

"R. P. H." also says that the National Bank-notes are payable in greenbacks (admitted), and that they are paid whenever presented. They were not in the crisis of 1873, and cannot be to-day, because the banks have only one dollar of greenbacks on hand for four dollars of National Bank-notes afloat.

E. M. DAVIS.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 2, 1875.

THE MORAL GUIDE OF HUMAN LIFE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—It is a common opinion among Orthodox believers in Christianity, that it not only brings peace and salvation to their souls, but that it also furnishes laws for their guidance in daily life. In proof of this they quote the numerous moral precepts scattered through the New Testament, few of them being aware that the greater part of this morality was held in common by the ancient Pagan religions and philosophies which preceded Christianity. For the wisest men in all ages had found by experience that temperance, chastity, and cleanliness, were for man's best interests individually, and that truth-speaking and honesty lay at the very foundations of social well-being. It is somewhat amusing to hear the confident way in which religious persons affirm that only people with bad hearts can reject the Christian dogmas. They cannot seemingly conceive of any rules for guidance in life being found elsewhere than in the Bible, and come to the conclusion that unbelievers will give a loose rein to all their passions and propensities, saying, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die."

It is, therefore, a very interesting and highly important branch of inquiry how far it is possible to found a code of laws for the guidance of conduct on the laws of Nature. Morality may be divided into two great branches: the duties which man owes to himself and his family, and the duties he owes to the community of which he is a member.

Every organ in the human frame has received a definite constitution; that is to say, its structure is adapted to the functions which it performs for the organism. This is equally true, whatever view we may entertain as to the origin of things,—whether we believe that all orders of animals, including man, were created at once by an Almighty Creator, or that they were evolved from simple types by the processes of evolution, of natural selection, and the survival of the fittest. On the latter hypothesis, Nature has been engaged through countless ages in developing species from the simpler forms by contact with the external world, and by the growing correspondences between the organism and the physical laws.

For it must be observed that, through all these developments, Nature has been working in conformity with the physical laws. Gravitation is a physical law, and limbs, wings, muscles, and bones have been developed in conformity with it. Another physical law is, that heat tends to diffuse itself. In harmony with this law Nature has protected all animals with an external covering, to retain the internal heat, either in the shape of layers of fat, or coats of feathers, or fur, or hair, which are increased in amount on the approach of winter, and lessened during the heat of summer. Man, also, by the use of his reasoning faculties, is capable of discovering this law, and adapts himself to it by wearing next his sensitive skin a covering of some non-conducting material, by which he retains his internal heat, and guards himself against sudden changes of temperature. If he disregards this law, the consequences will be loss of the internal heat on which life depends; the blood which should circulate to the surface will be driven inwards on the internal organs; inflammation and other diseases, with pain and suffering, and possibly premature death, will follow.

An examination of the structure of any organ and its relationship to the other organs, shows us that there are certain conditions necessary to the healthy discharge of its function. Some of these conditions, with regard to the stomach, for instance, are,—that it should be supplied with nutritious and digestible food; that it should have alternate intervals of activity and rest; and that the supply of food should be moderate in quantity. If these and the other necessary conditions are complied with, healthy digestion will be the consequence. If they are disregarded, if we do not take sufficient time to chew our food, if we eat to excess for the mere brute pleasure of eating, disordered action and impaired health will be the results. Such is the intimate relationship between the different organs, that the consequences are not limited to the bodily functions, but extend to the mental functions as well. It is a common experience with many people that dyspepsia leads to great wretchedness of mind, and not unfrequently to suicide or insanity. When we examine the structure and relationship of the lungs also, we find that there are certain conditions necessary to their healthy action, such as that they shall be supplied with pure air, and that their due inflation shall not be impeded by external pressure. Flagrant disregard of these conditions is visited by the most deplorable results; the whole system suffers from the presence of impure blood; protracted suffering, consumption, and premature death are the frequent accompaniments; and families are thus often left a burden upon the community; so that disobedience to these simple, natural laws leads to a breach, not only of the duties we owe to ourselves and families, but also of the duties we owe to the community.

Similar illustrations might be given of the working of other organs, such as the skin, the reproductive organs, the muscles, and bones. The point which I wish to insist on is: that these conditions of healthy action in our organs constitute laws to us for the guidance of our lives; obedience to which will be rewarded by health, a fitness for the discharge of our duties, and long life; disobedience to which will be punished by misery and premature death. These laws, being founded in the very nature of things, have the highest sanction which it is possible for laws to have. If we believe the world to have come directly from the hands of an Almighty Creator, these laws will be an expression of his will towards us. If we believe the world and all the organisms on it to be the product of evolution, the sanction will be equally strong; for when we consider that these organs and the condition necessary to their healthy action are the results of that long process by which Nature has accumulated modifications upon modifications on animal structures, and of the ever-growing series of correspondences between the organisms and the external world, obedience to these laws will appear in the character of a religious duty.

With regard to the duties which man owes to the community of which he is a member, Herbert Spencer in his Social Statics attempts to show that they are all included in the one great law that man has a right to pursue his happiness in his own way, subject to the one limitation that he shall not infringe on the same right in his neighbor. Without saying that he succeeds in this, we may go on to inquire whether there is anything in the structure of civilized society which will lead to a discovery of the laws which lie at the foundation of its well-being.

It is evident that, before society could adhere together to any extent, there must be a certain amount of reliance to be placed on each other by the different members of it. Honesty and truth-speaking must prevail to a considerable extent among them. If all men were to turn thieves, there would soon be an end of industry, and there would soon be nothing to steal. If all men were liars, there could not be a beginning made towards that vast system of credit and trustworthiness on which our commerce and manufactures are based. When we read of the cases of fraud and embezzlement which make so much noise in the public prints, we are apt to forget the great substratum of honesty and fair dealing which lie at the foundation of our modern civilization, and without which it never could have been built up. So also in political organization. Although there may be much bribery and corruption among certain classes, there must be a general desire to place the best men at the head of affairs; otherwise it will fare ill with the State, and dissolution will not be far distant. These and the other conditions of well-being of communities constitute the social laws. Obedience to them is rewarded by national prosperity and strength; disobedience to them is punished by national weakness, poverty, and ultimate dissolution or conquest.

It may not be uninteresting to compare the system of moral laws which might be founded on the laws of Nature with that which is drawn from the New Testament precepts, as far as individual morality is concerned. Where they prescribe the same line of conduct, it is noticeable that the former gives the reasons why obedience is required; the latter demands obedience dogmatically, on the authority of the lawgiver. The former has its rewards and penalties in this world, where they can be tested by experience; the latter defers its rewards and penalties to another and an unknown state of existence. In other respects the differences are very great. Many transgressions of the natural laws, such as neglect of exercise, breathing of foul air, etc., are not regarded as sins at all by the New Testament morality, although the penalties for these offences are so severe. Any code of rules for life drawn from the Scriptures must of necessity be very incomplete, when we consider the gross ignorance of the age in which these books were written. There is no evidence of any knowledge at that time of the existence of a brain and nervous system in man, or of the lungs and their function of respiration, or of most of the other organs of the human frame, on the well-being of which so much of our happiness depends. The ideas of morality current in such an age will, therefore, fall far short of what is required in the stage of civilization which we have now reached.

Those readers of THE INDEX who have read Mr. Mill's Essays on Religion, will perceive a great incongruity between the ideas here advanced and the "Essay on Nature" in that work. One has only to glance over that essay to see that a complete misconception existed in the writer's mind as to what is meant by a law of Nature being a guide to human conduct. A very good instance of this occurs on page 16, where he says: "When, for example, a person is crossing a river by a narrow bridge to which there is no parapet, he will do well to regulate his proceedings by the laws of equilibrium in moving bodies, instead of conforming only to the law of gravitation, and falling into the river." Now when a person regulates his proceedings by the laws of equilibrium in such circumstances, he calls into action those powers of mental faculty, nerve, and muscle, with which Nature has fitted him to live in a world where gravitation prevails. All these powers have been developed by contact between the organism and the external world, one of the laws of which is gravitation; and by the use of his faculties he places himself in harmony with the law. The same misconception prevails throughout the essay. Mr. Mill speaks of the forces of Nature as being the laws of Nature, and holds up to ridicule the idea of yielding obedience to them; whereas it is the conditions under which these forces operate in relation to the human organism which constitute the laws of Nature, in the sense in which the term is used by all writers on the subject.

Mr. Mill speaks of the confusion of ideas which pervades the works of George Combe—an author who is singularly free from confusion of ideas,—because he enjoins obedience to the physical laws as being equally obligatory with obedience to the moral law. The confusion of ideas is with himself, in confounding physical forces with physical laws. If there are any of the natural laws to which obedience is more obligatory than to others, it must be those to the infringement of which the greatest penalties are attached. In that sense obedience to the physical laws is more obligatory than obedience to the moral law, because disregard of them often leads to the forfeiture of life itself. That Mr. Mill had a very imperfect idea of the natural laws is shown by his own example; he left his own country and took up his abode in what is notoriously an unhealthy district in France, where his wife died, and where afterwards he himself died at an age when he should have been in the full maturity of his powers. If we had not been told to the contrary in the Preface to these essays, we might well have supposed that the "Essay on Nature" was written shortly after his wife's death, the language is so harsh and severe. In all likelihood it was not the institutions of Nature that were at fault, so much as his own failure to comprehend and conform to them.

Whatever opinion may be formed on this subject, it seems to me to be one of great importance. If we can succeed in making the laws of Nature "a light to our feet and a lamp to our path," instead of the old revelation in which so many of us have been educated, but which has become no longer tenable, a great point will be gained.

J. G. W.

OTTAWA Canada, Oct. 15, 1875.

DEMOCRATS AND CATHOLICISM.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your reply to the articles of Lewis G. Janes on the "Catholic Question," you quote from the New York Times a "record of facts and figures" to prove that in four or five years past the Democratic party has been responsible for large sectarian appropriations mainly absorbed by Catholic schools.

It is true that New York city is, and has been, largely a Democratic city,—and has been unfortunately governed by a ring of politicians of both parties with Tweed as their leader. But, in making the Democrats alone responsible for these sectarian appropriations, I think you must have overlooked the fact that the Legislature of New York for more than fifteen years, and until this year, has been Republican by a good working majority, and in that time the Governor, except for one term, has always been Republican also. Neither do you state a fact which is not easily apprehended in New England, where every city raises and expends its own revenues; namely, that the appropriations in New York city for city and county purposes are not made by the city government, but by the legislature of the State; and that in that period of fifteen years, with a Democratic city and a Republican State, the expressed wishes of the city as to appropriations have often been overlooked and set aside. Would it not then be simple justice rather to hold the Republican party responsible for sectarian appropriations, which, to say the least, they were at any moment able to prevent, than the Democratic party for what it had no power, if it had had the desire, to exact?

J. S. P.

PORTLAND, Me., Nov. 26, 1875.

[We have no special knowledge of New York State politics, and can of course only suggest that all the light obtainable should be thrown upon the secret history of the sectarian appropriations which have disgraced that State. If the Republicans deserve any share of the blame, let them receive it unsparingly; we are no champion of theirs, but speak independently for the purification of American politics from all sectarian influences, no matter by what party introduced. If the Democrats, however, are able to throw the responsibility of the sectarian appropriations in New York city upon the Republican party, they had better bring forward documentary evidence of the most conclusive character; for in that case they have a wide-spread and powerful prejudice to overcome. Personally we care not a whit more for the Republican than for the Democratic party, as such; we are one of the "independent voters," and vote without acknowledging the slightest allegiance to either party; but we believe that a desire to secure the Catholic vote has in some places made the Democratic party dangerously subservient to priestly masters. Let the lash be for the guilty back: whether Democratic or Republican, is of no sort of consequence. We ask for further, fuller, and more specific information on the subject from any one who has it to furnish. What was the reason of the anomalous arrangement by which the city appropriations of New York are made by the State Legislature? What "expressed wishes of the city as to appropriations" are referred to, and were they against sectarian appropriations? The above statements are too general to be satisfactory; and we can only promise absolute impartiality in publishing facts on this subject, regardless of the tender toes of any political party.—Ed.]

SPIRITUAL BUMMING.

Society seems to be greatly in need of a new science, which, when it is born, will perhaps be called intellectual economy. Our scientific journals are full of ingenious contributions, looking to the conservation of matter and force, and the avoidance of waste. How to save steam, fuel, corn, and general wear and tear, is among the great questions of this material age. It will be gratifying to many who believe that truth and social justice are as important as steam, railroads, stocks, and per cents., when men begin to inquire how cerebation may be carried on with least waste, and contribute most to intellectual production.

A society is now being started in New York to revive the study of the occult sciences, which have unfortunately been left in more or less neglect since the Middle Ages. Mouldy parchments of magic lore are to be taken down and brushed up. The Rosicrucians are to be summoned and interviewed. Men and women are determined with a vengeance that we shall know more of Gnomes, Pucks, and Calibans. The nature and origin of elementary spirits are to be investigated, with all the ardor that characterized the momentous discussions of the schoolmen.

Now every species of sincere intellectual effort must result in some possible good; but it is difficult to think of the thousands of elementary stomachs in this country that are crying for more bread, while capital with wolfish cupidity must have its profits at all hazards, and not be persuaded that much intelligence is to be expended in this matter with lamentable waste. If there be demons on the other side, they are fortified behind their own elements, which we cannot dissolve; but what say you, Col. Olcott, of the demon of poverty, which Peter Cooper says is growing ten times faster than population, and thrusting his claws deeper and deeper every year, into the vitals of the producing class? Your elementary demons may be summoned up or beckoned away, and become the plaything of the skilled oculist; but the avarice and presumption of capital is nurturing a demon which one of these days will be dangerous to play with, and will drive your elementary spirits, if not some of the primary ones, to the shades, when it gets thoroughly at work.

Though much of interest and curiosity may be involved in other spheres and conditions of life, the only thing tangibly certain is that we do live here, after a fashion, and that there are certain wrongs in this human society that cry most wofully for redress. It is the Spiritualists themselves who claim to be the most explicit asserters of the fact that the next life is what it is here fashioned to be, that this life is the primary school of the coming one, and that we commence there just where we leave off here. If so, then Spiritualists have the most vital motives for being reformers. We do not say that they, as a class, are not earnest and interested in reform. The spiritual journals are uniformly found on the right side, when religious liberty is assailed by dogmatism and bigotry. What we would suggest is that the feeling out into the dark chambers of mystery for fantastic geni is an occupation too unsatisfying and transcendental for minds which have climbed out of the old grooves, and might be so usefully employed in the urgent problems of social reform.

We hope the Spiritualists are not to follow in the footsteps of the clergy, diving after mysteries and leaving the stern facts of society untouched. At a séance, one was heard to say: "I must believe in a future life, since I have had the proofs palpable; although personally I should prefer annihilation." Well, why not go to work, then, for the good of your fellows here, and leave the business of the future to take care of itself? If the spirit world is to be made up of the materials which are furnished here, it will eventually be overrun with stock-jobbers, unless something be inaugurated to shame and tame down business greed. We may well cry annihilation, when the contagion of "profit" gets into heaven, and, instead of angels and affinities, we find nothing there but earthy spirits clamoring for ten per cent.

No man with his eyes open can fail to be interested in modern Spiritualism. The fact that the majority of popular scientists have not the moral courage to look the phenomena squarely in the face and investigate them shows that hypocrisy has permeated science as well as theology. Men like Crookes, Varley, and Wallace are not supposed to jump at conclusions at random. We have nothing against Spiritualism, but simply hope it may not get to flying off into chaotic regions of goblins, and that many a good Spiritualist may disagree with Dr. Faust, thinking it more becoming a man to leave this world a little better than he found it than to be "bumming around" in search of witches' festivals.

HENRY APPLETON.

PROVIDENCE, R.I.

UNMERITED TRIBUTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

No one can read the language of the selection of Gen. Grant's speech at Des Moines with more quickened feelings than the writer; and no one could be more anxious that those sentiments should prove to be an expression of his honest convictions, having once been his strong admirer, and having once (and only once) earnestly supported him for the highest honors in the gift of the people. If these are his candid sentiments, is it true that he did in September utter them, and in October issue a proclamation recommending the people officially to go to church, and perform their religious rites on a certain day? Is it true that he signed two separate "Acts" during the last Congress, appropriating sums of the people's money for two sectarian institutions in the city of Washington? Is it true that he was one of the signers for the call of the "God-in-the-Constitutional convention"? [No, we believe not.—Ed.] Is it true that he has portioned out the different Indian tribes to the different religious denominations for sectarian purposes? Is it not true that, because of these and like official acts, the entire sectarian power was exerted to elect him President for a second term in opposition to the true and noble Horace Greeley? And is it not to be feared that, because of these and similar acts, the same power will be exerted to return him for a third term, that it may farther carry out its sectarian schemes? If not, are there other reasons to recommend him to their support? Did he, or did he not, as is charged, during some of the greatest battles, lie beastly intoxicated under a tree? Was he not one of a few who entered into a real estate speculation, and, to carry it out, made an attempt at the San Domingo outrage? When the great Charles Sumner uttered the warning voice, did he not cause him to be dropped from the Chairmanship of the Committee of Foreign Relations, and still further dishonor him by placing Simon Cameron in his stead in the same position? Has he not been guilty of the most glaring nepotism, appointing every one of the least relationship to himself to important official positions? Has he not received on many occasions, while acting President of these United States, presents of small and great value, and from those persons who afterwards were appointed to important official positions? Did he not appoint A. T. Stewart, the dry-goods merchant of New York city, to one of the most important positions in the government, in opposition to the express provisions of the Constitution of the United States? Has he, or has he not, made his administration a mere jobbery to a large extent, from the lowest to the highest offices in the government? Has he not all along outraged the Southern people by appointing and holding in office the most corrupt officials on record, and thereby keeping up a sectional strife and hatred that ought long ago to have been forgotten? Did he not sign an "Act" doubling his salary? Have we ever had another President who would have been guilty of such an official act? God forbid we should ever have another! Has he not, instead of keeping up a careful and faithful watch of the interest of the government, spent his long summer seasons at Long Branch associated with jockeys and fast men? Has his administration not tended towards a centralized and extravagant government? Has he, or has he not, when on his Western trips, at frequent times and places become so numbed by intoxication that his friends had to secrete and take care of him? Has he not, in almost every manner that can be named, dishonored his office and disgraced the American people? Is it true that even now old saloon bills of his in Galena and Missouri are held up and exhibited as curiosities? If these, and a hundred more of his official and private acts, are true, as has been charged, or the half of them, can there be any faith in the man, even though he did utter language that ought to be written in gold, and accepted as the guiding rule of every true lover of freedom of thought, of the press, of religion,—equal rights and exact justice to all men, without regard to color, nationality, or religion? It is because I believe that the charges stated, and many more, are true, that I could not help feeling that undue prominence has been given to General Grant by placing a selection of his almost only speech in the most conspicuous place in THE INDEX. While I believe in giving even the "devil his due," can it be a fact that such noble sentiments come as honest convictions from such a man? Would it not be more reasonable to suppose that they were uttered in a Jesuitical spirit, as a move to dupe the American people into electing him for a third term? Does any doubt that, if he had exerted his powers at the proper time, the Civil Rights Bill, as it came from the hand of Charles Sumner, would have been passed? Yet the colored people were duped to give him their support, when its failure must be traced to him alone. Is it not true that they, as well as the entire nation, were duped to sacrifice their greatest friends, and slaughter, as it were, in cold blood, the greatest lover of humanity the nation ever produced, and place in prominence a man who is not worthy to untie his shoe? As a lover of THE INDEX I speak, and I hope that its editor will receive it in the spirit in which it is written, and not take it as intending to exercise any dictation whatever.

I am, sir, yours very truly,

B. M. SMITH.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 14, 1875.

[Our friendly correspondent may be assured that his article is received in no other spirit than that of fairness and willingness that all shall be heard without favoritism or prejudice. But we believe many, if not most, of the specifications in his long indictment are untrue and unjust; and, while we acknowledge the propriety of closely watching all public officials, we also acknowledge the propriety of forbearing to heap up all the unproved accusations of political and personal enmity as if they were proved crimes. It is at least not unworthy of American citizens to refuse credence to such extravagant stories until conclusive evidence of their truth is adduced; they owe too much to Ulysses S. Grant to lend a credulous ear to his honest or dishonest detractors. Some of these charges are, we regret to say, true; most of them we disbelieve. But be this as it may, is it not the boast of liberals to "welcome truth from whatever quarter it may come"? We have paid no "tribute," whether "merited" or unmerited, that has not been strictly deserved; for the Des Moines speech is not to be surpassed as a statement of true Americanism, if its phraseology is generously interpreted. Possibly the President spoke better than he meant; but we incline to believe not. At any rate, we have not praised his consistency or his motives, but his words, and we cannot honestly unsay a syllable of that praise.—Ed.]

A QUESTION TO MRS. CHENEY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I was quite pleased, in reading the last INDEX, to find an article from the pen of Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Higher Education of Women"; and I write now to ask her opinion, if she will be so kind as to give it, in regard to the now all-important question of the ballot for women.

Although I am extremely anxious for the time when women can be united with men in helping to make the laws under which they live, I feel pretty certain that the policy of giving them the right to vote, until they are prepared for it by higher and less sectarian education would be suicidal to free government; and for one, I am glad that the power lies in State instead of National government to give them this right.

The principal influence and power that woman has ever possessed has been given by the Church (poor as it has been), and she would vote for any amendment to Christianize the Constitution, simply from affectionate reverence for life-long teachings. No opinion is more firmly grounded in my mind than that the Bible has done more to lower man's estimate of woman than anything else in the world; and it is the one weight that will hold her down, until educated above some of the time-honored nonsense therein taught regarding her place and influence.

I firmly believe that woman's power of affection and motherly instincts, united with man's in governmental affairs, will largely promote the general welfare. But, so long as she is the slave of superstition, she can never become a serviceable citizen.

MRS. E. L. SAXON.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20, 1875.

"PROTESTS AND SUITS."

EDITOR INDEX:—

In Mr. E. M. Davis' letter in THE INDEX of Nov. 18, reviewing the position of R. P. H. on the inflation question, the writer takes occasion to notice a remark of mine that the repeal of the Legal Tender Act, after a process of gradual contraction of the currency to the point of its appreciation to the value of gold, is the only feasible and safe means of reaching resumption, and says that the effect of such action would be to ruin the individual and enrich the banks, inasmuch as the inability of the former to pay gold would be followed by protest and suit, but not so in the case of the latter. To which I reply that, if the repeal of the Legal Tender Act carried with it the necessity that only specie should be paid or received for the cancellation of debt, his argument would have force; but, as under the given circumstances nobody wants gold, its purchasing power being no greater than that of paper, and consequently purchasable at par, I can't for the life of me see where the protests and suits are to come from.

Mr. Davis should keep in mind that the circumstances under which I would repeal the law making greenbacks a legal tender include this, that resumption shall then have been practically accomplished; the object to be attained thereafter by repeal being to keep the country on the path of convertibility, by which the constant tendency of the currency would be to self-adjustment in respect to the wants of traffic.

The basis, however, of what I deem the erroneous views of Mr. Davis upon this question is indicated by his definition of inflation. He says: "It is any issue of paper beyond the quantity of gold on hand." If this definition is correct, there can be no such thing as an inflation of a specie currency, or (consequently) of a convertible paper currency, provided there is as much gold "on hand" as paper. Now Mr. Davis will excuse us if, instead of his definition of inflation, we accept that of Adam Smith, John Locke, J. Stuart Mill, Prof. Cairnes, Amasa Walker, and nearly every other generally accepted authority on political economy,—that the inflation of a currency, whether of specie, or paper, or both, is its superabundance for the needs of trade. It is inflation as thus defined that arises during periods of unusual speculation; after which, if the currency be specie or convertible paper, the process of contraction commences by the withdrawal of coin from the currency to be used for other and more profitable purposes; or, if (as in this country now) the currency be of inconvertible paper, its superabundance will continue, and will be shown by the deficiency of its purchasing power.

Mr. Davis says that "the theory that our money must have an intrinsic value is false." Well, possibly "intrinsic" is a little too exact; but the fact that a paper dollar of a Nova Scotia bank will buy as much as $1.15 of our paper money can scarcely fail to give the impression that "intrinsic" serves a good turn in this connection.

Of course, I do not recommend, as a practical measure, under the present circumstances of our financial affairs, the immediate repeal of the Legal Tender Law. I simply wished to show the logical results of it in the few hints I gave of the natural workings of a convertible currency. Contraction will save us from all such "heroic" remedies. Z.

ZEAL WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—You quote an anonymous correspondent as saying, referring to Mr. Moody: "Wouldn't the time be as well spent in imitating his zeal as in finding fault with his theology?"

No doubt Mr. Moody's earnestness is commendable, but it is unfortunate that it takes the direction it does. All that he says in commendation of honest, pure ways to his hearers is to be praised; but his theology and the advice he gives are so incompatible, that it will not do to overlook the theological side of his work. I quote from a recent report of one of his sermons the following story:—

"Mr. Moody closed his sermon with this story: 'Several years ago a young man, the son of worthy parents living on a quiet Illinois farm, left his home to seek a fortune in Chicago. He entered that city a strict moralist, but not a Christian, and a few months later a farmer neighbor visiting the city, saw him reeling drunk through the streets. The old neighbor returned home, but for days his courage failed him when he endeavored to tell the pitiful story to the Christian father. And when he told it, he repented of his act, for the father's face grew aged as he listened. That evening the father and mother sat in their quiet parlor, and, gently as he could, the husband told his grief to his wife. Oh, how sad were those parents then! They sat dumb-founded by their misery, before they thought to roll the burden upon Christ. They prayed all through the night, and when the morning came the mother was blithe and cheerful. She said that God had given to her evidence that her son would be saved. But the father was still sad. A week later that son returned home unexpectedly. He went straight to his mother, confessed his faults, and told her of the miles he had journeyed on purpose to kneel with her in prayer. The little family then gathered around their household altar, and the next time the son went to Chicago he entered the city a Christian, not a mere moralist.'"

Comment is unnecessary, except to suggest that we who are "mere moralists" have a duty to perform; namely, to see that our own lives are so pure that we may not be as stumbling-blocks to those who, groping in the darkness of religious fear and superstition, are just beginning to see the light of reason and science. "A."

SINS AND CHAINS.

UNION, Maine, Nov. 13, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I read the following comparison made by the great revivalistic preacher at the Brooklyn rink: "S'pose that I was hanging by a chain from yonder pipe; and s'pose one of the links of that chain should break; wouldn't I fall just as much as if the whole chain broke? Well, that's the way with a little sin; by the law it condemns a man the same as a big one."

Mr. Moody's comparison makes the chain represent the law, and the breaking of one or more links to represent transgression of the law. The reason why he would fall the same when one link is broken as when more are broken, is because the breaking of one link would set him free from the chain; hence he would not be subject to the chain after one link was broken. To make the cases parallel, the reason why the sinner is condemned the same for a small sin as for a "big one," is because, at the instant he begins to sin, and before he becomes a great sinner, he is condemned, and at the same time set free from the law. In order more clearly to illustrate the idea conveyed by the above comparison, we, too, will "s'pose" a case.

Now "s'pose" Sambo's master shows him a paper of pins, a gold watch, and a hundred dollar bill, and tells him that he has made a law which will punish him by cutting off his ears, if he steals the pins, or the watch, or the money,—the penalty being the same if he steals all of them. In an evil moment, "s'pose" Sambo is tempted, and steals the pins, and has his ears cut off. Would not Sambo see that his master's law could injure him no more? And would he not steal the watch and money also?

Is this the logic of Christianity? Are sinners at liberty to sin against God without receiving any condemnation? Then why talk about punishing sinners, who are already condemned to the utmost, for desecrating the Sabbath and blaspheming God?

Yours truly,

CHAS. A. MILLER.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.

" 13 "	" 25 "	" 8 "
" 26 "	" 51 "	" 6 "
" 52 "	" "	" 5 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at one HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, R. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents; singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address,
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest. Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.50
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 5 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. F. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religious Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede.....	2.00
Romola.....	2.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	2.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	3.50
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of, Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Elements and Principles of Thought on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagshot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1833 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Mental Volition and Works.....	1.40
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASHY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additions to Speeches and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infants and the Infants.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates of Gath.....	1.50
The Trotty Boat.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: The Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.60
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Van's Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip.....	1.50
Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.50
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vol. II. IV., and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.). My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS, IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00: per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48 00: " 16.00.
Four " 52 00: " 13 00.
Five " 55 00: " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.
Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF MONCURE D. CONWAY'S SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00. Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade.....$3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham.....1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd......75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck......75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading.... The story is told in a very graphic style.... Mr. Holyoake... is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX. Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

A NEW INDEX TRACT

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

No Gifts Better Appreciated.

JUST OUT—NEW, FRESH, AND HANDSOME.

Gems of English Song.

A perfect collection of songs, with piano accompaniment, comprising over 75 of the choicest Songs, Ballads, Duets, and Quartets known; selected with great care, and with especial regard to quality and popularity. 232 pages, full music size.

The New York Evening Mail says: "A most extraordinary collection of really fine songs.... One could hardly imagine so many veritable gems could be contained in a single volume."

Price, $2.50 plain; $3 in muslin; $4 full gilt. Of the same form and price, full music size, are

"GEMS OF STRAUSS."

A new edition, comprising over 100 best Strauss Waltzes, etc., etc.

"ORGAN AT HOME."

"MUSICAL TREASURE."

"GEMS OF GERMAN SONG."

"PIANOFORTE GEMS."

"GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG."

"MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES."

Any of the above books sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address F. K. M'f'g Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humankind," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heresies and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vo's., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance. Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1875.

WHOLE No. 312.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday or the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSSES.

MR. MOODY said at Philadelphia that "Satan is at church more regularly than anybody"—which is a very good reason for those who would shun bad company to stay at home.

PROFESSOR SWING is to preach every Sunday in McVicker's Theatre, in Chicago. It is asserted that fifty citizens have each pledged $1000 a year for three years to sustain the movement.

THE PAPERS give discouraging despatches from Philadelphia concerning the Moody and Sankey campaign. Meetings are large and converts few. A great deal of quartz is crushed, but the percentage of gold is trifling. When will the revivalists strike the promised Comstock lode?

THE LATEST report from the Port Jervis, N.Y., revival, given in the Tribune of December 9, states that "probably one-third" of the "six hundred persons converted" consists of "children under fifteen years of age," and that "it is not known that a contributor of the Boston Investigator, or any other atheists or pronounced sceptics have been converted or asked for prayers, as has been reported."

PROFESSOR JEVONS' Money and the Mechanism of Exchange, a new volume just published in the "International Scientific Series," is a treatise which ought to be in the hands of every American voter to-day, when the financial question is so prominent and important. It gives most useful instruction which is comprehensible by any person of ordinary intelligence, and is a refreshing corrective of the wild vagaries about money with which the country is deluged.

IT SEEMS that the people of Arizona, as represented by the local papers, are clamorous for the removal of Chief-Justice Dunne for other reasons than his opposition to the public school system. He is charged by the chairman and two members of the Board of Supervisors with usurpation of unlawful powers and with tyranny; the Mayor and Councilmen of Tucson accuse him of causing "a feeling of insecurity of life, liberty, and property"; public petitions for his removal are circulated over the signatures of many leading citizens, some of them being Catholics. This materially changes the case. We only protested against his removal for simply expressing adverse opinions about the school system.

A WRITER in the Providence Bulletin says: "Shut Moody and Sankey into a room with Francis E. Abbot and John Weiss for a week, and at the end of that time you would find Abbot and Weiss on their knees, reading that excellent little tract called 'What Shall I Do to Be Saved?' with tears streaming down their cheeks; and all because Moody and Sankey are just ignorant enough to believe in something, while Abbot and Weiss are so precious knowing that they are not sure that they know anything." If we were really shut up for a week in a room with Moody and Sankey, we should doubtless (notwithstanding the consolation of Mr. Weiss' companionship in misery) shed a whole Mississippi River of tears; but it would be solely because we could not get out.

At a meeting of Methodists in this city on Sunday, December 5, Professor Williams Wells, of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., referred to the dangerous progress now making by the Catholics among the Southern freedmen, and indorsed ex-Speaker Blaine's proposed Constitutional Amendment prohibiting sectarian schools. But what Protestants usually mean by "sectarian" is clearly shown in the subsequent remarks of Bishop Wiley, who, approving Professor Wells' speech, declared that "there are three things we must not give up: first, the Christian Sabbath; second, the common schools with the Bible in them; and, third, the disunion of Church and State." The first two of these things cannot be permanently retained except through the passage of the Christian Amendment; and that is the measure towards the support of which the Evangelical party are steadily drifting. But the "third thing" is incompatible with the "first and second thing." What crying need of Liberal Leagues to make this plain, at this momentous hour!

THIS SENTENCE on the Catholic question, contained in Mr. Wasson's very remarkable leading essay of this week, is closely packed with practical wisdom: "For excited alarm there seems to be no occasion. On the other hand, it is not, perhaps, the fittest of all seasons for sanguine unconcern. There are three classes of men: those who see an approaching evil before its arrival, and preclude it; those who see it after its arrival, and cure it; and those who never see, but only feel when they are crushed by it: fore-seers, after-seers, and not-seers, they might be named. The first learn to prevent suffering, the second learn from suffering, and the last suffer without learning. The evil which approaches us is still in a state to be prevented; and prevention is better than cure." If these truths were fully comprehended and applied, the Liberal League movement would become the majestic affirmation by the whole American people that the disguised demon of CHURCH EDUCATION shall not hold an inch of standing-room on the soil of this republic, but that the State in America shall guarantee the SECULAR EDUCATION AND SECULAR RIGHTS OF ALL. There you have the "approaching evil" and the sole preventive of it.

REV. MR. TALMAGE, the popular preacher of Brooklyn, displays the manners of a circus clown in the pulpit, as the subjoined extract from a late sermon of his shows; but he only speaks out with coarseness and bluster the same fixed purpose touching the Bible in public schools which is uttered with daily increasing emphasis by nearly all Evangelical bodies: "Put the Bible out of the public schools! By the strength of the eternal God, it shall never be done! The ignorant, besotted, base politicians would like to kick it out. O you low politicians of New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and Philadelphia, you are a pretty set! I see some of you here this morning. You came in, perhaps, to awe me down. I know you by your bloodshot eye and lecherous lip. What do you care for God and the Bible? It is votes that you want. But there are enough of New Englanders, Scotchmen, Long Islanders, and Englishmen, who have read the story of the wreck of the Spanish Armada, to stand by the ballot-box and hurl the outrageous crew into political destruction, and thence on down, down to where all liars, thieves, whoremongers, and swindling canal contractors shall have their eternity with Satan and Bill Tweed, if they can catch him." No advocate of secular schools, we trust, is capable of stooping to such billingsgate as this.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, Sec. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BEBLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

State and Church in America.

BY DAVID A. WASSON.

In the instructive work of Dr. Colther upon The State and the Catholic Church in the Kingdom of Würtemberg, two diverse and competing systems of relation between State and Church are recognized as alike legitimate; the one of them prevailing in Europe, the other represented by the United States of America. As commonly described, the difference between these is that, in the former case, State and Church are united; in the latter, separated; but the distinction is wider. According to the European plan, the Church, like the State, is in the largest and strictest sense a public institution, and its support, therefore, obligatory; by the system of America, the State alone has this rank, while the Church is known to it and the nation only as a private and voluntary association. It is not thereby degraded, for the home, the household, is also private and voluntary. Nor is the State godless because its citizens decline to enact religion. Love also is not legally enacted, but the felicities and sanctities of human affection are not therefore excluded from the life of the nation.

For his own country, Dr. Colther, who is a minister of State in Würtemberg, sustains the European system, thinking that it could not there be exchanged for another either profitably or safely. So many threads of connection, in the long course of centuries, have there been spun between the civil and the ecclesiastical organizations, and so much in the whole culture and economy of the people has come to depend upon them—including the very subsistence of considerable numbers,—that, as he holds, the two could not now be torn apart without an extensive disturbance, if not destruction, of interests both social and individual. Nevertheless he constantly places the American system beside it, as worthy of equal consideration. Not by a word is it indicated which of these he regards as abstractly the better; while something in the tone seems to suggest that he might even prefer the American, did circumstances permit him to choose. And this kind of liberality, this allowing for social and historical conditions, and holding that of two systems each may be best in its place, is characteristic of German culture.

The European system sprang from no theory, but grew from the circumstances, under which the Christian religion arose and was propagated. The first Christians lived a life apart. In this world, they were indeed not of it. The engaging interests of others, small or large, private or public, the noblest as the narrowest, were to them alike little, unnecessary, insignificant. The civil and political life, the public economy, development of laws, fortunes of States, concerned them not. All that we comprise under the term civilization was to them but a tent pitched for the night; the day was at hand, and they watched for its coming. The world around them repaid their indifference to it with scorn, aversion, persecution. As their hopes drew them, so its detestation repelled them toward one another and away from all else. Time passed; their numbers grew, they were spread through many lands; but they were still one community, citizens of a commonwealth, subjects of a kingdom, that the world knew not. To the laws of the land they submitted, but these were not their laws; in all that peculiarly concerned them, all they really had at heart, they governed themselves. Centuries passed in this way; a fixed order grew up among them,—relations of authority and obedience, a system of government; they had their own rulers, their own tribunals, managed their own affairs, determined upon their own differences, and, apart from the whole system of civil obligations, legislated, judged, administered, established the organs, and performed the functions of a corporate community. When this organization was complete,—when three centuries had given it time not only to form, but to be confirmed by custom and tradition,—when, therefore, the Christian community was already a State without the name, grounded upon principles and governed by methods peculiar to itself,—suddenly, at a bound, it leaped to the head of the Roman Empire, to wed itself with imperial rule; and two great systems of public administration, two ruling institutions, the one called Church and the other Empire, were united. They were nearly of the same age; each was rarely developed and complete in its way; neither could disappear before the other. And so the peculiar, dual system of Christian Europe had its origin. Subsequently Christianity was extended by methods which reflected this double character. Constantine had been converted at the head of his army, by a sign that promised him victory in battle. Christianity acknowledged the sign; still, on one side, the gospel of the Prince of Peace, it was propagated by conquest, and maintained in arms; salvation and civil rule were intermixed; the monk and the military leader were parts of the same whole. The Europe of to-day is the child of fifteen centuries, during which this system wrought and made history.

Like the European, the American system grew from circumstances and conditions. This country was peopled by a great variety of sects,—Puritan, Episcopalian, Quaker, Dutch Reformed, Scotch-Irish Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, etc., etc. In some of the colonies there was a clear predominance of a particular denomination; in others the same diversity as in the country taken altogether. When, now, the colonies united in resistance to Great Britain, it was of the last importance that these differences should not be touched upon. The two largest and leading colonies, Massachusetts and Virginia, represented the two parties, Puritan and Episcopalian, Roundhead and Cavalier, between whom in the preceding century England had been all a fiercely contested field of battle. In Maryland and Virginia only the Potomac separated the Church of England and the Church of Rome. North and South, there were Scotch-Irish communities, with the battle of the Boyne in remembrance, and all they had suffered and achieved as the pioneers of Protestantism in a wilderness, as they would say, of Roman bigotry. The country was seamed with lines drawn between slumbering animosities. To have awakened these had been fatal. Considerate men were aware of the danger, and careful to avoid it.

An instance will illustrate their anxious solicitude. In 1775, Great Britain, in the "Quebec Bill," made a marked effort to propitiate the favor of the Canadian Catholics. Excited by this circumstance, the provincial Congress of New York, in soon after stating the terms upon which they would be reconciled with the mother country, introduced an article, in which Protestantism raised its head with somewhat of a menacing air towards the Roman Church. The delegates of New York in the Continental Congress, John Jay at the head of them, were no sooner apprised of this, than they saw the immense mischief to which it might lead; and Mr. Jay wrote a letter, signed by the whole delegation, in earnest and impressive dissuasion from every such indiscretion. Having declared matters of theology to be "points about which man will forever differ," and having censured the introduction of them at that crisis as "highly imprudent," the remonstrants added: "We are the more confirmed in these sentiments from the circumstance that both this and the former Congress have cautiously avoided the least hint on subjects of this kind, all the members concurring in a design of burying all disputes on ecclesiastical points, which for ages had no other tendency than that of banishing peace and charity from the world." In that policy of premeditated silence and reserve, with which the dearest hopes of a people stood then connected, the American system began to be. There was somewhat more important than theological opinion. It was civil freedom. The very act of setting civil freedom on that eminence, with ecclesiasticism buried out of sight beneath it, was itself a revolution, and the emergence of the distinctively American spirit.

When the Federal Convention met in 1787, there was at least equal reason for a continuance of the same course. The nation was going to wreck; only the institution of a vigorous national government could save it. But there were enormous difficulties to be overcome. The ill-conceived confederation had accustomed the States to a notion of their absolute sovereignty as separate States; it was but too doubtful whether they would yield their pretensions to a proper sovereignty of the nation. The want of government had made an aversion to it, and a vast affection had grown up for that sort of liberty which consists in release from public duty and civil restraint; there was too little ground for hope that the people would subdue that wild liberty to the higher claims of public obligation. Some of Washington's friends, and those most favorable to national construction, sought earnestly to dissuade him from taking part in the enterprise, lest he should compromise at once his reputation and his influence with the people by throwing them into a scale where they were so likely to be weighed down. Under these circumstances, it would have been extreme folly to make gratuitous difficulty by arousing ecclesiastical jealousies. Double folly, since it would have been done to no purpose. Civil union was doubtful; ecclesiastical union impossible. Again, therefore, the burying of disputes and differences upon such matters, and the raising of civil welfare to a supreme height above them, was dictated by prudence, by patriotism, by necessity.

But on this occasion there was more than prudent reserve. The policy of 1775 had ripened into the principle of 1787. This mental advance appeared in that article of the Constitution, the clear indication of a national attitude, new in Christendom, which prohibited forever religious tests—more properly theological or ecclesiastical tests—for civil office. That decisive step was due primarily to the Federalist, Alexander Hamilton. Hamilton's attention had been expressly called to the subject by recent action in his own State of New York. In the preceding year, a motion had been made by the party of the governor, George Clinton, afterwards candidate for the Vice-Presidency on the ticket with Jefferson, to impose restrictions upon the franchises of Catholics. Every citizen, as a condition to suffrage, should abjure all allegiance to any foreign sovereign or potentate, ecclesiastical as well as civil. It appears that by the Constitution of New York this was already required of fresh immigrants; and I, for my part, see no reason why it should not still be required. But the proposition was to extend that provision of the Constitution by statute, so that it should include citizens born in the land, and already possessed of the franchise. This project accorded neither with Hamilton's liberal and magnanimous nature, nor with his notions of political equity. Numbers of those against whom it was levelled had taken an honorable and patriotic part in the struggle of their country; their action, he said, had amply shown that they were loyal citizens; it was unhandsome, no less than unnecessary, to call them up and make them swear to be what they already openly were; the very act, needless on political grounds, was calculated to create misgivings in their minds, as if they were to be entrapped into an abjuration of their faith. His resistance was successful; the motion failed.

Thus forewarned, he was forearmed upon entering the Federal Convention. In that assembly four plans of government were brought forward: that of the Virginia delegation, presented by Edmund Randolph; that of Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina; the State-rights or anti-national plan, introduced by Mr. Patterson, of New Jersey, and concurred in by the major delegation of four States; and, lastly, that of Mr. Hamilton. Of the three former, one only contained an allusion to the matter of religion. Mr. Pinckney's draft had the clause: "The Legislature of the United States shall pass no law on the subject of religion." Hamilton's comprised this broader and more explicit provision: "Nor shall any religious sect or denomination, or any religious test for office or place, be ever established by law." The matter was not immediately attended to; but towards the close of the proceedings, when the clause requiring of officials an oath to support the Constitution was under consideration, Mr. Pinckney, adopting a portion of what Hamilton had proposed, moved to add: "No religious test shall ever be annexed to an oath of office under the authority of the United States." The clause, nevertheless, was reported without this addition; but, upon renewal of his motion, it was adopted, and being sent to the committee of style and arrangement, was cast by Governor Morris into its present form: "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." In the first amendment to the Constitution this provision was so supplemented as to comprise the whole of what Hamilton had proposed.

Two points are here to be observed: First, these clauses went quite beyond all that was dictated by immediate policy. The actual differences in the convention were probably all comprised within the limits of the various Christian confessions. With trifling exceptions, the same was true of the country. Immediate policy demanded, therefore, no more than the prohibition of sectarian tests within the bounds of Christian dogma. The way was led more boldly. Civil duty was set to stand on its own feet, and be a religion in itself; and theology was once for all remitted to the liberties and the limits of private opinion.

Secondly, Hamilton's clause was particularly designed, so far as it had a particular object, to sustain the just liberties and just civil equality of Catholics. They alone were specifically threatened; they alone especially needed protection, and the Constitution gave it them. The fact may now be commended to their attention.

This liberality gave umbrage to a portion of the anti-federalists, and was one ground of agitation against the system of government proposed. And it is worthy of remark that the clerical profession, in New England especially, appeared, not as the opponents, but as the most express and conspicuous advocates of civil emancipation from theological bonds. Now, if there was one class or portion of American citizens whom Thomas Jefferson more detested than he did the people of New England generally, it was the ministers of New England; and many have derived from him an impression that they were at that time bigots of the narrowest and most acrid type. This notion is not sustained by all the facts, if by any. In the convention of Massachusetts, assembled to vote upon the adoption of the Constitution, there were some twenty ministers.* Several of them spoke earnestly for the exclusion of religious tests; not one against it. Denunciation or censure of the article came from laymen; its defence was conducted almost exclusively by members of the clergy. Moreover, its defence was based by them upon grounds of principle, not of policy. Rev. Mr. Backus grounded his support of it upon religious principles distinctively. "Nothing is more evident," said he, "both in reason and the Holy Scriptures, than that religion is ever a matter between God and individuals, and therefore no man or men can impose a religious test without invading the essential prerogatives of our Lord Jesus Christ." He also opposed it as tyrannical, adding, "And let the history of all nations from Constantine's day to this be considered, and it will appear that the imposing of religious tests hath been the greatest engine of tyranny in the world." Rev. Mr. Shute, having remarked that a test would serve only to exclude honest men, while admitting those of an easy conscience, proceeded to say: "Far from limiting my charity and confidence to men of my own denomination in religion, I suppose and believe that there are worthy characters among men of every denomination, among the Quakers, the Baptists, the Church of England, the Papists, and even among those who have no other guide to virtue and heaven than the dictates of natural religion."

* Number so stated by Rufus King.

The Constitution was adopted by a majority of only nineteen, which was very nearly the number of ministers present; it was their almost unbroken front which decided the day. Had the Constitution, again, been rejected by Massachusetts, it would certainly have been so by New Hampshire, Virginia, and New York, and so have failed of acceptance by the nation. It may therefore fairly be said that the fate of the Constitution depended upon the liberality of the clerical delegates in the convention of Massachusetts.

We have seen what was done; was it done rightly? Constitutions may err; has ours good reason behind it? One large reason for the feature of ours here considered was given by the Rev. Mr. Shute, whose words have just been cited. Here and now, character does not depend upon creed. Shall there be tests of civil competence, that are not tests of civil virtue? There are worthy characters—and unworthy ones—in and out of all denominations. That is the plain fact at present, and every veracious eye must see it. Not only character, but culture also has acquired an independent standing; neither the qualities of a good citizen nor the qualifications of a capable one depend upon the force of any theological dogma or the function of any church. I do not say that such was the case always, or is the case everywhere. Time was that dogmatic Christianity was civilization; that at its border there were civil order and civil virtue on the one side, barbarism and anarchy on the other; that no man was a good citizen who was not in the dogmatic sense a good Christian. Time was, again, that the State was not of itself equal to its own function. It could not, for example, educate the people; letters were in the keeping of the Church; it alone knew enough to teach, and the school belonged to it because the ability to instruct belonged to it. That time is past; civil virtue stands with no theological prop; the State can perform its functions by its own organs. Such is now the case in Europe no less than here; but there the old system has so wrought itself into the social structure that it is to be eliminated by slow modification, if at all. I agree with Dr. Colther in thinking that it could not be suddenly abolished without injury to individuals, detriment to the social life, and hazard to the national welfare. I agree, too, with the eminent historian, Heinrich von Sybel, and with the wisest liberals of Germany, that it can never be safely abandoned in face of the ultramontane Church, and in severe conflict with its power. Here, however, we have neither the mental conditions and social necessities to which that system was originally due and adapted, nor that implication of it with the existing social structure which would make its immediate abandonment both difficult and dangerous. To have founded the State here, therefore, on the assumption that theological tests are tests of civil worth, would have been to found it dishonestly,—neither upon practical necessity nor theoretical truth.

Again, there was a time when honest belief could be made by force of arms and laws. Mohammedanism was preached by the scimitar; where is there an intenser dogmatic faith than in Islam? Half Europe was converted to Christianity by the sword; and the dogmatic fanaticism with which Germany is now contending is the child of that conversion. I do not say all that was wrong. It was rude; but rude methods befit rude times. A man were a fool to use a stone hatchet when he could have steel; but there was no folly in the use of stone tools before steel was known. It was the style of the eighteenth century to judge history by a formula; the nineteenth is learning to appreciate it as a growth. All that is right for the child is not right for the man; all that is innocent in ignorance is not so in the light of knowledge. Men must get on as they can; and if they really get on, it is enough. We must say of institutions and methods in history, as of individuals, "By their fruits ye shall know them." That which has given us figs was not a thistle; the methods in history whose ultimate fruit was a higher civilization were not in their day false methods. But we live in our own time, not in another. And a characteristic of our time is intellectual belief. Belief thinks, and has lost the power to be wholly sincere but by its harmony with thought. We must make room for the intellect, for thought, for free conviction, for the questioning mind; and become hypocrites by failure to do so. The rude sincerity of combat and compulsion was respectable in its way; it must now find a place for, if not give place to, the fine sincerity of science. The American system is adjusted to this stage of civilization. It is a way of permitting men to be honest under the existing mental conditions. I admit it as possible that the civilization which has brought us to it may one day bear us beyond it. There may one day be such a separation of religion from traditional dogma, and such a great consent and union of sentiment—so much of which all men will feel sure,—that a cultus of the American people will establish itself, and the week-day school and Sunday culture become parts of one whole. That at present is a dream; we are here, and our system is simply an honest one under the conditions now existing.

But now an important circumstance is to be considered. This system has been called the American one; but its being embraced in the national Constitution established it only so far as concerns the functions of the national government. Congress could not establish a Church, or prescribe religious tests; but that fact imposed no restriction upon the several States; they might, without violation of any Constitutional obligation, found churches, enact a theology, tax all citizens for the support of sectarian schools, establish religious tests, etc. They might do so, and plausibly evade the charge of inconsistency. If they were told that such action contradicted that of the Federal Convention, the answer might be: "We did not mean there to limit the powers of the people, but only to limit those of the general government,—meant only that the people of the several States should act their pleasure upon such matters." And in fact the national system has not been clearly and systematically followed by the several States. In the "Declaration of Rights" prefixed to the new Constitution of Pennsylvania, ratified Dec. 16, 1873, appears this section (Sect. 4): "No person who acknowledges the being of a God and a future state of rewards and punishments shall, on account of his religious sentiments, be disqualified to hold any office or place of trust or profit under this Commonwealth." Eighty-six years after the formation of the Federal Constitution, an old-school Universalist is disqualified for office by the Constitution of Pennsylvania. Other States have gone notably farther in what may be called the peculiarly American direction, and perhaps have done so without falling below Pennsylvania in the general character of their politics. But in the total exemption of church property from taxation, in legislative appropriations for the support of sectarian institutions, in certain features of the common schools—in a variety of ways,—relics of the European system remain. Everywhere the American system has been so far followed that a direction is unequivocally indicated; nowhere is European tradition quite abandoned.

Moreover, we have no pledge for the continuance in this direction, no guarantee against a complete reversal of it, save the opinion and sentiment of the greater number at the moment. The Democratic theory of an unlimited power in the people exposes us to all chances, and stops our mouths, whatever may come. In the Massachusetts Bill of Rights it is said: "The people of this Commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State; and do, and forever hereafter shall, enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not, or may not hereafter be, by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled." The rightful power of the people collectively is thus expressly announced as without limit. Therefore they are authorized to tax for sectarian purposes, if they will; to set up sectarian schools, if they will; to establish the Baptist Church, the Roman Church, any church, if they will. Or at will they may forbid these acts by articles of their Constitution; but the prohibition rests in principle upon their will only, and is subject to any future change of it. In the various declarations of rights one looks vainly for an indication of those rights and powers which are not possessed by the collective people,—for ethical or rational limitations of popular sovereignty. That is a serious omission. Though no individualist, I hold that there are rights of individuals which antecede political constitutions, and are not subject to the collective will; that government is instituted for specific purposes, not embracing all human interests whatsoever, but only a part of them; that the functions of the State being limited, the rightful sovereignty of the people is limited in the same degree; and that a definite limitation of popular sovereignty, an express restriction of it to declared objects, is not only a desideratum of republican theory, but a needed safeguard of republican institutions. It is indeed a fundamental distinction between democracy and republicanism, that the former sets out with the assertion of an unconditional and unlimited power in the people, and then takes the hazard of its exercise at discretion; while republicanism begins with the recognition of ends that ought to be attained, of public duties that ought to be performed, and infers thence powers at once adequate, and restrained to the discharge of such specific duty. The brief and noble preamble to the Constitution of the United States is conceived wholly in the republican spirit; but it stands almost or quite alone. Popular sovereignty is affirmed as unconditioned and absolute; and thus the door is wide open for any future majority.

Such is the present situation; a system clearly indicated, but compromised by inconsistency; a political theory, which deprives it, even ideally, of any other support than the immediate will of the major number.

Having thus glanced at the origin of the American system and at its present somewhat compromised situation, we have to take into account a circumstance which much concerns it: by six millions of American citizens, that is, by the adherents of the Roman Church, it is not approved nor accepted. By them, on the contrary—in whose favor more particularly the system was established,—it is repugnant as godless, infidel, damnable. They are bound by their sense of duty to break in upon it, if possible; and the powerful discipline of their Church will hold them to their notion of duty. A small minority in the nation at large, they are by no means an inconsiderable minority in several of the States. Our federal system permits their accumulation at special points to be there of decisive consequence; our party rivalries often enable a compact and determined minority to impose its will upon the greater number; and our political theories, in their present imperfect state, take away even ideal restraints from such power as they may anywhere acquire.

It is not said that every one of these six millions has a distinct individual purpose to invade and change our system. Some Catholics will disown any such design, and declare that it is falsely imputed to them; and some, it is not to be doubted, can do so honestly. It does not signify; they are under orders, and at last must either obey orders, or brave consequences which few among them are prepared to defy. There should be no illusion on this head; the question is not one of individual opinion or purpose. Senator Kernan takes ground for free schools; and he, I am told, is an honorable man, incapable of duplicity. What of it? He is a Catholic, but he is only a lay Catholic, only a private in the ranks, with no more authority to speak for the Church than is possessed by the President of the Free Religious Association. So far from having authority, he has not even a vote in it. Influence he has, of course; franchise he has none. Instead of being qualified to speak for the Church, he is a rebel, if, in any matter which concerns its principles, he undertake to speak for and pledge himself. Meantime his influence affects only the immediate policy of the Church, only its local and temporary policy, not its principles of action, nor their ultimate development. The authorities of the Church, however, are commonly not unwilling that pacifying and reassuring declarations should be made by unofficial voices, since those professions may serve useful purposes for the occasion, while in the end they bind nobody, not even the individual who puts them forth; for he may be depended upon to take refuge at last in his irresponsibility, and march at the word of command. What the official Church believes, intends, and will do as opportunity may offer, is not to be learned from such irresponsible utterances, but from its statements officially made, and its action officially taken.

It will serve toward a right understanding of the situation to put into explicit form the doctrine of this Church concerning its own competence and relation to civil power. Whether there is danger from it or none at all, whether it is likely to be here brought out or to be kept back without even an attempt to give it effect, let us fairly see, if only as matter of curiosity, what it is,—what it is, as stated without a shade of partisan exaggeration.

The doctrine, then, runs as follows:—

1. There is but one veritable Church, the Roman Catholic.
2. The Church, like the State, is an institution of sovereign power; it has a function to govern.
3. The sovereignty of the Church is limited to the interests of religion; that is, to those of the Roman Catholic religion.
4. The Church, alone and sovereignly, determines what concerns the interests of religion; it measures the extent of its own jurisdiction. When its province is occupied, the State has what is left.
5. The empire of religion includes education; the school belongs to the Church exclusively.
6. There is no right of religious liberty, nor right of any State to establish it.
7. The head of the Church is authorized to abrogate any Constitution, annul any law, which enters the domain assumed by the Church, and conflicts with its sovereignty.

This is by no means an exhaustive statement, but it indicates the general character of those pretensions to which the Roman Church, in America as elsewhere, is committed. It is certainly not overstrained by a word or syllable. I am persuaded that no Catholic ecclesiastic in the country would publicly disavow any one of these propositions, nor any part of any one.

The limitation of ecclesiastical sovereignty to the interests of [Roman] religion is an essential part of this doctrine. To omit or in any degree to disguise that point would betray a want of candor. On the other hand, it would betray a want of sense not to ascertain precisely what the limitation means, and what it is worth. Now, the important circumstance has already been noted that the Church alone is to determine how much is comprised under that head. The State has then no voice; there is no neutral court to decide where the two differ; the Church has but to say, and take. Being, however, a divine and infallible institution, it will never mistake; we may rely upon it not to claim more than belongs to it; we have but to repose trust in its infallibility, and be at ease. And it is a happy circumstance that we have so certain a guarantee against trespass or excess on its part. For the interests of the Church as an institution of government are the interests of religion. Therefore the above limitation means: the Church is sovereign only in so far as it is interested to be sovereign; it claims no power that it has no use for; the authority which it has no interest to desire it will not assume. That resembles the moderation of a man who should say: I shall never take your land, your house, your goods, so long as they are of no value to me; they are yours until I have an interest to make them mine!

But I imagine some one speaking on this wise: "Oh, that was, to be sure, really and practically, the doctrine of the Church some centuries ago; but it is now only formal doctrine, which it is Orthodox to hold, and which therefore the priest cannot in terms deny; but it is not now acted on, nor to be acted on; it is like an antiquated keepsake, the handkerchief-pin of one's great-grandmother, suppose, that is carefully kept in a drawer, and not to be parted with, but which is never worn. The Calvinists of our day hold the doctrine of total depravity, as the Puritans did; but they do not apply it in politics as the Puritans did, nor dream of doing so. We are not so concerned ourselves about such conceits, obsolete in everything but form, and dead in effect as last year's grass. To expect a practical revival of them were as sensible as to anticipate with terror a coming insurrection of Anabaptists and Fifth Monarchy Men." Such things have been said, and one can talk smartly in that way. But it is mistaken talk, however smart. Probably, if one portion of those pretensions were selected as being now more than another extant only in terms, while extinct in use, it would be that portion comprised in the last two propositions, concerning religious liberty and the Pope's authority to abrogate constitutions and laws. Whether this is yet living doctrine in the Church is a question amply answered by two recent events. Seven years ago, in June, 1868, Pius IX. issued an allocation in which he solemnly pronounced the new Constitution of Austria null and void forever, and forbade Catholics to obey or respect it. The reason was that the Constitution guaranteed religious liberty, or the civil equality of confessions. On the 5th of February last, that extraordinary exercise, or at least assumption, of power was repeated. The Pope sent forth an encyclical letter wherein, referring to a body of Prussian laws, he declared "quite openly to all whom it may concern, and the whole Catholic world, that those laws are void, since they contradict utterly the divine order of the Church." The power of the Church is abated; the divine Providence, for mysterious ends, has permitted it to suffer loss and feel affliction. Its head is a "martyr,"—reduced to the residence and the revenues of a prince, with the protection of the laws, and the whole world to go and come in unharmed and at pleasure! But the Church is not so deserted of heaven as to have become false to itself. Its doctrine, its claims remain unchanged, and are sustained by the priesthood of Boston no less than by that of Naples, Cork, or Madrid.

"A fig for its pretensions!" some one may say, however; "they may be pressed, and of practical moment, in Europe; they are not pressed, nor likely to be so, in America." True, or nearly so; in anything approaching their full extent, they neither are, nor in any proximate future, if ever, are likely to be, brought to the front in America. For the Church has its policy as well as its principles; and to that, as disclosed in our country, let us turn.

Until quite recently, the policy of Rome in the United States was one of studied reserve. It was doing well, on the whole; its progress here was the boast of ultramontaniam abroad; well enough should be let alone. Accordingly, it scarcely ventured farther than to obtain subsidies in exchange for votes,—and that, probably, by tacit understanding rather than explicit contract. With or without express forms of agreement, however, the exchange took place. In New York city, especially, it was an important business; and those who would know to what lengths it was carried should read a column of figures published in the New York Times, and reprinted in Mr. Abbot's INDEX for Nov. 11. And I am sorry to say that, in process of this traffic, the Church condescended to profit by the foulest municipal administration known in modern times. The deeper the dirt, the more money Rome found in it. The worst years, as the figures show, for the city, and for the public morals, were the most gainful years for the Church. The more was stolen by the official unholy, the more was stored by the holy official. The "interests of religion" showed that they were behind no others in the ability to separate themselves from the interests of morals, and to endure disreputable company for a consideration. It may be that the priestly gift-takers did not know—it may be that they had no compelling occasion to suspect—the manner in which the money was got; but, on looking back, they must now see that Holy Church appears in an unhappy likeness to the receiver of stolen goods. They must see also that their own loyal subjects were the banded supporters of municipal corruption; and that these, if innocent, were more ignorant—if not ignorant, were more reckless—of morals than could be for the credit of any church.

And just at this point of doubt between ignorance and immorality, its policy in America has obtained a new development. It has come forward, or is obviously coming forward, to demand a division of the school fund; that is, an appropriation of public taxes to the maintenance of schools which shall be, before all else, seminaries of Roman doctrine.

That, if effected, were an innovation indeed! It would make the Roman Catholic a preferred Church in America—and in a marked degree preferred,—with extensive privileges denied to every other. It would break up the broad unity of American citizenship; and just when, by the abolition of slavery, we had ended one ruinous determination of its parts to opposite poles, would make another. It would qualify the priesthood to saturate lay Catholicism with their own notion of the antecedence of ecclesiastical to civil obligations, and to breed in the rising generation an ultramontaniam as fanatical and indifferent to civil welfare as that which now besieges the government of Bavaria. It would expunge precisely that which is most distinctive of American civilization and most honorable to it,—an offset to the many shames we have to endure. America has her own catholicity, a civil one; it were here destroyed, and a civil sectarianism established. In short, this change were the beginning of a revolution far more radical than a change from the republican to the monarchical form in government.

Rome has many advantages here. We have never asserted that jus circa sacra, that right of the State so to regulate the external relations of the Church as to make them consonant with the common welfare which belongs to the ancient civil traditions of Europe. We have never sustained the recursus ab abusu, or right of any Catholic, if oppressed by his ecclesiastical superiors, to apply to the State for protection or redress, and of the latter to afford it. That absorption of church property and power into the hands of the superior clergy, for which ultramontaniam struggles elsewhere, is here secured without struggle. We have abandoned many precautions against the power and ambition of that system which European statesmen, Catholic as well as Protestant, have deemed indispensable. If Rome, retaining these advantages, could dip its hand into the public purse, and at the expense of the public set up in the New World a school system which the Old World has outgrown, it might fairly see in this land its most promising future. But that grace it will scarcely obtain. American civil catholicity has not yet yielded to Roman Catholicism; and I do not expect it to yield.

Nevertheless there is reason to think that the pressure at this point has been deliberately determined upon, and that it will not be soon discontinued. For to the Roman priest our schools are "godless"; he says so, and it is in his mouth no idle epithet. What they afford, he does not greatly value; what they want, is to him of infinite consequence. Education of the people, in our sense of the word, is nowhere now, if it has ever been, a serious object with the Church. In the Kingdom of Naples, when the schools were wholly under its direction, and when indeed priestly influence was in all departments of the public administration supreme, it was found that, out of three thousand communities, eleven hundred had no school whatever, while nine hundred of the actual teachers were themselves unable to read and write! In Prussia the Catholics are one-third of the entire population; the school attendance from that third is a little more than one-sixth of the whole. Scarcely in any darkest corner of Europe was popular education more neglected than in the former States of the Church, under the immediate rule of the Pope. That indifference does not spring from a conscious preference of darkness to light; but, as the priest would say, from preference of a divine to a profane light, of the heavenly sun to a mere earthly candle. His theory of existence must make him indifferent to secular education. Upon a tombstone in the churchyard of the Benedictine Abbey in Engelbergthal, Switzerland, is this inscription: "Life is the dream, from which death is the awaking." There, I said on reading it, the Church speaks the inmost secret of its faith; and the business of these devotees is, as it were, to pinch themselves, and keep themselves at least partially awake even here. This world is nothing, the other world all; real existence begins where the present shadow-existence ends. Now, secular education is that which serves for the brief continuance of the dream,—brief, and but a dream while it lasts! Even when it is duly subordinated, the priest must value it slightly; but when it is set up as real education, then it is a lie, and the devil Head Master. And the more importance is then assigned it, the more infidel and odious it becomes. With a school system such as ours the Church, therefore, can never be reconciled.

Again, the fact that a partial demonstration against our system has already been made indicates a settled policy. In the Church there are no individual and independent sallies; all is done upon system and by authority. No priest prints a book but by approbation of his bishop; no movement is attempted, in any matter which concerns the Church, but in pursuance of a design officially determined upon. Perhaps, and as I think, there will be no immediate charge along the whole line; but where such discipline prevails, the marching out of a battalion to ascertain what opposition will be made, shows that the long truce has come to an end, and the campaign begun. How it will be conducted, whether boldly, or by lulling suspicion and lying in wait, remains to be seen; that there has been a council of war, and a conclusion in favor of active operations in some sort, may be inferred with a degree of confidence.

Finally, there are grave reasons for such a movement at the earliest moment when it can be made with any fair hope of success. Rome has in this case a danger to shun as well as an advantage to seek. The unsectarian school is no adversary, but is more adverse to its spirit than any express adversary could be. There the children of the Church meet and mingle with those of other confessions; the lines are crossed, and intimacies formed irrespective of them. This circumstance, however, though to be regretted, is by no means of the first importance. The more important one is that a knowledge of arithmetic, geography, grammar, history, is communicated independently of the Church and its dogma. Mere profane knowledge becomes an object in itself; and the emulation of the school, if not the exhortation of the teacher, makes the pupils warm about it. That habitual association of culture with creed, or rather habitual subordination of culture to creed, which the Church is so deeply concerned to maintain, is broken up, and a mode of feeling induced that it is afterwards difficult to subdue. Now, the Roman system and spirit is in modern times a wholly separate and special one; there is a world of culture outside it. At the same time, it is rigorously exclusive; with all that world of culture, which it does not comprehend, it is at war. And with nothing else is it at war so irreconcilably as with the unsectarian spirit. Protestantism it dislikes and condemns; a dissection civilization it abhors. It can bear to be assailed; but to be ignored, to be absent and not missed—that is death to it. In the free schools of America it is absent and not missed. There is enough else to think of in that place. Holy Church should be all in all to her children; there her children forget her in preoccupation with the multiplication table. Worse, they discover that the multiplication table is somewhat in and of itself; that the product of twelve times twelve depends not at all upon His Holiness the Pope, and could maintain itself against all popes and holinesses whatsoever. Fatal discovery! For, twelve times twelve without the priest are in their final outcome—what?—are knowledge, culture, interest, morals, life independent of ecclesiastical pretension, of ecclesiastical prescription and proscription.

When the priest reappears, he is still respected as a priest, most likely; but he is not the same as before, nevertheless. He no longer fills up the entire view, no longer represents the entire universe of fact and truth. One sees him, an important, or even venerable, figure; but one also sees around him; it may be that what he is not seems as considerable as what he is; it may even, did one dare trust his eyes, seem larger!

You go back, after many years, to the village in which you were born; and, behold, it is but a village! Once the houses were so magnificent, the streets so broad, the stores so spacious and splendid, the public buildings so imposing! But you have since seen the world, and you return to find the village again, but never again to find the illusion that magnified and made it great. That world of knowledge and culture, to which the free school opens the door, instructs the eye, and by instructing takes from it the power to see the priest in the fullness of that dimension which made him the symbol of universal truth. The graduated pupil does not become a Protestant, remains in the Church; but while his faith continues in form, it is different in force. He has in some measure a mind of his own, and his obedience is no longer to be counted on in all cases with security. He should be always and only a Roman Catholic, and he may have become a mere American Catholic. To prevent that sad transformation, the free school must be captured; and therefore Roman policy, in determining upon this, is urged by necessity no less than allured by the love of dominion. Accordingly I am of opinion that there is to be a controversy concerning the school system between American civil catholicity and the Roman sectarianism which calls itself Catholic, and that it would be injudicious to treat those recent events which might seem to indicate this as mere casual occurrences, signifying no determinate policy.

For excited alarm, however, there seems to me no occasion. On the other hand, it is not, perhaps, the fittest of all seasons for sanguine unconcern. There are three classes of men: those who see an approaching evil before its arrival, and preclude it; those who see it after its arrival, and cure it; and those who never see, but only feel when they are crushed by it: fore-seers, after-seers, and not-seers, they might be named. The first learn to prevent suffering, the second learn from suffering, and the last suffer without learning. The evil which approaches us is still in a state to be prevented; and prevention is better than cure.

But what are the means of prevention? Is it enough to "rally" and vote the Catholics down? I should certainly cast my vote against the proposed innovation; but the business of merely voting down a commanding and compelling sense of duty in six millions of our fellow-citizens is not wholly a pleasing one. That it would, in the long run, and in all quarters of the country, prove an effectual one, is not certain. A friend of mine, a cool-headed and intelligent gentleman, says that in twenty-five years Massachusetts will be sending a Catholic delegation to Congress. His prediction was based upon observation, not merely of Catholic increase in our cities, but of the progressive displacement of Saxon-American by Irish farmers in the rural districts. This process is undoubtedly going on, and there are no present indications that it will be arrested. Without having immediate access to the records, I suppose it out of question that the percentage of Catholics in New England generally has gone up every decade during the last half century. It is highly probable that twenty-five years hence they will in half a dozen States be, if not a majority, in numbers to hold the balance of power. Possibly, at least, the "voting down" may change hands. For more reasons than one, therefore, it is well to inquire whether our system can be strengthened, and committed to the future with more security for its continuance.

My own opinion that it can be greatly strengthened will be best supported by a brief suggestion of the means. Room remains, it is obvious, for hints only.

1. It was an early doctrine of the Catholic Church that the State has charge of material interests only, and that Church and State differ as mind and body. In seeking a place for two systems of government on the same ground, the one ecclesiastical and the other civil, this distribution of function was hit upon. That low notion of civil function has descended to our day, and, curiously, is associated more especially with theories known as "liberal." The heathen Aristotle said, "The end of the State is virtue,"—meaning not merely correct deportment, but energy, ability, the active power of man, honorably and nobly directed. The Christian Webster, however, held that the object of the State is "the protection of property at home, and the acquisition of renown abroad." The heretic Mill, again, limited the function of civil government so narrowly, that he would not even permit it to maintain public schools. So far as these notions are accepted, the State is robbed of all ideal dignity. It exists for "protection"; it has the dignity of a watch-dog.

To the Catholic, on the contrary, the Church is venerable; it appeals to his heart and his imagination. To which will he cleave when the two are in dispute? But must the balance always so incline? Has not the State also ideal aims? Is there fantastic enthusiasm in saying that it exists to uphold the necessary morals of civilization, and to make the conditions for a life human and productive rather than brutal and barren? Do we have laws, as the Sioux do not, only because we like better than they to own property and be safe? The end of the State is civilization and social welfare; and neither of these consists merely in a full pocket and a whole skin. The Commonwealth implies bonds of duty as well as ties of interest; and when its better character is no longer disguised by remains of old Roman doctrine, it will no longer, to the eyes of Catholics, appear in comparison with the Roman Church to such disadvantage.

2. Republicanism in America is now in disgrace. It has soiled its own escutcheon, dragged it in the dirt. Upon a low theory of civil government has followed a lower practice. The difficulties of the situation are enhanced by this degradation of our politics. It is the interest of the priest to abase the State, to the apprehension of his hearers, before the Church; and ample argument is furnished him. To amend that were to take from ecclesiastical agitation one of its most serviceable means.

3. An acknowledged limitation of popular sovereignty, clearly defined, would be a great security. Set forth the objects of government so largely as to include all that is necessary to civil welfare; then let the people, by solemn act, avow that their collective competence extends to these objects, and no farther.

4. With this basis, deeper than mere will, an article or clause should be embodied in every State Constitution or declaration of rights, to the effect that the government shall have no power to levy any tax for the support of sectarian schools or institutions.

5. It may, or may not, be now advisable to require of every alien resident, upon his applying for naturalization, an abjuration of allegiance to any foreign ruler, civil or ecclesiastical—that is, of any such allegiance as may compromise his fealty to the American Constitutions and laws. But though this should not be expedient at present, the right of the State to require it, should occasion arise, ought to be expressly reserved.

6. No man should be held entitled to the franchise who regards himself as in duty bound to vote upon any matter, or in any case whatsoever, at the dictation of an ecclesiastical superior not abroad. In the Puritan Commonwealth, the "freeman's oath" contained the following: "I do solemnly bind myself in the sight of God that, when I shall be called to give my voice touching any such matter of this State wherein freemen are to deal, I will give my vote and suffrage as I shall judge in mine own conscience may best conduce and tend to the public weal of the body, without respect of persons or favor of any man." That oath breathes the very soul of republicanism; and the displacement of such a spirit by that of haphazard democracy, with its conceit of a popular sovereignty neither bounded nor morally conditioned, is a calamity of American history. That man has no claim to the franchise, who cannot conscientiously bind himself to vote according to his personal judgment, not at the bidding of bishop or priest, and to vote with a supreme regard to the weal of the whole public, not with a chief eye to the weal of the Catholic Church, or to any special interest whatsoever. However, this suggestion is here thrown out rather as a topic for reflection, than from any imagination that it is applicable in the present state of public opinion.

7. The State should not abandon the protection of its citizens in deference to any usage of the Roman Church. It happened lately, in this State, as I learn from a newspaper report, that a husband and wife, lawfully married, were repeatedly called by name from the pulpit, and denounced as living "in mortal sin," that is, in adultery, because they had not been married by a Catholic priest. The husband brought a suit for slander, and was non-suited, on the ground that such priestly liberties are in accordance with Catholic usage; to which he had consented by attendance as a Catholic. Now, slander being only a civil injury, not a criminal offence, it is certain that one could, by explicit personal contract, guarantee another against any claim of damage on that score. This, however, would be the last force of contract, and the last case in which the notion of inferential or constructive contract should be admitted. Have the usages of the Catholic Church in this country the utmost possible force of a legal instrument? Is that good law? The learned judge will pardon me, if I venture to doubt. And if there be a doubt in the case, there can be none as to whose benefit it should accrue. Let Catholic laymen know that they have in the State a protector. Let them have the same benefit of the laws with other citizens. Let not the notion of constructive contract be stretched and strained to make room for ecclesiastical assumptions, if not usurpations, of power. The benefit of every doubt in such a case belongs to him who appears simply as a citizen of the State, to claim on the same ground with other citizens the protection of its laws.

8. Catholics should be made to feel that, if they have their faith, we have also ours, and are in duty bound by it. That is not shown while we take liberties with our own system, following or violating it at pleasure. Now, a clear principle of action has power to attract. This the Catholics have, and they profit immensely by the fact. To meet them, so far, on equal ground, we should have the same, and in an equal sense. Make it unequivocally, indubitably, a controversy of principles; then, if ours be that one which can better bear the light, if it has good sense and healthy sentiment in its favor, we may hope that it will prevail not by mere force of numbers, but by the power of a just principle, conscientiously held and obeyed as such, to win its way.

Upon the topics which would come up for discussion under this head, I forbear at present to enter, though certainly without disposition to conceal my judgment. But the matter is one which should be opened, if at all, more broadly than consists with the limits of a reading already too much extended.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

EDUCATION.

From the fall of Adam, for his transgression, to the present day, no nation has ever been free from threatened danger to its prosperity and happiness. We should look to the dangers threatening us, and remedy them so far as lies in our power. We are a republic whereof one man is as good as another before the law. Under such a form of government, it is of the greatest importance that all should be possessed of education and intelligence enough to cast a vote with a right understanding of its meaning. A large association of ignorant men cannot for any considerable period oppose a successful resistance to tyranny and oppression from the educated few, but will inevitably sink into acquiescence to the will of intelligence, whether directed by the demagogue, or by priestcraft. Hence the education of the masses becomes of the first necessity for the preservation of our institutions. They are worth preserving, because they have secured the greatest good to the greatest proportion of the population of any form of government yet devised. All other forms of government approach it just in proportion to the general diffusion of education and independence of thought and action.

As the primary step, therefore, to our advancement in all that has marked our progress in the past century, I suggest for your earnest consideration, and most earnestly recommend it, that a Constitutional Amendment be submitted to the legislatures of the several States for ratification, making it the duty of the several States to establish, and forever maintain, free public schools adequate to the education of all the children in the rudimentary branches within their respective limits, irrespective of sex, color, birthplace, or religion, forbidding the teaching in said schools of religious, atheistic, or Pagan tenets, and prohibiting the granting of any school funds or school taxes, or any part thereof, either by legislative, municipal, or other authority, for the benefit, or in aid, directly or indirectly, of any religious sect or denomination, or in aid, or for the benefit, of any other object of any nature or kind whatever.

UNTAXED PROPERTY.

In connection with this important question, I would also call your attention to the importance of correcting an evil that, if permitted to continue, will probably lead to great trouble in our land before the close of the nineteenth century; it is the acquisition of vast amounts of untaxed church property. In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States, which paid no tax, municipal or State, amounted to about $83,000,000. In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1875 it is about $1,000,000,000. By 1900, without a check, it is safe to say this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to, without taxation, may lead to sequestration without Constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally, whether church or corporation, exempting only the last resting-places of the dead, and possibly, with proper restrictions, church edifices.

THE MORMONS AND CHINESE WOMEN.

In nearly every annual message that I have had the honor of transmitting to Congress, I have called attention to the anomalous, not to say scandalous, condition of affairs existing in the Territory of Utah, and have asked for definite legislation to correct it. That polygamy should exist in a free, enlightened, and Christian country, without the power to prevent so flagrant a crime against decency and morality, seems preposterous. True, there is no law to sustain this unnatural vice; but what is needed is a law to punish it as a crime, and at the same time to fix the status of the innocent children, the offspring of this system, and of the possibly innocent plural wives. As an institution, polygamy should be banished from the land. I invite the attention of Congress to another, though perhaps no less an evil,—the importation of Chinese women, but few of whom are brought to our shores to pursue honorable or useful occupations.

RECAPITULATION.

As this will be the last annual message which I shall have the honor of transmitting to Congress before my successor is chosen, I will repeat or recapitulate the questions which I deem of importance, and which should be legislated upon and settled at this session:—

First. That the States shall be required to afford the opportunity of a good common school education to every child within their limits.

Second. No sectarian tenets shall ever be taught in any school, supported in whole or part by the State, nation, or by the proceeds of any tax levied upon any community. Make education compulsory, so far as to deprive all persons who cannot read and write from becoming voters after the year 1890; disfranchising none, whatever, on grounds of illiteracy, who may be voters at the time this amendment takes effect.

Third. Declare Church and State forever separate and distinct; but each free within their proper spheres; and that all church property shall bear its own proportion of taxation.

Fourth. Drive out licensed immorality, such as polygamy, and the importation of women for illegitimate purposes.

To recur again to the Centennial year. It would seem as though now, when we are about to begin the second century of our national existence, would be a most fitting time for these reforms.

Fifth. Enact such laws as will insure a speedy return to a sound currency, such as will command the respect of the world.

Believing that these views will commend themselves to the majority of the right thinking and patriotic citizens of the United States, I submit them to Congress.

U. S. GRANT.
EXECUTIVE MANSION, Dec. 7, 1875.

THE BIDDEFORD Journal says that the little white horse (Tiger) owned by Dr. Allen, of Saco, and known by almost every man in the county, possesses some very rare qualities, and exhibits signs of great intelligence, knowing the Sabbath day from all other days, and shows that he is religious in heart, with strong sectarianism mingled with his other feelings. He knows the Sabbath, because on that day he is unwilling to pass the church, while on other days he shows no desire to call. The sectarianism manifests itself from the fact that on Sabbath morning when he is harnessed, all the bells in both cities may ring, and he will remain quiet until the Orthodox bell rings in Saco, and then he will start (brisk speed), and will not be caught until he gets to the church. He knows a prayer-meeting from a preaching from the fact that after five o'clock, or towards evening, he will make no effort to go to the church, but will insist on calling at the vestry, standing a short distance off.

Poetry.

ONLY A FLOWER.

BY ETTA L. OLIVER.

Only a floweret, half hidden from sight,
Only a lily-bud, once pure and white,
Down in the dust or the city's street,
Crushed and trampled by hurrying feet;
Only a flower, unnoticed, unknown,
Withered and faded, dying alone.

Is it a woman? That once pure brow
Hath little of womanly tenderness now;
Little to love in the downcast eyes,
As with hurried movement, and strange surprise,
She raises the flower from its bed of sand,
And clasps it close in her trembling hand.

All unheard was the low-breathed sigh,
For the thoughtless crowd had passed her by;
There were few that guessed of the tender thought,
And fewer still of the tear it brought;
Yet not in vain was the lily given,
For there came to the wanderer a thought of heaven!

NORTH ASHBURNHAM, Mass.

—Banner of Light.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 11.

Mrs. E. Crosby, $10; R. B. Stone, $10; Darius Lyman, $13.25; Gardner Murphy, $13.20; Geo. Batchelor, $3.20; Mary Shannon, $22.40; Mrs. R. Cummings, $3.25; Geo. E. Jewett, $3.20; A. P. Hulse, $3.20; J. F. Woodard, $4; Hugo Andriessen, $3.20; B. S. Price, $4.40; C. F. Wrecks, $3.20; Mrs. F. W. Christen, $3.20; S. S. Green, $3.20; Mrs. J. A. Newbould, $6.40; F. S. Andrews, 75 cents; T. Bush, $1.50; J. Kessler, $3; S. W. Sample, $4.75; J. McArthur, $4.50; Willard Twitchell, 20 cents; W. P. Stevenson, 10 cents; F. A. Angell, 40 cents; E. Whichey, 50 cents; Mrs. S. R. Morgan, $6.45; J. P. Atwater, $3.27; Wm. Snell, $3.25; Gilbert Billings, $3.20; John Wilson, $3.20; Julius Churchill, $11.45; Mary E. Dewey, $3.20; S. Keese, $3; G. Cape, $3.20; W. Griswold, $3.20; W. H. Burr, $3.20; S. McCloud, $3.20; C. Lewis, $3.20; J. Rosenthal, $3.20; Jas. Eddy, $3.20; J. Wylie, $3.20; Mrs. M. J. Barker, $3.20; A. Damon, $3.20; J. Brockway, $3.20; Calvin Cone, $3.20; S. L. Smith, $3.20; Z. S. Wallingford, $3.25; J. K. Wildman, $3.20; C. G. Ames, $3.20; Ellen Grost, $3.20; E. A. Spring, $3.20; Mrs. H. J. Gale, $3; D. Branson, $3.20; D. H. Bond, $3.25; A. H. Waite, $3.20; Richard Mott, $3.20; E. Whipple, $3.50; C. J. Higgins, $3.20; F. Murray, $3.20; J. Edson, $3.20; Elizar Wright, $3.20; Mrs. C. M. Roth, $50; Nath. Cummings, $13.20; L. F. Gardner, $13.20; A. G. Cook, $6.40; O. L. Ashenfelder, $5; Geo. Iles, $6.40; John Riatt $5.20; J. E. Boynton, $10; E. S. Barrows, $6.40; G. W. Topping, $4.95; H. D. Wood, 10 cents; D. Muncey, 10 cents; C. S. Murdock, $2.20; Geo. Iles, $3.20; W. L. Hays, 75 cents; H. H. Everts, $1.60; J. Beede, $1.25; Thos. Ward, $3; Cash 20 cents; Isabel Thompson, $13.20; Thos. Curtis, 50 cents; Alex. Rosenspit, $3; Francis W. Titus, $4.80; J. F. Noyes, $3; N. S. Townsend, $3; Andrew D. White, $3.20; C. Brown, Jr., $3.20; S. A. Wood, $3.20; Joseph T. White, $3.25; Morris Einstein, $3.20; John Wade, $3.20; Mrs. M. E. Brown, $3.20; S. W. Sample, $3.50; John Curtis, 20 cents; Helen W. Allen, 15 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 16, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYNEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

WE ARE informed by the secretary that a new Liberal League has been formed at Northumberland, Pennsylvania, with Mr. M. B. Priestley as President and Mr. Charles Collins as Secretary.

SO FAR as the fact warrants it, we receive with thanks this friendly message from a subscriber to THE INDEX: "I congratulate Mr. Abbot on the acceptance by the President in his Annual Message of some of the ideas Mr. Abbot has been working for so long."

DUTIES BEYOND our power fully to discharge compel us to ask the indulgence of our correspondents, whose letters, however important, are far too numerous to be answered. The neglect is simply due to the finitude of human nature, not to any disrespect or disregard. As soon as we can we will attend to these matters, asking only to be excused from unnecessary demands upon our time.

THE TWO poems recently published in THE INDEX, entitled "Guibord at the Gate" and "Amsterdam Station," were written by Mr. W. A. Croffut, of the New York Daily Graphic. If we had known to whom to credit them, we should have done so at the time; but we have learned that most papers steal without scruple from each other, and we escaped giving a false credit by not crediting these poems to the papers where we found them.

A MORE IMPORTANT paper, or one more deserving to be read, pondered, digested, and put to practical use, has never been published in THE INDEX than the one this week contributed to it by Mr. Wasson. Whatever in this issue goes unread, let no one of our readers who has a brain to think with, or a conscience for liberty to put into action, neglect to read this marvellously able essay. We do not agree with it in every minor particular, but nevertheless assent unreservedly to its general tenor and drift. It is most noble teaching to say that, in order to win the victory of freedom and justice in the school question, we must "make it unequivocally, indubitably, a controversy of principles." That is why we plead so continuously and so earnestly for the total exclusion of the Bible from the public schools. Mr. Wasson does not in this paper explicitly draw this inference—perhaps (we do not know) would not draw it at all; but his reasoning all points that way, and his words are fit to be inscribed on the banner of the Free Public School.

MR. MORRIS EINHORN, [of Titusville, Pa., very kindly writes: "The first victory of the 'Demands of Liberalism' is gained by Grant's Message. This must be a great comfort and encouragement to you, who have done more than all the rest of Americans to bring about so glorious a victory. If not all is yet gained by it that the 'Demands' ask for, do not be discouraged; breach has now been made in the walls of the fortress of Superstition and Prejudice—time and perseverance will demolish the fortress itself. A great victory has been gained; let us be content with it for the moment; repeated storming will conquer more." We are not so vain as to suppose that THE INDEX had anything to do directly with the President's Message; but the great movement for which THE INDEX has faithfully done what it could has certainly gained a great point by the formal and bold recommendations of the President to Congress, and we gladly accept this proof that THE INDEX has not been beating the air to no purpose. What it now desires is, not that exulting friends should make any claims on its behalf, but that all lovers of liberty should unite to carry forward still further the banner on which is inscribed—"ABSOLUTE SECULARIZATION OF THE STATE."

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Events thicken. Right on the heels of ex-Speaker Blaine's remarkable letter, republished in these columns a fortnight ago, now follows the still more remarkable Annual Message of President Grant to Congress (extracts from which will be found on a previous page). Those who have been amusing themselves with the notion that THE INDEX, in so persistently urging the "Demands of Liberalism" and the necessity of a positive, earnest movement to carry them into execution, has been "fighting a wind-mill" and busying itself with an unreal issue wholly remote from the vital interests of this day and hour, must surely now be satisfied that this issue is one of the most immediate and practical kind, and already looms up as a question which will tolerate no more postponement or delay. It is no longer possible to turn a blind eye to this Liberal League movement, or a deaf ear to the demand it makes for recognition of its one great principle, the Absolute Secularization of the State, when the attention of the whole nation is suddenly challenged by momentous propositions, now rapidly multiplying on every hand, for the amendment of its fundamental law in this very direction.

Mr. Blaine, taking his cue from the President's already famous address at Des Moines, puts the latter's thought into the practical form of a proposed Constitutional Amendment, guaranteeing non-sectarian public schools; the President, in turn, proposes a still more sweeping measure of the same description, adding to it the weight of his official recommendation in a State paper sure to be read by the whole world; while the National Council of the Union League of America, meeting at Philadelphia on December 8, adopts a declaration of fundamental principles among which are these (we quote only a brief telegraphic summary)—"that the public schools of the several States should be fostered and protected from every encroachment, especially from interference by any sectarian movement; that the Church and State shall remain forever free and independent; and that to all citizens of the United States, by whatever name known, shall be accorded all rights, civil and religious, provided they obey the letter and spirit of the law, and support the government of the people for the people." The despatch adds: "General Daniel Ullman submitted proposed amendments to the Constitution [of the United States?] and of the several States in accordance with the spirit of the above, which were adopted."

Thus the President's speech at Des Moines, in which the mole-eyed saw no special importance, is proving to be historically one of the most fruitful public utterances ever made in this country; for out of it national action of infinite moment is now sure to grow. Some form of Constitutional Amendment touching the connection of Church and State is evidently predestined; and the great question is now—what shall it be? Mr. Blaine's and President Grant's forms are both imperfect, as published; the Union League's probably comes nearer to the requirements of the hour; but no one of those thus far proposed would protect so thoroughly the religious rights of the individual as the "Religious Freedom Amendment."

Moreover, no one of these recommendations covers the full, broad, secular principle respecting the public schools; for, whatever their intentions, neither Mr. Blaine, President Grant, nor the Union League, by the wording of their propositions, as published, would make the schools absolutely and necessarily secular. Mr. Blaine's proposal that—"No money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; nor shall any money so raised ever be divided between religious sects or denominations"—would still leave Bible-reading and Protestant Evangelical worship in the public schools undisturbed, unless the word "sect" should be construed a great deal more strictly than it is popularly, or in all probability would be legally, interpreted. The President's proposal—"making it the duty of the several States to establish and forever maintain free public schools adequate to the education of all the children in the rudimentary branches within their respective limits, irrespective of sex, color, birth-place or religion, forbidding the teaching in said schools of religious, atheistic, or pagan tenets, and prohibiting the granting of any school funds or school taxes, or any part thereof, either by legislative, municipal, or other authority, for the benefit, or in aid, directly or indirectly, of any religious sect or denomination, or in aid, or for the benefit, of any other object of any nature or kind whatever,"—is open to the same objection; for not only is the word "sect" ambiguous, but the phrase "teaching religious tenets" certainly would not be applied to the simple maintenance of religious worship as now conducted in the schools. The Union League's proposal, as above quoted, is still more defective. But a complete, satisfactory, and thorough-going form of Constitutional Amendment, so far as the secular character of the public school system and the very important matter of sectarian appropriations in general are concerned, was proposed as long ago as 1870 by Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, of Albany, formerly a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, in the following explicit terms, which we quote with admiration:—

"To the end that the functions of civil government may be exercised without interference in matters of religion: neither the United States, nor any State, territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation for the support, or in aid of, any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatever."

Judge Hurlbut explicitly intended to make his proposed amendment such as to secure the total exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, and his phraseology is transparently clear and precise in expressing that intention. Now that his wise and long unheeded measure is half-adopted by statesmen in high official place, let all due honor be accorded to him for his early and patriotic foresight. He was the first to propose a Constitutional Amendment making the public schools absolutely secular, and the form he proposed is still the only one before the public which carries out the principle of non-sectarian public instruction in rigorous accordance with the logic of liberty. Let not Judge Hurlbut's name be forgotten, or the superior wisdom of his proposed measure be overlooked in the now inevitable discussion on this subject.

While we congratulate the liberal public on President Grant's most important Message, as a signal advance in the right direction, we must still point out the duty and necessity of avoiding all ignorant or studied ambiguity in any amendment that may be made to the Constitution. A vital question of principle is raised; let the nation be satisfied with no half-way solution. Nothing short of the absolute secularization of the State will now suffice. President Grant recommends that every State shall be required to establish free schools, and that no "sect" shall have any control over them or any share of the school funds; but he still stops short of recommending explicitly that Protestant worship in the schools shall be discontinued, and we are less confident than we were that he really meant to recommend this in his Des Moines speech, though its language in fact covers the point. He recommends that "all church property" shall be taxed; but he almost neutralizes the recommendation by suggesting the "possible" non-taxation of "church edifices"—of which "church property" chiefly consists. He recommends compulsory education; but he stops short of requiring the education of all, contenting himself with suggesting a penalty of very dubious wisdom for illiteracy. He recommends that Church and State shall be declared forever separate and distinct; but he stops short of his own declaration, when he recommends the prohibition of polygamy partly on the ground that this is a "Christian country." This is a secular, not a Christian, country; otherwise the State is saddled with the dogmas of the Church, and the two cannot be declared separate and distinct. On all these points the President weakens his own position by inconsistency; yet none the less has he rendered a magnificent public service by his Message, which has opened a door to salutary public discussion that no man and no party can now shut. If ours is indeed to be a "government of the people, by the people, for the people," the Church has no right except to a purely private existence, without a shred of national recognition other than as one of countless voluntary corporations; and every lover of his country must now be strenuous that this great principle of all our civil and religious liberties shall be absolutely respected. By no other means can we ever arrive at true prosperity and stable peace; for, unless all public questions are to be settled by natural reason regardless of all ecclesiasticism, the essential conditions of prosperity and peace are destroyed. To-day the nation is but just beginning a vast contest, in defence of its own organic idea, against powerful foes and dangerous combinations; let every intrepid and faithful servant of liberty be found at his post!

CLERGYMEN.

While considering the danger that menaced from the intolerance of liberals towards each other, attention was called to the increasing disposition on the part of avowed "infidels" to cast uncharitable reflections on clergymen, as being, as a class, insincere to the point of hypocrisy. Such is the habitual insinuation of two or three papers that shall be nameless. Is not this another indication that the extreme radicals, we mean radicals of the negative school, are shrinking into narrow sectarian limits, entertaining the same assumptions they have so bitterly condemned, and setting up the same claim to infallibility they have so clearly exposed in others? That clergymen, as a class, are sincere in holding the opinions they do—clergymen of the Church of Rome, the Church of England, the various sects of Protestantism,—is too evident to be doubted by anybody who considers the intellectual character of the men, their personal character in other respects, their education and training. Why should they not be sincere? In these modern days they are scarcely a privileged order; their emoluments are small, their power is greatly curtailed, their influence restricted, their reputation diminished, their weight made largely dependent on their character, and their character submitted to criticism and suspicion on the flimsiest grounds. The position of a clergyman has ceased to be an enviable or a desirable one; courage is required to hold it. There may be clergymen who are strongly and incessantly tempted to conceal their real opinions from policy; but there also are clergymen who are strongly and incessantly tempted to put forth half-formed opinions which are more popular in a radical community than the views they at heart entertain. As a rule, in our large communities, with our free usages of speech, and the multiplicity of sects caused by our voluntary system, the order of clergy should find it easy to be honest. They are weak men, indeed, if they do not; weaker than their education and general character justify us in presuming.

But, it is urged, they cannot be honest and hold beliefs which all sensible men discard. The Christian system is too evidently absurd for intelligible minds to hold it, unless bribed thereto; and if bribed thereto, their profession is hollow and insincere. There are here two assumptions: 1. That the Christian system is demonstrably absurd. 2. That they who think it is have an exclusive title to be called sensible men. The number of people who think the Christian system fundamentally erroneous and essentially absurd is still small as compared to the number of those who believe it to be fundamentally sound and essentially true; and the number of able, trained thinkers who reject it in all its forms is, as compared with the number that sustain and defend it, small indeed. Of course the few may be right, and the many may be wrong; the illiterate may be right, and the learned may be wrong; the simple may be right, and the cunning in wisdom may be wrong; but no amount of personal conviction is equivalent to certainty; and no depth of assurance is proof of absurdity on the other side. The trained theologian, even the trained Calvinistic theologian, is a very hard person to meet—how hard they only know who have encountered him; they cannot know who construct him in the depths of their consciousness. Set him up as a "man of straw," and knock him down with pellets of "common sense." Christian dogmatists have a good deal to say for themselves, and will have a good deal to say for many long days to come; for our knowledge of the universe is not yet so precise or so exhaustive as to warrant a wholesale rejection of any theory of it as demonstrably false. The charge of absurdity lies rather against those who declare it so. To oppose the Christian dogma, to expose it, refute it, supplant it, if possible, is fair, honorable, even obligatory on those that disbelieve it. But to call those who do believe it hypocrites and fools is going quite too fast.

When it comes to defining the term "sensible," and determining who are and who are not the "sensible men," we must pause before admitting the pretension of those who by "sense" mean "common sense," and by "sensible" mean plain, blunt, rude, unlettered, and untrained in intellectual perception. Questions in theology cannot be answered as easily as questions in arithmetic, or by the same process; the problems of philosophy and the problems of physics require different orders of mind. Clergymen are educated, too exclusively we will admit, in theology; their schools are theological schools; their studies are in the laws of the human mind. It is not time yet to consign to the limbo of folly all who pursue that study, nor is it wise to judge without a good deal of caution the motives or the methods of those who pursue it; for "in their generation," they may be wiser than we suspect. Once more, the lesson that more than any other just now should be diligently pondered till learned by heart, is the lesson of honorable consideration for thinkers of other schools than ours.

O. B. F.

SPEAK OUT.

That is what the Chicago Sunday Times dares to do on religious questions, as will be seen by the following editorial of Oct. 17th. When we consider that the paper from which this is clipped has the largest circulation of any paper in the whole Mississippi Valley, it is a significant index of the drift of public opinion in the West. We doubt if there is a secular paper in Boston that preaches such radical views of the relation of Christianity to civilization, notwithstanding they are cradled in the nursery of Unitarianism.

W. H. S.

SPARTA, Wis., Oct. 18, 1875.

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVILIZATION.

Since the clergy of this city and neighboring towns have been taking the School Board to task for dropping devotional exercises from the schools, there has been a revival of the old efforts to prove that all the higher forms of civilization are dependent on Christianity for their origin and perpetuity. We are informed from Sunday to Sunday, and from week-day to week-day, that but for the circulation of the New Testament Scriptures, Central Europe would be in the condition of Central Africa. We are led to infer that the omission of the Lord's Prayer in the opening exercises of our schools will speedily cause us to sink into the condition of the Patagonians.

Nearly every clergyman who has spoken on the subject has pointed out the intimate connection between the Sermon on the Mount and the printing-press; the parable of the tares and the steam-engine; the talk with the woman of Samaria and the magnetic telegraph; the parting charge to the disciples and vulcanized rubber; the reply to the rich young man and the friction match. We are taught by implication that the inventions above named were made in Germany, England, and the United States, because they were "Bible lands"; and we are induced to believe that they never would have been made but for the teachings and influence of Christianity.

The clergy are fond of informing us that Scotland is great in everything that "exalteth a nation," because there is a New Testament in every house and a preacher in every village. Ethiopia, on the other hand, is degraded because there are neither Bibles nor preachers within its badly defined borders. The whole matter of race, climate, and geographical position is entirely ignored by these gentlemen in discussing the causes that favor civilization and high intellectual culture. They are very careful not to tell us that Abyssinia is as thoroughly a Christian nation as is Scotland, lacking, as it is, in every thing that pertains to civilization.

No one but a bigot, who is at all conversant with the history of recent art, inventions, and literature, will deny that the Jews, in proportion to their numbers, are doing more to advance civilization than Christians are. Persecuted as they still are in most Christian countries, they furnish a list of names conspicuous in art, music, oratory, science, journalism, and polite literature that challenges the admiration of the world. At present, the liberal press of almost every country in continental Europe is in the hands of Jews. Now, as in the days when David tuned his harp, sacred music is essentially Jewish. The art of Jews adorns our parlors; the books of Jews are found in every library.

As to the other people who are advancing civilization, they are, for the most part, little, if any, better than varnished infidels. The journalists in this country and in Europe are largely free-thinkers. In the same class may be included the majority of the writers on history, science, literature, and art. In this country, the denomination that has furnished the most and the best literature is the Unitarian. Members of this religious organization are excluded from membership in Christian associations as well as from other associations whose members call themselves "true Christians."

That the apostles and preachers of Christianity have been, and are, opposed to the progress of science, history and observation bear evidence. The Old Catholics frowned no worse on the astronomy of Galileo than the later Puritans frowned on the geology of Lyell, the anatomy of Darwin, and the chemistry of Huxley. Modern science has fought its way against the vigorous opposition of the pulpit. From the first appearance of so-called spiritual phenomena till the present time, Christianity has maintained a ban alike on witnessing and investigating them. There is nothing in the life, acts, or teachings of the Founder of Christianity that favored any phase of civilization except morality. A natural orator and rhetorician, he did nothing for the advancement of oratory or rhetoric. Bred to an art, we have no reason for believing that he advanced that art in the slightest particular. He discountenanced acquiring wealth, which is the distinguishing feature between civilization and barbarism, by the injunction, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth." It is well known that the early Christians were behind the age in which they lived in all that pertains to culture and civilization. There is such a thing as claiming too much for Christianity. The circumstance that the majority of Christian nations are in advance of the majority of Pagan countries in the matter of civilization, is no certain evidence that the civilization is the outgrowth of the teachings of the New Testament. Race has more to do with civilization than any form of religion. That certain people are civilized, and at the same time are Christians, may be regarded as simply a coincidence. Certain fortuitous circumstances, as a superior race, excellent climate, peculiar soil, desirable position, and freedom from famine and pestilence, combine and culminate in a high degree of civilization. That is all there is about it.

Communications.

ADDRESS "TO ALL TRUE FRIENDS OF REFORM AND ALL INDEPENDENT MEN."

TRANSLATED FOR "THE INDEX" FROM THE BOSTON "PRO-RIKER," OF NOV. 24, 1875.

BY PROFESSOR A. LOOS.

New ideas and suggestions of reform often meet with the same fate as medicines which remain completely inefficient until they have been taken sufficiently often. If the patient loses his patience too soon, because he does not realize any immediate effect, he may have swallowed his doses until they almost have brought on a crisis, without perceiving the least improvement; while if he continues the treatment until that critical time, a single dose may bring about a sudden change. Suggestions of reform, tending toward a change of institutions of long standing, are, of course, inconvenient for those accustomed to the latter, and those who put them forth must be prepared at first to be received with indifference, if not with disgust, or to be turned off with scorn. If this has the effect of silencing them, their efforts remain useless as if they had never been made, however praiseworthy they may have been. But if they are indefatigable in again and again renewing them at every opportunity that is offered, they excite attention, compel investigation, and, if in this way they once have gained the notice of public opinion, they will gradually accomplish their end, provided it successfully passes the test of fair criticism.

The German Radicals, who have become convinced that the wisdom of those of our party "statesmen" who try to cure the sick republic with their old recipes amounts to nothing but miserable quackery and bungling, find the fundamental cause of the evil in a defective Constitution, and have, among others, proposed the following three amendments for improving it:—

1. Abolition of the Presidency.
2. Abolition of the Senate.

3. Transfer of the whole administration of the State to a single assembly of always responsible representatives of the people, whose individual members can at any time be recalled by their constituents and replaced by others.

Memorials referring to these reforms have repeatedly been sent to Congress. The latter has as yet not made them a subject of discussion, but they have already excited the attention of the people and of the American press. As their repetition is the best means to extend the propaganda in their favor, the executive committee of radical Democrats at Milwaukee has again issued three separate memorials referring to the above amendments, and is circulating them for signatures. We hope that all friends of reform will take pains to secure as many signatures, especially of Americans, as possible for their memorials, and to send them to the Representatives and Senators who may seem most suitable to them, in order through their mediation to bring them before Congress. They can be had on application from the "National Executive Committee, Radical Democracy, 56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis., or Julius Teut-horn, Boston, Mass."

The undersigned sub-committee, charged by the Philadelphia local committee for preparing the necessary arrangements for the proposed convention in 1876, intended to pave the way for a more comprehensive organization of the radical elements among the Germans of North America, to draw up a plan of organization which might serve as a basis for the discussions tending towards this end, have agreed upon the outline of a constitution for such an organization, which they herewith submit to the consideration and discussion of all associations and individuals interested in the above purpose, challenging their criticisms and suggestions.

W. HOLDMANN.
D. KOEGL.
S. TRENDENBERG.
C. BORN.
F. BELTZIG.
A. LOOS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov., 1875.

Name: The organization formed in accordance with this constitution is called the "Union of German Radicals of North America."

Membership: As a member of the Union, every actually organized association of Germans in North America is to be considered which recognizes the leading principle of the Union, and expressly declares its desire to join the latter.

Leading principle: As its leading principle, the recognition of which it demands from all its members, the Union declares the absolute dominion of reason in all relations of life.

Aim: The aim of the Union is directed toward the practical realization of its leading principle through the organized efforts of its members, primarily towards replacing the rule of dogmatism by the science of the universe, and towards establishing the intellectual and moral life of mankind upon the laws of the universe as interpreted by science, and to be made accessible to the intellect of all by a system of free, unsectarian schools in their various grades.

Means for the attainment of this end: As means for attaining to this aim, the Union recognizes:—

1. Establishment of the systematic propaganda for its aspirations through lectures and the press.

2. Organization of its members into a party which is to influence and as much as possible to control the shaping of public affairs, for the purpose of bringing about a complete secularization of the State, and a development of our political life in better accordance with the ideal of a truly democratic republic.

N.B. To secure a more comprehensive success for such an organization, a union, or at least a regular coöperation, with the so-called "Liberal Leagues" is recommended for the sake of attaining the following nearest and most urgent "Demands of Liberalism":—

a. Taxation of ecclesiastical property.

b. Discontinuation of the employment of chaplains by the Federal government and the various State governments.

c. Cessation of all public appropriations for the support of sectarian schools.

d. Discontinuation of the use of the Bible in the public schools.

e. Discontinuation of the appointment by the President of the United States, or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals or fairs.

f. Abolition of the judicial oath and its replacement by simple affirmation under the penalties of perjury.

g. Repeal of all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath.

h. Removal of all religious tests whatsoever as requirements for the enjoyment of any civil rights and privileges from the Federal Constitutions and the various State Constitutions.

3. A regular correspondence between the members of the Union, including detailed reports regarding their relations and activity.

4. Regular conventions for the purpose of bringing about a more intimate personal acquaintance between the members of the Union and discussions of its common affairs.

5. Establishment of saving and other institutions, under the guarantee and control of the Union, for the purpose of better securing the material welfare of its individual members and their families.

6. Establishment of schools, Sunday and evening schools, as well as of libraries, for the purpose of educating the young in the spirit of the leading principle of the Union, as also for the purpose of cultivating gymnastics, singing, and music.

Executive Committee: Every regular convention appoints for the time, until the next regular convention, an executive committee.

Organization: The Union, through its executive committee, is divided, according to the requirements of expediency, into State, district, and local associations.

Organ: The Union appoints or establishes a periodical paper as a medium for its public correspondence, to which every association belonging to it is in duty bound to report all important measures and events coming within its sphere.

Plan of organization: Every association of greater or less extent, whose members declare their assent to the leading principle previously specified, and their willingness to coöperate for the realization of the above stated aims, can become a member of the Union of German Radicals of North America, by merely declaring adherence to it.

Although such an association, by the act of its joining this Union, self-evidently submits in all common affairs of the Union to the measures justified by the constitution of the latter, it yet retains its full independence in all matters relating to its own special purposes, provided that these are not at variance or in contradiction with the leading principle or the organization of the Union.

Every association belonging to the Union is in duty bound, for the purposes of the latter, to tax itself with an annual contribution to its treasury, proportional to the number of its own members.

Every association belonging to the Union is entitled to send one delegate to the annual convention for every fifty of its members. Independent associations belonging to the Union, of less than fifty members, are likewise entitled to send one delegate to the convention.

The convention appoints the association which is to elect from its members the executive committee, consisting of five persons, which is to represent the Union until the next convention.

The convention, besides disposing of all business arising from the maintenance of the organization of the Union, has to bring all pending questions of importance, which bear upon the spiritual, political, and social life, to public discussion, and to prepare the activity of the Union for their solution in accordance with its leading principle.

It shall also be incumbent upon the convention, as well as upon the executive committee representing it, to employ all means within its reach for the peaceable and successful propaganda for the leading principle of the Union, and for inciting its members to never-ceasing activity for its realization in the various relations of life. Especially shall the executive committee be obliged to meet at least once a month for discharging this duty, and to keep the members of the Union constantly posted as to the success of its activity by regular reports in the central organ. It is also to be entitled to replace any of its members in case of resignation or indifference.

THE NEW YORK SECTARIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Permit me to correct a few errors into which you have inadvertently fallen, in your comments upon my letter in your issue of Nov. 25.

You say that the "facts," as presented in the article of the New York Times, on sectarian appropriations, "show that the destruction of the Ring did not dissolve the coalition of Catholicism and Democracy in New York city"; and intimate that I did not notice in the Times' article the proofs that sectarian appropriations continued after the downfall of the Ring until the beginning of the present year.

I read the article in the Times when it was originally published, with some care; I re-read it when you published it in THE INDEX, and have read it again since the appearance of your last comments upon it, each time with increasing disgust at the disregard of plain facts which are accessible to all, and the spirit of partisan trickery which inspired it.

Because THE INDEX is "no partisan," I ask it, in justice to many friends of secular education, to make these corrections.

In the first place, the "coalition" of religious and political powers which made those sectarian appropriations worked through the State, as well as the city government; the appropriations being authorized by the State legislature. No such appropriations could have been made against its authority. Of course, the appropriations for institutions in New York city were, as the Times' article shrewdly but trickily declares, "paid out of the money raised by tax on the property of New York city"; but they were made by and through the authority of the State legislature, which always controlled the tax levy, could at any time have prevented these appropriations, and did attempt to limit them, with very poor success, in the tax levy of 1871, as quoted by the Times.

In the second place, the downfall of the "Ring" placed the State government and the legislature for two years in the hands of the Republicans, who, by the logic of THE INDEX, should be held responsible for all sectarian appropriations made while they were in power, and could have prevented them. I hope THE INDEX will not accuse me of making an "indiscriminate attack" on the Republican party. I am merely applying its own rule.

In the third place, the complete triumph of reform, in the passage of the Constitutional Amendment which forever prohibits sectarian appropriations, was coincident with the election of Governor Tilden by fifty thousand Democratic majority. Hence the Democrats, who were in the majority, and could have prevented the passage of this amendment, are, by the logic of THE INDEX, entitled to all the credit of its passage.

I, however, do not wholly accept this logic as conclusive. People vote, and are responsible for their votes, as independent citizens, and not as members of any sect, nor yet of any political party. Gen. Woodford, of Brooklyn, is still considered around here to be a good Republican, although he said in a recent speech that he had seldom, for years, voted an unscratched party ticket. Until his party formally "reads him out," he is entitled to be considered and treated as a Republican.

I have yet heard of no attempts, on the part of Pope or priest, to expel Senator Kernan, or those who sympathize with him, from the Catholic Church. Until he is so expelled, he is entitled to be considered and treated as a Catholic. I have never been constituted a pope above the Pope to decide who are, and who are not, members of the Catholic Church, and I have yet to learn that the editor of THE INDEX has been so constituted.

Nor, much as I respect the ability and honesty of the late Gerrit Smith, do I wish to be held responsible for his views on the public school question. He was opposed, on principle, to the entire public school system. I am in favor of it as the very foundation of our system of republican government.

The policy which I advocate is positive, and not negative. Instead of "opposing" an imaginary onslaught on the system itself—spending our force in fighting a windmill, whose arms are turned solely by the breath of partisan malignity—I would concentrate our whole army, sink petty contentions, and move forward on the enemy's works, inscribing on our banner—The complete secularization of our public school system.

Yours faithfully, LEWIS G. JANES.

[Until Mr. Janes or somebody else can give exact information touching the secret history of those sectarian appropriations, we must be excused from taking general statements on the subject as satisfactory. So far as we can see, he has not relieved the Democratic party from the odium of making sectarian appropriations, but only placed a similar load on the back of the Republican party. Very well: let the two parties in that case divide the shame. In "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," they seem to have been running a race; but it still appears that the Democrats are ahead. It is time for honesty to come out of its hiding-place. Meanwhile let us know exactly who did make the appropriations, why they did it, which party actually profited by it, and for what reason the Catholics got so disproportionate a share of the plunder.

As to Senator Kernan, Mr. Janes' language implies that we said that he was not a Catholic. We said that he was not a "representative Catholic"—a very different thing. Let us be fair. On this point Mr. Wasson, on a previous page, answers Mr. Janes so completely that nothing more need be said here.

But when our correspondent calls the Catholic attack on the school system an "imaginary onslaught," we are simply astonished. Is it possible that any American liberal can be so completely unconscious of patent facts? We respectfully suggest to Mr. Janes to go to D. & J. Saddler & Co., 31 Barclay St., New York, and consult Father Müller's Public School Education, Chief Justice Dunne's Our Public Schools, Bishop Gilmour's Lenten Pastoral of 1873 (this can be got of Ingham, Clarke & Co., of Cleveland, for fifty cents), Bishop McQuaid's Free Christian Schools, and a host of similar works. By the time he has examined a tithe of this evidence of a real and most determined "onslaught," he will see that the only "windmill" in the case has been in his own peaceful dreams. But if he considers these books and pamphlets as mere paper warfare, let him turn to the Catholic Directory for 1875, and read on pages 85, 86, 87, and 88 a list of ninety-three Catholic parochial schools in his own city of New York, all in actual operation—the very first ten on the list having respectively 500, 700, 880, 930, 600, 750, 640, 800, 500, and 700 pupils. And all these simply because the Catholics hate and fear and want to destroy our public schools as now conducted! Every diocese tells the same story; Bishop McQuaid said in 1871 that there were nearly 100,000 Catholic children in these parochial schools in the State of New York alone. Yet Mr. Janes, living in the midst of these things, thinks it is only an "imaginary onslaught"! We cordially welcome his closing assurance that he is in favor of the "complete secularization of our public school system"; and we believe he will yet see the formidable obstacles which stand in the way of that necessary measure.—ED.]

CONVERTED "INFIDELS."

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I am an "anxious inquirer," seeking for light, but finding it not.

From the New York Sun, Nov. 23, I cut the following, which speaks for itself:—

"A WOMAN EVANGELIST.

"GREAT EXCITEMENT IN THE DREW METHODIST CHURCH AT PORT JERVIS.

"PORT JERVIS, Nov. 22.—Mrs. Lowrie, a converted actress, is conducting a series of revival meetings in the Drew M. E. Church, in this village. The meetings are attended by thousands of people, and over five hundred converts have been made. The number includes many wealthy and prominent residents. Mrs. Lowrie is an eloquent speaker, and an excellent vocalist. Her discourses are delivered while she walks about the house. They are full of extravagant and impassioned passages, interspersed with wild hymns and wild gestures. She wields a powerful influence over the large congregation that assembles to hear her, and her voice is frequently drowned by their shouts. Two avowed infidels—one a contributor to the Boston Investigator—are among her converts. A leading atheist asked for prayers on Saturday night amid a scene of wild excitement. The church will not hold all that apply for admittance. People come twenty miles to hear her, and so many train-hands from the Erie Railway attend the service that new men have been employed to fill their places.

"Mrs. Lowrie is a lady about thirty-five years of age, and shows the effect of the hard work she is doing."

Feeling interested to know more of this wonderful revival, I wrote that day to the postmaster at Port Jervis, asking him for the names of the two infidels mentioned above, their standing in the community, and regarding the atheist also.

A reply came to me signed "P. M.," dated Nov. 25, saying: "I know nothing of the facts of which you wish to know. There is a great revival in progress in the Methodist Church. About the infidel and contributor I know nothing."

This reply did not satisfy my craving for facts; but about this time I noticed the following in the New York Tribune:—

"THE REVIVAL IN PORT JERVIS.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE.

"Sir,—I see so many inaccurate references to the revival in our church here, that I am induced to write you generally accurate and always influential paper a brief statement. Mrs. M. E. Lowrie assisted us during the month of October; conversions, two hundred and sixty-five. After she went to Franklin Street, Newark, N. J., the meetings continued with increased power, so that up to this time there have been two hundred and ninety-five conversions this month; that is, five hundred and sixty in all. Last week there were one hundred and fifteen conversions. On Sunday I baptized one hundred and sixty-five persons. The work is spreading among the most influential railroad men of Port Jervis.

Our church will seat about one thousand people, yet they often go away unable to find seats. Mrs. Lowrie paid us a visit of four days last week. The Rev. Horace W. Byrnes, of Drew Theological Seminary, has been assisting us this month. The interest in these meetings and their influence upon the community is as great for this section as are the Brooklyn meetings for that section. Four hundred and four have joined our church alone.

"Very respectfully," JOHN A. MUNROE,
"Pastor M. E. Church."

"PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Nov. 24, 1875."

Here seemed an opportunity to get at the truth, and I addressed a few lines to Rev. Mr. Munroe, saying:—

"By item in the New York papers of 23d inst., I learn that, at the recent revival in the Drew M. E. Church, your place, 'two avowed infidels, one a contributor to the Boston Investigator, were among the converts. A leading atheist asked for prayer on Saturday amid a scene of wild excitement.' May I ask whether above statements are facts in every detail, or whether colored by some enthusiastic convert? These statements should be accompanied by names, else the unbelievers will say, 'We don't believe such nonsense.'"

As yet I have had no reply from Rev. Mr. Munroe (though I enclosed to him a stamped envelope addressed to myself); so must presume my letter mis-carried, or press of religious business has of necessity delayed his answering. Since then the papers here have discussed the subject; one, the Sun, in leading editorial, expressing the hope that ere long the entire population of Port Jervis will become converted, and the change of heart be manifested by good deeds and pure lives.

But, alas, for human hopes, such does not seem to be the case, as shown by the following letter of late date:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN:

"Sir,—To save the reporters of your paper a needless trip to our village for the purpose of investigating the revival now in progress, I would most respectfully submit the following:—

"The Rev. Mr. Munroe has truly written: 'So up to this time (24th inst.) there have been two hundred and ninety-five conversions this month; that is, five hundred and sixty in all. Last week there were one hundred and fifteen conversions. On Sunday I baptized one hundred and sixty-five persons.' During the past week I have talked with not a few of the 'converted,' and the extent of the religion they have achieved seems to have been the delightful sensation of having a female revivalist winding her arms around their necks, of hearing sweet words poured into their ears, of 'going forward,' of 'meeting with a change of heart,' and of being received within the 'pale of the church'; and, alas! that is all.

"This is not a new thing for Port Jervis. Four years ago there was a 'great harvest' of the same kind and in the same church. READER.

"PORT JERVIS, NOV. 30."

Meantime I am yet anxious to know who those two infidels are, "one a contributor to the Boston Investigator; and who is that leading atheist "who asked for prayers amid a scene of wild excitement." Can any of the readers of THE INDEX at or near Port Jervis help to solve this mystery? So often I have heard of infidels becoming converts, that I desired to get at the bottom facts in this case, but so far have been unable to do so. Can it be that the story of the infidels and atheist was another "pious fraud"? Yours truly, "A."

A SCHOOL MANUAL OF MORALS.

F. E. ABBOT, ESQ:

Sir,—While you have as the end of your labors the discovery of truth, theological, scientific, etc., and the promulgation thereof, you have behind all of this the human mind, the most complicated and the most wonderful of all phenomena. If you want to advance the interests of the race, you must study this. If you neglect to get your lessons here, you may lead humanity astray and into ruin. Phrenologically speaking, the top of the head is the balancing power between the passions and the intellect. Both of these powers, the motive and intellectual, can easily be provided for. The one may be checked by the other by cultivation. But the individual whose mind is defective will soon show himself a knave, no matter how intellectual he may be,—indeed, the more intellectual, the more dangerous. Now, you, the President, many others, and myself would exclude the Bible from the schools. Would not this leave the passions checked by the intellect alone? The family and the churches are, on our theory, sufficient to cultivate these balancing powers of the mind,—the moral sentiments, without which the individual has a dangerously defective mind. The Bible teaches right conduct in almost every instance. The difficulty with the Bible is, that it teaches a great many other things that the cultivated intellect cannot approve of. It teaches that the order of material Nature is sometimes set aside, and that the supernatural sometimes takes its place; while all our experience and observation go to convince us that the laws of material Nature are fixed and unalterable. My reading has been necessarily limited. I know of no author who has demonstrated the fact that the laws governing mind are as fixed and unalterable as those governing matter; yet I conceive this to be true. If true, and if the moral sentiments (benevolence, conscientiousness, etc.) are, like the intellect, to be cultivated, and if the Bible is the most effective in their cultivation, then the Bible, as a means of their cultivation, ought to be kept at its work. But, as the Bible teaches too much, why not give the world a work to be taught in schools that will train these necessary faculties, and help to form with the growing intellect, a perfectly balanced mind? Now among your numerous coadjutors can you not find one who will arrange those principles of action, a great many of which are condensed in Christ's Sermon on the Mount, and others scattered all through the Scriptural writings, and adapt them to our schools? Unless something of this kind is done, and the child is trained to LOVE, I fear that the priests' theory will prove correct. The passions and propensities are born with us, which fact gives rise to the belief in "original sin." The Scriptures point in almost every chapter to the necessity of bringing them under the subjection of more reasonable motives, so as to adapt the individual to society, and make him useful to the world of mankind. Such a book, I conceive, can be issued to the scholars, and they would learn the true reason WHY they should be pure-minded, generous, truthful, honest, reverent, and so forth.

Yours truly, J. C. KLOTZ.

TOLEDO, OHIO, NOV. 8, 1875.

[There is a great deal of wisdom in the above letter. It is perfectly true that a first-class ethical text-book, written on the plane of natural morality and wholly free from all supernaturalism, yet adapted to the easy comprehension of young children and made interesting by illustrative stories and questions, is profoundly needed to-day. Such a text-book could be as properly used in the public schools as a text-book of geography or arithmetic. But it cannot be written except by a thinker who thoroughly grasps the principles of Scientific Ethics, and it would not be adopted in the public schools so long as the public believe that the Bible and Christianity are the sole foundation of morality. Until that day arrives, the study of ethics in the public schools will hardly be made a part of the course; and moral education, so far as it depends on direct instruction, should be reserved for the home, the Sunday-school, the church, or the free religious society. Such a true text-book, however, cannot be written too soon for the aid of parents and others in this instruction; and we wish we had time to execute the plan of one which we have long desired to write.—ED.]

RABBI FELSENTHAL'S PROTEST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—You have my hearty thanks for publishing at full length Rabbi Felsenenthal's able and spirited protest against Bible-reading in the public schools (INDEX, Dec. 2). Though it fills three columns and over, I never read anything shorter; and, in finishing it, only regretted that there was not another postscript to it. I hope none of your readers read it carelessly. I entirely agree with the good rabbi in all that it is his object to prove, and I think he has proved it very well. Not only has he done good service to our schools and to our country, but to Christianity itself. However he misunderstands it, no misunderstanding can do it so much harm as that mixing up with civil matters against which he defends it; and my first movement, immediately after reading his eloquent paper, was to have sent him a diploma of F. D. (FIDEI DEFENSOR, of the Christian faith I mean), under my episcopal style and seal.

My saying that Rabbi Felsenenthal misunderstands Christianity would be an exaggerated expression, unless I hastened to explain it. He understands it a great deal better than any of our carnal Protestants, commonly called "Orthodox." It is only against the fourth gospel that he brings the charge of polytheism, apparently finding in the three first little to blame on that score; when as they, through the violent commentaries contained in the chapter headings of the Bible Society, endeavor to make the whole Bible liable to that accusation. I request Rabbi Felsenenthal to read the New Testament as he reads the Old,—in its text (the Sinaitic), not in a translation; by the light of Jewish condition and of common sense, not of Bible Society commentaries. He will find that the New Testament is in perfect consonance with the Old; that the whole Bible, New as well as Old Testament, is a good Jewish rationalist book from beginning to end, written by rationalists, and intended by them to be understood rationally, not fanatically. This will be to Rabbi Felsenenthal just the same revelation, about the nature of Christianity, which St. Paul (Rabbi Shaul) had through a quarter of an hour's conversation with Jesus near Damascus, where he had come on an errand of mistaken zeal.

Among the misconceptions as to the teachings of Christianity is the belief that Christians are, as such, forbidden to resist evil. On the contrary, we are, in every page of the New Testament, enjoined to oppose evil, both defensively and aggressively, in the order of things with which alone the Christian dispensation is concerned, and by the means which belong to that order. These means and that order of things are spiritual. But while Christianity limits itself to the spiritual order, it does not limit its followers to it. They belong to two orders of things: the spiritual and Christian, and the natural or civil. As members of the natural society, they have, like all other men, to pay taxes to the government of their country, whether it be republican or monarchical; and if they are soldiers, not to be cowardly nor desert, but, as John the Baptist answered those who interrogated him, to do no violence beyond what is enjoined to them, and to be satisfied with their wages. There are kinds of temporal evils which require to be temporarily repressed, and which society represses not, leaving their repression to individuals. In those things the Christian is bound, not by the Christian law which has nothing to do with temporal matters, but by the law of Nature which Christianity came not to abolish, to resent injustice, and make the wicked smart for his misdeed, thereby doing his part in the general administration of justice as the law of the universe. Nothing can be more emphatic than the declarations of Jesus, and of his apostles, to the effect that there is not a single natural duty that a man can evade under the protest of his having become a Christian.

The so-called principle of Christian non-resistance to evil, therefore, reduces itself to this proposition: that those evils that it would be unwise and useless for us to oppose by material means, as members of the natural society, may still, in a way, be resisted by us, through those spiritual means which belong to Christianity. As to the strength of those spiritual means, let not Rabbi Felsenenthal be too prompt to ridicule it. In the time of Jesus, and shortly after, two branches of Israel, the one under Jesus, the other under the political leaders of the nation, levied war against the Roman oppressors. The political leaders resorted to material means, and led the national Commonwealth to destruction. Jesus and his followers resorted to spiritual means, and over the ruins of Roman idolatry the praises of the God of Israel are sung in more churches than the remnants of them of the other branch of Israel contain of scattered families.

As to the Rabbi's suggestion with regard to an expurgated edition of the Bible, I am glad he considers it as a "solution hardly to be expected in our days." The Bible would lose the better part of its value to us, it would cease to broaden our views beyond the narrow horizons of an age in which the legs of pianos themselves will soon have to be encased in pantaloons, were it expurgated so as to suit our conventional squeamishness. In the energy of their American patriotism, the Rabbi, and with him Jews generally, are too apt to forget that some truths are deposited in the Jewish Bible, and entrusted to the Jewish Church, which our proud civilization itself, unless it is to perish, must learn of them.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, DEC. 4, 1875.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S "VIEWS OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION."

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Mr. Bradlaugh, in his "Views of the Free Religious Association," says: "I cannot, I avow, understand the position," etc. The wish of the Free Religious Association is to give all men a chance to hear or to express honest and earnest convictions; but Mr. Bradlaugh will understand that "the honest Roman Catholic, the sincere disciple of the Society of Jesus," who submits to-day to the authority which "negates all possible free thought," may become an Atheist or a Free Religionist as the mind develops. Was not Jesus a born Jew? Luther and others born Catholics? And Mr. Bradlaugh himself a born Christian?

"Mr. Higginson himself, by speaking of the Atheist possibly elevating Atheism into a religion, affirms his own conviction, at any rate, of the inferiority of Atheism as compared with this undefined religion."

Col. Higginson is an able and zealous coöperator in the Free Religious movement, but he has manifested several times, and shows us now, that he does not fully comprehend the principles of Free Religion. Here we know no high or low seats, no superiority of one faith over the other, but sincere faith. The Atheist or Materialist does not know that there is no God, but he believes that there is none; the Theist does not know, but believes that there is one; therefore both have faith! We all are compelled to accept an unknown; but the unknowable is just as much an assumption as the infallibility of the Pope.

The conditions and development of my own mind, in a life of fifty-three years, brought me out of a firm belief in the Augsburg Confession and Lutheran doctrine into Materialism, Atheism, and now Theism and Free Religion, just as our convictions come to us from day to day.

Mr. Bradlaugh, the earnest and zealous advocate of universal liberty, concludes his letter with these noble words: "Right or wrong, preachers like Mr. Frothingham do the world good service. For the grand truths uttered we thank them, and we listen attentively and reverently even where we differ." We say with our noble brother in humanity, Theodore Parker,—"Though our brother doubts thy existence, yet he keeps thy laws," as much as he knows and can, Fellow-Jews, fellow-Mohammedans, fellow-Christians, of all sects, fellow-Spiritualists, fellow-Materialists, fellow-Atheists, go on in your own way, and, as our reason and theories develop, we all shall meet at the inevitable centre which we all seek and love, and where we shall understand each other.

Yours truly, CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N. H., DEC. 6, 1875.

THE TOWN COUNCIL of Bolton, England, has decided upon the removal of a tombstone from the cemetery of that city, on which figured the infidel inscription: "Let the gods attend on things which gods must know; man's only care relates to things below. Nescio Deos." It had been recently inscribed on the tomb of an old deist over seventy-four years old.

WHERE words abound, sense is thinly spread: trees overcharged with leaves bear little fruit.—Lady Mary Montagu.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sommeschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—in connection with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, R. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	1.50
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 8 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Application to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist, with Memorial Verse	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Right Reason, detecting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Poems	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of the Rev. John Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	5.00
Elective Affinities	.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Tower of Babel	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First	1.00
1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales	6.00
Mosses from an Old Manse	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image	2.00
The Marble Faun	2.00
The English Note-Books	2.00
The American Note-Books	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skellings	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautilus. By J. Bell Pettigrew	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English. With Analysis and Introduction by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	3.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
Three Essays on Religion	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Sermons, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. C. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of the Spirit of the Age, and the demand of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Tractory Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged in	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Mars, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHULLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of J. J. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, Moral, New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.60
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Fanny Hill	1.50
The Newcomes	1.50
Adventures of Philip	1.50
Pennicott	1.50
The Virginians	1.50
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.	1.50
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.	1.50
3. Snobs, Sketches, Idylls Duval, &c.	1.50
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.	1.50
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.00
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN) Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each	3.75
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Voysey's Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saturday	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS, IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $41.00; per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48 00: " " 16.00.
Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.
Five " 55.00: " " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.
Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF MONCURE D. CONWAY'S SACRED ANTHOLOGY, A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00. Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-wood Reade$3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing- ham 1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald 1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. . . . The story is told in a very graphic style. . . . Mr. Holyoake . . . is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX. Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address NATH'L T. ALLEN, WEST NEWTON, MASS.

A NEW INDEX TRACT

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1836, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MUSICAL GIFTS FOR CHRISTMAS.

MUSICAL GIFTS FOR NEW YEAR'S.

Gems of English Song! 75 of the best songs extant, collected in a handsome volume of 232 (music size) pages. With elegant gilt binding, $1.00. In cloth, $3.00. In boards, $2.50.

Uniform in style, price, and binding with the above splendid book, we have other books of "Gems," German, Scottish, and Sacred; also, of best Irish melodies, and the choicest Operatic Songs.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS. By Howard. 38 cts. ANTHEM. There were Shepherds. Millard. 75 cts.

MERRY CHRISTMAS. Piano piece. Wilson. 60 cts.

Rejoice the hearts of the Old Folks with Centennial Collection for Old Folks' Concerts. 40 cts. By E. Tourjée.

Gladde your Sabbath-school by introducing Shining River. One of the sweetest of song-books.

Order the above books of any of the principal music dealers, or by mail (enclosing retail price), of

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broadway, New York.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY 335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1875.

WHOLE NO. 313.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 23, 1875.

GLIMPSSES.

THE BREMERHAVEN crime is unparalleled in the records of iniquity. Satan will have to be re-baptized as Thomassen.

THERE ARE twenty candidates for the "Freshman Nine" at Harvard. Will some mathematician inform us how they are all to be made happy?

AT THE DEDICATION of the new Catholic Cathedral in Boston, Dec. 8, Bishop Lynch said that fifty years ago there were only two Catholic churches in all New England, and that now there are half a million Catholics in the same "province."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Boston Journal, Dec. 14, writes that, of the thirteen Democratic nominees for the new School Board in this city, eleven are Catholics, and two of these are priests. Such facts as these tell a story that needs no amplification.

EARL FITZWILLIAM, having had a quarrel with his miners, refused to reopen the Low Stubbin Colliery after their submission, on the ground that he was rich enough to do without it. His insolent cruelty strikes a telling blow at the land monopoly in England.

FAITH in missions seems to be declining, if the great debts of the Missionary Societies are any indication. The Presbyterian Board was deficient $226,000 on Nov. 1; the Methodist Episcopal Board, $185,000; and so of the rest, excepting only the Moravians.

NEXT SUNDAY (December 26), Mr. M. D. Conway will preach at Parker Memorial Hall, in this city, on "Christ versus Christianity." On Monday, December 27, he will lecture in the same place, at seven P.M., on "The Holy Family": tickets fifty cents, to be had at Ditson's and at the door. Nobody who is able to improve these opportunities of hearing him should neglect them, for they are, "like angels' visits, few and far between."

THIS is a strikingly advanced view of the Sabbath to be promulgated by an Orthodox scholar, yet it is attributed to Rev. S. M. Hopkins, D.D., of the Auburn Theological Seminary: "The fourth commandment as a law is abolished, because under the New Testament all time is equally sacred; the Puritan Sabbath was Jewish in its nature, and its observance should be left to individual option; and legal enactments regarding the Sabbath are wrong."

THE PROGRESS of modern freethought is seldom more strikingly illustrated than in the following facts, which we state on excellent authority. The Society of Alumni of Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, the strictly Methodist College at which Mr. Conway was graduated in 1849, has invited him, notwithstanding his now well-known position outside of Christianity, to deliver the regular annual address before them in June next—an invitation, however, which he was compelled to decline because he is engaged to appear in his own pulpits at Finsbury and Camden Town on the second of April.

EIGHT HUNDRED men at the point of starvation surrounded the city hall at Montreal, demanding work or bread, as five thousand did just before in New York city. The claims of the unemployed and the poor this hard winter should be tenderly regarded by the whole community; and it is a great deal better to furnish work than to drive desperate men into riot and crime. We owe all the aid in our power to those whom the bitterness of want has overtaken in this season of general business depression; and it is not charity, but justice, that the whole community should ease their heavy burden in every possible way.

THE BOSTON Pilot, an able Catholic journal, wishes to have President Eliot, of Harvard College, Chief-Justice Gray, of Massachusetts, and Archbishop Williams, of Boston, appointed a committee to settle the school controversy, and thinks that the plan they would report would be agreed to by all. "That depends!" No plan can be agreed to by all which is not just to all; and the only plan just to all is the secular plan. But that the Catholics vehemently reject. There is no use, then, for the Presidents, Chief-Justices and Archbishops to lay their heads together; the people will have to settle this matter for themselves.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Nation says pithily that "platforms" are modelled as closely as may be after the political formulas of the "Latin races," which promise all desirable things in a general, abstract way, but avoid the advocacy of definite "particular measures" for securing them, as being inconsistent with "harmony." This wise sentence tells the whole story. The Liberal League advocates the "particular measures" without which religious liberty in America must perish; and soft-hearted and soft-headed sentimentalism deprecates them, forsooth, as dangerous to "harmony"! Is it not time for a revival of the virility and common sense which were in fashion just about a hundred years ago?

REV. GEORGE F. PENTECOST, a Baptist clergyman of this city, made some startlingly honest confessions about the churches on a recent Sunday. Of some of them he said: "They may be said to have galvanized their death into a kind of life by all those means which may be brought to bear for the preservation of church organizations, such as money, influence, social position, etc. If there were not wealth and traditional interest in these churches they would perish within six months. They are held up simply by the force of architecture and stone walls. They are dying; death is upon them. They are dead in the splendid tomb of externals; there is no spiritual life in them." He also said: "A confession can be had from the lips of the pastors of most of our churches that in our midst there are wicked, unholy, corrupt men who maintain their positions, and are saved from a righteous discipline either by their wealth or social position. It is true of this church, and it is true of many of the churches around us. If a ship should go to sea with as many rotten timbers as we have spiritually rotten members, it would go to the bottom in twenty-four hours." And again: "This departure from Christ has been brought about largely by the terrible and shameless worldliness of the churches. The drift of the churches in their social life, in their religious work, in their management, is to worldliness. One thoughtful, intelligent layman, a member of a church which is a leader in its denomination, said the other day: 'Our church has degenerated into a great, strong, social, fashionable organization.' In nine churches out of ten there is a painful confession of this fact." These things are true, and it was certainly a brave man who said them in the pulpit.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSOKOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrle S. Burnham, President; John S. Oye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Lord's Day.

A DISCOURSE.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

I invite your attention to a few more thoughts on the Sunday. The theme has become somewhat hackneyed from recent discussion, but is far from being exhausted. Even if all suggestions on the subject had been made, they would need to be iterated, reiterated, and urged upon public attention till they were fairly lodged in the common mind, before the duty of setting them forth would be accomplished. Thoughts must become commonplace and wearisome to the intelligent, in order that their practical force may be felt. At present this is very far from being the case with the Sunday question. The discussion of it recurs at long intervals, is kept up for a few weeks in a heated, disputing, and random manner, and ceases before any single point is established. At each renewal of the controversy it may be that something is added to the stock of useful considerations, but not enough to be of practical value, and, the moment of interest being over, it is difficult to gain a willing hearing on the matter. It shall not be my fault if the present opportunity passes unimproved.

The subject is one of vital and permanent interest to all the people, men, and women, and children; it concerns the whole of society throughout its relations; it bears on health, industry, the home, the common weal, the higher culture. The question raised is simply this: How shall a people spend a seventh part of all their mortal time? Shall they waste it, or use it? Shall they spend it in the interest of their higher or their lower nature? Shall they devote it to the bestial or the rational being, to the animal or the human in them? The Sunday we have; it is a possession secured by law, protected by the general consent of Christendom, consecrated by the traditions of generations of men. Let there be no misapprehension on that point. Let no suggestion be entertained looking toward an abolition of the day, or any such essential change in its observance as shall confound it immediately or distantly in prospect with ordinary days. In our hurried modern life, men ought to congratulate themselves on the rescue from pitiless toil of any hours; and the free gift of an entire day ransomed from material concerns should be gratefully welcomed, not doubtfully accepted, or curiously acquiesced in. The Sabbath is a boon; the Sunday is a boon. The community would perhaps suffer no detriment from the adoption of them both into the number of festal or sacred days. But as long as Christendom adopts but one—the Sunday,—the preservation of that should be held to be concern of serious moment.

Let it be further considered that the question should be taken up here as an American question. By which I mean that our discussion of it should be practical, not speculative; and practical as concerns us, not as concerning Asiatics, Europeans, or Englishmen. It is interesting, no doubt, to know how people have observed Sunday in other hemispheres and ages; to know how the early Christians observed it, and the Christians of the Roman Empire; how the Catholics observe it; the English Protestants, the New England Protestants, the Calvinists, the Lutherans; but knowledge of this kind is of little value to us. We seek no authoritative direction though it were from the New Testament, the recommendation of the Apostles, or the opinion of the Christ himself; for these, however influential with people in Oriental lands, nearly two thousand years ago, can have no weight with people as differently constituted and situated as we are.

Even did the past of Christendom present an unbroken tradition on this subject, it should not control our action. No, not though that tradition were formed by the consent of councils and popes, of teachers of high degree, and united communities. But the well known fact is that no such consent of tradition is offered. The usage in different lands and periods has varied exceedingly; it has even been at variance, so far as to contradict itself. At one time it was made a day of rejoicing, at another of sobriety bordering on gloom; at one time work was allowed, at another it was forbidden; at one time even the work of mercy was suspended on the Lord's day, at another it was encouraged. The fact that the Emperor Justinian, in the sixth century, expressly forbade theatrical exhibitions, races in the circus, and fights of wild beasts, on Sunday, and that under severe penalties, would seem to imply that many Christians at that period did not regard such entertainments as inconsistent with their Christian profession. John Calvin's Sunday game of bowls at Geneva would have scandalized his Puritan followers in London and Boston; and Martin Luther's conduct would be considered even now as lax and dangerous in the circle of his own adherents.

The observance of Sunday, like the observance of other days, has been governed by the circumstances of the period and the genius of the people. In the East it has been Oriental; in the West it has been Occidental; in Italy it has taken color from the warm southern temperament, and the glow of pagan festivity; in Germany, it has been more largely pervaded by the intellectual spirit. There has been no established rule or order. Even if the much talked of, praised, and denounced European Sunday were all that its admirers claim that it is, it would not be suitable to Americans, for it is not native to our people; it did not come with their institutions, nor does it fall in with their temperament. The attempt to introduce it into England, when England was a Catholic country and Catholic notions of Sunday prevailed, was unsuccessful. The idleness was abused; the liberty became license; the popular sports were attended with quarreling, uproar, and drunkenness. The same experience would be ours, were we to copy the European model. Were the Catholic religion to prevail in England or America, this would not materially affect the result; for the religion would not alter the constitution of the people. Americans must order the use of the day according to their own needs; they must do so at all events; were their own needs less exalted than those of other nations, they must do so.

But they are not less exalted; they are more so. The European mode of observing Sunday is defective in ways it would be most unfortunate for us to borrow. It contemplates nothing but amusement for the latter half of the day. The services being over in the churches, the places of entertainment of all kinds are thrown open, and the population give themselves up to pleasure. The education of the people is not thought of; the refinement of the people is not set in view; public galleries of art are opened, and a very touching, edifying sight it is—the poor peasants in their coarse cloaks and hobnailed shoes, standing in princely halls before the Belvedere Apollo, and the Sistine Madonna;—but all other buildings that would minister to the intellectual wants of the people are closed. The great libraries are inaccessible; the lecture rooms are shut; everything like labor is put aside. The day is a holiday, in the ancient Roman sense.

Custom with us devotes the first day of the week to religion. Let us accept the decree. But religion alters its methods to suit the time, and adopts in different periods different modes of accomplishing its ends. When religion was regarded—as it still is by the larger portion of Christendom—as a device for rescuing the human soul from the peril of the doom of hell, when the attendance on religious ceremonials, as with the Catholics, and listening to sermons, as with the Protestants, constituted the whole of religious duty, it was enough for religious culture to give full heed to these. The Catholics are easily satisfied, a single devout performance of the mass or of whatever other sacrament was appointed being the essence of piety; as that performance occupied but a few minutes, the claims of religion were met by the consecration of a very small portion of the twenty-four hours. With the Protestants the exigencies of religion are less easily complied with. Prayers, sermons, catechisms, Sunday-schools, Bible reading, and meditation take time; the best hours of the day are consumed in exercises, the object whereof is to put men and women in the way of their salvation. And as these exercises have no assigned or assignable limit, but can be multiplied and extended indefinitely, the whole available portion of the day is hardly too much for the duties of piety.

But this conception of religion is weakening fast. Thoughtful people have deliberately dismissed it as obsolete and irrational. Thoughtless people have dismissed it as tedious and unprofitable. Though the provision for spiritual redemption after the old Protestant fashion is notoriously inadequate to the population, supposing all desirous of availing themselves of it. Complaints are made that the provision made is not used; the churches are not filled; the preachers have their audiences; a handful only meet at the Lord's table. Religion, it is generally felt, must be more generously interpreted. To go to mass or confession is not all of religion, if it be any genuine part of it. To attend meeting, to listen to sermons on any theme whatever, to read chapters of the Bible, to pray in public or private, to go through the ceremony of meditation, is not all of religion, if it be any genuine part of it. Religion is felt to be not a ceremonial thing either for the body or the mind, but a vital thing for the whole rational being; not a theological, but a practical business; and, therefore, the religious use of the Sunday requires a very different employment of the hours from that which is usually prescribed.

Let us give a little thought to this matter. Religion, let us say, is the concurrence of the human with the superhuman mind; the intercourse of the mortal with immortal principles. In this sense it must be regarded, under several aspects, as a complex thing.

The first and most obvious part of religion is the devotional. This commits men to acts of worship, to offices of contemplation, praise, prayer, aspiration which have as their end the exaltation of desire, the elevation of the feelings above the ordinary levels of thought, and the quickening into activity of that hunger and thirst after divine things which, like the hart's panting after the water-brooks, indicates a present need of spiritual refreshment. This is the primary element in all religion; without it there is, properly speaking, no religion, for there is no consciousness of deeper wants, no sense of ideal possibilities, no conception of a difference between the above and the below, the part and the whole; without it there is no faith, no hope, no longing. In all time, religion has made great account of worship and the means toward it. To give full and touching expression to the desire that already burned in the soul, to awaken what was dormant, to create it when non-existent, strengthen it when feeble, steady it when flickering, has ever been religious endeavor. In effecting this fine purpose, it has called in art in its most imposing and fascinating forms, music, vocal and instrumental, painting and sculpture, and, above all, architecture with its all but infinite resources.

But the offices of worship cannot occupy any length of time. The expression of spiritual desire is of necessity brief and transient. It is too intense an exercise to be sustained many moments. The effort of genuine prayer is exhausting to cultivated and ideal minds; to others it is almost impracticable. The sum of pure worship among men is small at the best. On the other hand the impression and creation of spiritual desire cannot be insisted on at length by reason of its wearisomeness. The work of awakening or stimulating devout feeling is more easily overdone than any other; a sense of fatigue soon counteracts the finest influences. It is evident that a very small part of the Sunday could be devoted to this. To associate purely spiritual emotions with any special day has its dangers; to give over to the outward demonstration of them a considerable part of the day is little less than fatal to their existence. It is quite probable that the low state of spiritual desire in Christendom is due to the laborious working of the machinery that was constructed for the purpose of producing it. The Church in its anxiety to make men devout has made them indevout. It has overdone the matter in both ways; in the way of expression and the way of stimulant. The symbols of expression go very far in advance of the feelings they are meant to voice; and the machinery for impression is so complicated and artificial that it is only by accident that it performs its work. It must be a singularly rich, urgent, and enthusiastic soul that can fill out with sincere emotion the liturgies, and chants, and hymns of the usual Episcopal service; and it must be a very strong soul that can preserve any genuine emotion at all under the weight of the cumbrous and monotonous apparatus of worship. But even were it otherwise; suppose the service to be perfectly successful in carrying out its intention; and suppose that every man and woman in the great city availed themselves of the weekly opportunity to aspire and inspire,—even then the time occupied by this holy service would be but a very small fragment of the hours between sunrise and sunset. It is because the churches do so little that they are so long about it. If they achieved their design they need be open scarcely an hour.

We commune with divine things otherwise than through the soul. The conscience has also its part to perform, and to perform it well must have its portion of the time set apart for religion. The perfect being presents himself not only as the eternal beauty to be sought after with longing, but also as the eternal justice that is to be sought after by exercise of the moral nature. The divine righteousness or rightness, the order and harmony which excite our moral admiration, are a part, and an essential part, of our conception of the perfect being; and these are apprehended not through liturgies, or chantings, or prayers, or hymns, but through the reason that studies the moral laws and conditions of life. The Sunday is the time when these laws and conditions can be studied without interruption on the part of temporal concerns. The moral order and its requirements are pushed aside by the crowd of busy affairs. They who are interested in their consideration have no leisure or quiet of mind during the six working days of the week; but on Sunday the hours are all their own. Then they can meet and discuss, and listen to thoughtful disquisitions, and take up one by one the problems that are raised by society, and weigh the principles that lie beneath the movements that go on around them,—movements in the community, the State, the nation. The Sunday should be rightfully made the reformer's day; a time for considering the grave issues in society, poverty, crime, the proper treatment of the weak, the insane, the savage, the rights and wrongs of women, of the negro, the Indian, the Chinaman, the questions in debate between capital and labor, the redemption of the demoralized classes,—in short everything that concerns the establishment of equity among men. A day for charitable deliberation and work, the philanthropist's own day, as such should Sunday be regarded. The churches, it is notorious, pass these questions by as unsuited to the sanctuary. If treated by clergymen they are treated outside, in lecture-rooms, and on secular days. But secular days are full of other matters; the Sunday is disengaged. The clergy, as a rule, are incompetent to handle the problems of social economy. They can be dealt with only by persons specially equipped by study or natural qualification,—men who have no leisure during the week. The number of such is very small; their meetings and discussions would engage no considerable portion of any community; but the recognition of their full right to hold meetings and carry on discussions, and in the name of religion, would indicate an important change in public sentiment.

But religion has its intellectual side also, which is not presented in sermons of theology, and discourses setting forth the creed. To discover truth, the actual truth respecting the world we live in, its forces, laws, effects, and causes, is a deep concern of religion. "God is Light." To say that all this light shines in a special revelation, and that the study of this revelation is the way to receive it, that the revelation is in the hands of the Church and its ministers, and that therefore attendance on the Church and its ministers is the sole duty of the truth seeker, is to say what is unworthy of the least attention. It is no heresy now to believe that truth is larger than any or all professed revelations; that the doors of all the churches on earth do not furnish free access to it; that the ministers of all the faiths on earth comprise but a portion of its servants. The independent thinker, the man of science, the earnest man of letters, the student of social economy, of history, of languages, are also ministers in the service of truth, and should have their opportunity, if they wish it, to investigate and report. The public libraries should be open to them, and facilities granted without condescension, as to men who seek and communicate what it deeply concerns all to know. In Paris, I am informed, lectures have from time to time, with how much regularity I know not, or with how much system, been given to working-men on Sundays, and to others whose weekly occupations deprived them of leisure for mental culture. In New York such lectures should be regularly instituted and conducted with as much ability as circumstances allow. Religion, pledged to discover and impart the truth, should charge itself with this duty, and grudge no hours of its precious day to those who undertake to unfold the great revelation.

But this is not all. The heart, too, has its interest in the full expression and culture of religion. The heart stands for love, for personal affection, without which religion is very incomplete. "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he has not seen?" asks the beloved disciple. A religion of ceremony and doctrine is a meagre one indeed. No better religious use can be made of Sunday than in the cultivation of home and social affections. One feature of the day with all who have homes should be a sweet, genial home life. On Sunday the father has an opportunity to become acquainted with his children, their disposition, taste, and acquirement, and that opportunity should be improved. On Sunday the mother has an opportunity to enjoy her children such as is denied her by the incessant cares of every day. On Sunday the children are free to give themselves up to affectionate intercourse with each other and their parents. It is a domestic holiday. The merchant closes his store, the banker his office, the manufacturer his mill, the editor his sanctum, the school-book is laid by, the ball, the hoop, the pestilent velocipede are still, and leisure is given to read pleasant stories, play quiet games, practise ingenious amusements, learn pretty arts, cultivate elegant tastes, and cherish in many ways that sweet intimacy on which happiness and virtue so much depend. Modern civilization in some of its daily aspects seems to be almost fatal to home life in a great city, and to the influences that proceed from it. The bond of mutual trust and dependence is loosened, or, rather, is never formed. Children grow up without reverence, love, or kindness. The household becomes a group of individuals, with little cohesion or accountability, and the results appear at last in indifference and alienation. It is a sad condition of things, and where the remedy is to be found who shall say? But something might be effected, could it be once for all fairly understood that the duties of Sunday were to be discharged quite as much at home as at church; and were to be discharged at home, not by diligent use of Bible and catechism, but by free and affectionate intercourse between all the members.

Society is deeply concerned in the culture of the social feelings. A portion of the Sunday hours might be profitably devoted to the cementing of acquaintanceships, the ripening of friendships, the formation of pleasant intimacies, the explanation of misunderstandings, the removal of causes of bitterness, the widening and deepening of sympathy. Social festivity is not out of place, for this means fellowship, though, it may be, on a low plane. Anything that is not absolutely wild, and vicious, and demoralizing, is better than the dry, stiff, unsocial usage that prevails now. The Puritan tradition, which, however scoffed at by the masses of the people, lingers with people professing to be religious, is as fatal to the generous culture of the social feelings as it is to the generous culture of the mind; and so long as that tradition lasts, the heart of the home and the heart of brotherhood will languish.

See now what we have arrived at. To make a religious use of Sunday, in a true sense, we must open the reform clubs, the libraries, the galleries, and schools of art; we must relax the austerities of domestic and social life, and put people in natural relations with their human world. More than this need not be claimed; but so much as this should be insisted on. A distinguished professor in the University of Oxford, England, gives it as his opinion that America needs competent teaching. To this we may add, that America needs the unrestricted use of those hours of the week in which the results of the best teaching can be appropriated.

It is urged that the Sunday is needed for rest, and the suggestions made above involve the labor of many who require repose. That is true; all cannot rest at the same time; unless some worked, existence would not grow. To be true to the Puritan tradition a general inactivity must be the enforced rule. The groom in the stable, the cook in the kitchen, the man-servant and the maid-servant, must be released from service; the ox must be allowed to lie idle in the shed; the horse to stand unused in the stall. Life must run as low as the necessity for preserving life shall permit. But this rule makes simply unobtainable to multitudes the rest they require. The laboring man needs with his family the rest of the country or the park. He cannot get these because the public conveyances are stopped. The citizen needs the rest of ennobling thought from some favorite teacher; he cannot have it because grooms and drivers are forbidden to ply their occupation. The merchant or tradesman sighs for the rest of literary recreation; he must go without it because the attendants and janitors of public libraries are forbidden to go upon duty. The jaded clerk, or artisan, pines for the rest that comes to him when he listens to the strains of music; but concerts are prohibited, and conservatories are shut. Many, no doubt, require the rest of inaction, simply repose—the quiet of sitting still, or of sleep. They are too tired for occupation of any kind, even if they have the taste for any. Let the desire of such be indulged. But it is not the desire of all, or of the most. It should be less and less the desire of any. Rest from toil—that, indeed, all need, and nearly all wish; but the employment that is not toil, the labor that is sweet, cheering, tranquillizing, is of the nature of relief, and this should be placed within reach of all who can enjoy it. There is no excess of culture in our communities; there is none too much desire for culture. To awaken more is a duty we owe to society; to suffer what there is to decline, would be nothing less than guilt in view of the exigencies of our civilization. If any class must be sacrificed to another, the class that is of least value to the intellectual and moral elevation of society must be offered up. The indulgence of the animal is of less importance than the welfare of the man.

The question of Sunday amusements has not been fairly raised. The number that require amusement on Sunday is small, and the amusements thus far presented are not such as are required. The rich do not need Sunday amusements, for they have amusements enough during the week. The expensive opera, their pet luxury, can plead no right to admission to the day that belongs, so far as amusement is concerned, to the people whom its cost excludes.

The high-priced theatre where comfortable people can find entertainment six evenings out of the seven, is equally an intrusion upon a day when its devotees do not require it, and others cannot share it. On the other hand, the vicious and low-lived do not need Sunday amusements, for their whole existence is one of pleasure; amusement to them means immorality and degradation. The vulgar theatre, the cheap concert saloon, the low dance or gaming-house, has the barest right to be on any terms, and should have no title to admission to hours which the common consent holds sacred to the highest interests of man, to a demand on the part of citizens that the law against such places should be enforced, I have no objection to make. They would have no right to be where they are, even were they in themselves worthy of support. They—and the same is true of operatic managers, and the other caterers to the passion, for entertainment—have come in under false pretences, covertly, and in violation of the statute that represents the will of the community. To stop their encroachments, and warn them off the ground they stealthily occupy, is but just. How far amusements are needed for the rest and recreation of the people has not been decided, has not been so much as discussed. If any amusements are needed, what kind of amusements will best meet the object in view, is a matter that only a nice deliberation can determine. The means of providing such amusements as may be deemed salutary, is another question which by no means answers itself, and is by no means easy of answer. The discussion has not yet been opened; and it is not fair that it should be anticipated and prejudged by people, who, having at heart no grave common interest but simply their own professional profits, undermine the action of the popular will. The hall must be cleared before the debate can begin. The shanties must be swept away before the new structure can be commenced, or even the proper site for it can be ascertained. The beneficial influence of amusements need not be called in question; the right to introduce them on Sunday may be frankly conceded; the expediency of relieving the enforced tedium of the day by innocent entertainments may be cordially admitted, and yet a determination held to keep off everything that does not serve the health, sanity, and happiness of people whose lives are destitute of sweet sunshine, and who cannot afford to lose in unnatural excitements a particle of the nervous force they possess. The moral tone of a community is sacred above all things, and so long as it can be preserved it should be.

To those who claim the right to do as they will on Sundays as on other days, it is answer enough, that no one has the right to do as he wishes on other days. The expressed will of the community all must obey. They may alter it if they can; they may affect the mode of its expression by rational means; they may educate the people, if they choose to call it so, in other opinions and beliefs; they may avail themselves of every honest advantage society gives them, to introduce other customs, and show by practice a better way than the old. But with us, the popular will, formed without constraint, and expressed in legal forms, is for the time being supreme. Few of us have all we want; not all of us have the special thing we want, though it be innocent and unobjectionable in itself. But we must, patiently or impatiently, bide our time. That the sentiment of the community is Episcopalian or Puritan matters nothing, so long as it is the sentiment of the community. In a free society everything exists by permission of the social power, which has a perfect right to put a stop to whatever in its judgment is noxious to the general weal. If Mr. Talmage can effect the revolution he meditates in popular opinion, every theatre in the city may be closed in obedience to statutes made for the purpose, and no complaint on the ground of infringement of liberty will be valid. For such abuses as exist, society is responsible; it is responsible likewise for the abolition of such as are put away.

The restrictions on Sunday were deliberately imposed, and are still generally ratified, though the force of them is gradually weakening under the pressure of popular opinion. The statutes enforcing them express the settled conviction of the great majority of the people. That they voice the sentiment of a narrow, austere, and arbitrary class, and are in themselves irrational, may be true; but that does not alone invalidate them; so long as they stand on the books they must be respected. We may enlarge their spirit and change their letter; but having done so, we shall expect people to abide by the alteration till it in turn is modified. At present the first condition of any improvement is a conscientious respect for the rules that exist. The Sunday is now the conceded property of the religious community. To take it away either violently or by any sort of indirection is an infringement of rights. The most we can do is to enlarge its privileges by degrees.

It would be a great thing to change the popular feeling in regard to the Sunday, to set it in a new light before the religious world. To restore to it the cheerfulness that it had in the early days when it was deemed wicked to fast, or to pray on the knees, on the day which commemorated the Lord's rising from the dead, would in itself be our immense gain. To make of Sunday the great day, the day of emancipation from care, the day of resurrection from gloom and toil, the day of opportunity and privilege for mind, and heart, and soul, the day of true recreation and refreshment, would be a thing too fine to be hoped for. Yet it will never be what it ought to be till it is all this, till its coming is welcomed as a boon and a blessing, its hours filled with wholesome enjoyment, and its influence made a lasting possession for good. With those who protest against the abuse of so many and so precious hours, we make no remonstrance. But we would suggest that the present disuse of these same precious hours is an evil to be lamented as deeply prejudicial to the best interests of humanity; and we would plead earnestly for some rational use of the day which will render it serviceable to its purpose, and will avail as nothing else will to correct both mischiefs. For when we can show a worthy use of the day, they who disuse it will be shamed, and they who abuse it will be under condemnation.

FERENCZ DEAK, the Hungarian patriot, tells an amusing story about the troubles of journalists in Hungary during the Absolutist reign. Baron Sigmond Kemeny was the editor of a paper for more than twenty years, and nearly every night he was roused from his sleep by a commissioner of censure, and told that something must be taken out of his paper. The editor bore the affliction patiently for a long time; but one night about midnight he was shaken from his dreams, and told that his leading article must come out, or the paper would be confiscated. Losing all patience, the editor told the commissioner to confiscate it in God's name, if he wished to, and turning over went to sleep again. The astonished commissioner waddled back to his chief, and told him with horror in his eye that not only had the editor spoken disrespectfully of the censor, but had actually begun snoring before the worshipful commissioner could get out of the room. "There must be something in the background," muttered the censor. "It will certainly never do to confiscate the paper," and the editor was left in peace ever afterward.

WITHSTANDING TEMPTATION.—A member of the colored church was the other evening conversing earnestly with an acquaintance, and seeking to have him change into better paths; but the friend said that he was too often tempted to permit him to become a Christian.

"What's yer backbone, dat ye can't rose up and stand temptation?" exclaimed the good man. "I was dat way myself once. Right in dis yere town I had a chance to steal a pa'r of boots—mighty nice ones, too. Nobody was dar to see me, and I reached out my hand and de debbil said take 'em. Den a good spirit whispered fur me to let dem boots alone."

"An you didn't take 'em?"

"No, sah—not much. I took a pa'r o' cheap shoes off de shelf, 'an left dem boots alone!"

WHAT IS THE difference between forms and ceremonies? You sit upon forms and stand upon ceremonies.

THE FAR EAST SPEAKS OUT.

CHRISTIANITY AS SEEN BY A PAGAN IN JAPAN.

WHY JAPANESE LITERARY MEN OPPOSE THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

Mr. Jasui Chiuhei, a Japanese scholar, has published at Yokohama, under the title of Bemmo, or an Exposition of Error, an elaborate attack upon the Christian Scriptures and the Christian religion. It is fortified with a preface by Shimadzu Saburô, and translated into English by Mr. Gubbins of Yokohama. Saburô is a brother of the late Prince of Satsuma, and in his preface he informs us that "Jasui is a man of years, and one of the learned men of the day. He has outgrown all desire to hold office under the government; but being unable to restrain his solicitude for the welfare of his country, and his patriotic desire to combat false doctrine, this book is the result." The volume is divided into five parts: the first criticising the Old Testament; the second and third, the New; the fourth, comparing Christianity and other religions; and the fifth, expounding the system of Nature. The reasons for resisting Christianity, as stated in the preface, are remarkable:—

"Those of our countrymen who admire the marvelous acts and skill of Western nations have without exception carried their admiration as far as believing in the religion of Jesus, and some there are of these who are for extending this religion throughout the country, which is a great evil. As for that, the errors of the religion of Jesus are, of course, so palpable that they do not require to be exposed; but the doctrines of this religion are so clever, plausible, and insinuating that men are apt to be led astray by them. Should these, therefore, be left unrefuted on the ground that they need no refutation, the followers of this religion will increase in strength and influence more and more, until at last they will lead the whole nation with them, and cause them to submit to their doctrine; and then there will be no putting a stop to its power.

"The basis of the religion of Jesus is the worship of heaven. The heaven is a fixed principle. The submission of the child to its parent and of the servant to his master are likewise fixed principles. Submission to these principles is rewarded; their transgression is followed by punishment. Heaven thus rewards men good or evil according to their deeds. If servant and child by worshipping heaven, and treating master and parent, though these exist, as though they did not, seek to gain a reward for their conduct—this is rejecting the principle of heaven. The effect of this will be that the principle of master and servant will cease to exist, the affection between parent and child will die out, and then where is the place to which disorder will not reach? No time then must be lost in exposing the falseness of this religion."

The objections of Jasui Chiuhei to the Christian religion are so strange to us that we copy from the Herald Mail the following extract from his work:—

"From Adam to Noah were ten generations—about two thousand years. Now Jehovah saw that the people of the earth were wicked, and he repented having made them, and resolved to destroy everything down even to the very insects of the earth. But he was pleased with the uprightness of one man, Noah, and caused him beforehand to construct a large ship three hundred feet long. Noah entered this ship, taking with him his wife and children, and a pair, male and female, of all living things. Then the great deep was divided and broken up, and a great rain fell for forty days and nights, and the water was fifteen feet above the highest mountains under the whole heaven, and the earth was covered for one hundred and fifty days. All living things died. The waters then retired, and Noah's three sons were permitted to live in different places."

"What a fearful act of violence on the part of Jehovah! However great may have been the wickedness of the world, all cannot possibly have been so depraved. There must have been some good people among them. Without teaching these people what was right, and making no distinction between great and small offences, suddenly, when they were unprepared, he divided the great deep and caused them all to be drowned—sparing neither beasts nor birds. Having an affection for Noah, he caused him to build a ship beforehand, and thus enabled him to escape the catastrophe. With such a disposition as is shown by the foregoing, can this be called the Ruler of the Universe? However, this Jehovah, speaking in an arrogant and imperious manner, says: 'I am one that makes no distinctions between men!'"

"Supposing the water of the flood to have been (as is stated in the 'Foreign Book') fifteen feet above the tops of the mountains under the whole heaven, the whole earth would have become an ocean. How is it possible that the people of China could have been able, by making nests and holes to live in, to escape the disaster? It must be that the words 'under the whole heaven' refer only to the small area of country comprised in Egypt, the Red Sea, and Judea. Now the countries in this area lie low, and, moreover, are situated between the two rivers Indus and Nile, and it is possible that at the time of the flood the people of these countries, being yet uncivilized, fell into the water and were drowned, and that one man, Noah, happening to be wealthy, built a large ship, and put all his effects into it, and that when the flood came upon that region he got into his ship, and escaped the general ruin. The teacher of this religion who lived after those times, wishing to intimidate people by borrowing the name of Jehovah, invented this lying fabrication, and made a supernatural occurrence out of it.

"In Judea there dwelt a man named Jesus Christ, who preached the religion of Jehovah. According to his teaching: 'The master and the parent are only temporal, the real master and real parent being in heaven. Jehovah is this, and I am his son. He sent me to save the world. Therefore he loves me; and he will give to those who love him eternal life and an imperishable crown.'

"Why are the master and the parent made only temporal? My parents have the power to give me my spiritual nature; my master has power to cause me to live or die, but he has no power to do the same with my spiritual nature; so that a man's body is temporal, but his spiritual nature is real. Therefore it is the doctrine of heaven to extol the real and to despise the temporal.

"The teaching of Jesus has the effect of making sons show a want of affection for their fathers, and daughters for their mothers, and it creates estrangement between a wife and her husband's mother. However, Jesus, knowing that it was impossible to destroy the bond of affection which unites the members of a family, established his teaching to a certain extent on the principle of filial affection; but fearing lest this should exceed the love felt for himself, he said: 'I do not like the love for parents to exceed the love felt for myself, or the love of parents for their children to exceed the love felt for myself.' Jesus was once engaged in conversation with some persons when his mother and brother came, wanting to speak to him. On some one telling him of this, he replied: 'Whom do you call my mother, and whom do you call my brethren?' His motive in acting thus, was, I think, in teaching his followers to make everything as open and public as possible, he being unaware at the time that he had fallen into a false belief. Again, the father of one of his disciples having died, his son asked to be allowed to go and bury him. Jesus refused him this permission, saying that he was his disciple, and that he was to suffer the dead to bury their dead, meaning thereby, that those who buried the father would die also in like manner, and further telling him that if he obeyed him he would live forever. And when it came to the question of men's (relations with their) lords and masters, Jesus caused these to be treated just like other people—to be looked upon, in fact, as outsiders. And he did not stop here; but if there were sovereigns who did not believe in him, he considered these as his enemies, and he desired to be victorious over all these, and make them believe in him. He regarded the officer who received the customs dues as his enemy, and in the same light as a thief, and if this principle be followed up, it comes to this: that his sovereign was also looked upon by him as the same. Speaking of himself, he said he was the Son of God, and therefore that there was none above him in the world. It follows, therefore, that he treated rulers as of no account. In consequence of this it was that his follower said in answer to one who told him that he should obey the ruler of the country: 'I know of no sovereign and of no other gods. I only reverence and worship the God in heaven. I pay my share of the sum of taxes to the emperor, and in doing so I acknowledge him as ruler, but I do not bow myself down before him. In thus paying him my taxes, and acknowledging him as ruler, I confer an obligation on him.' Ah! Confucius established the doctrines of 'Chiu' and 'Ko' as the basis of his teaching. And when these doctrines are not followed, master and fathers are sometimes even killed.

"According to the teaching of Jesus, the master and parent are only temporal, and inferior to the 'real master' and 'real parent'—and the effect of belief in this teaching is that 'temporal masters' and 'temporal parents' are sinners against; while 'real masters' and 'real parents' are loved. By this means great happiness in heaven is secured, and in proportion as the sin on the one hand becomes greater, so, on the other hand, does the future happiness increase. If people be led in this belief, there is no evil which they will shrink from committing. They will do whatever is for their own convenience; and this being the case, those who believe in this religion, even if they disobey master and parent, do not act contrary to the teaching of Jesus, and do not mind throwing away their lives so long as they do not forfeit eternal glory. When people reach this stage of infatuation, no punishment has any terrors for them, and rank and wealth are of no account with them. Truly it must be perplexing for masters and parents who believe in this religion!

"Confucius says: 'I cannot yet understand the world I live in; how is it possible for me to know the next?' The question of the after state not being fully explained by Confucius, is consequently not understood by those who rank next to him in understanding. Jesus says much on the subject, and speaks of the future world as of a place in which he has been; and if (for the sake of argument) we suppose what he says to be true, the immortality he speaks of must have reference only to the soul.

"The story of Jesus by shedding his blood atoning for the sins of the world, of his return to life on the third day after his death, and of his ascending into heaven at midday, are simply inventions of his followers. In the time of Jesus, Buddhism prevailed in the part of the country to the south of where he lived, while the religion of the Romans flourished in the north; and in both of these religions idols were worshipped. These religions were at the zenith of their power. Jesus was then young, but, possessed of a powerful intellect, he successfully opposed them with the worship of a living God. He wished to abolish these religions and make men believe in him. On looking through the Bible we find that most of it is taken up with the struggle carried on (by him) with these two. It was in consequence of this that he said: 'I am not come to bring peace into the world, but to create strife.' Again, by telling his followers of the punishment which those who did not believe in him would receive, and the prosperity which would accrue to those who did believe in him, he strengthened them in their convictions, and thus they assisted one another in opposing the other religions. Standing firm in their own belief, they labored strenuously to prove the falseness of the other doctrines. Consequently, the adherents of these last hated the followers of Jesus as though they had been demons or noxious reptiles, and these latter exalted Jesus to the position of master among themselves, and wished to make him king, and therefore it was that the ruler of that country was offended with them. This is the cause of Jesus being crucified.

"If Jesus had been desirous of sacrificing his own life to atone for the sins of the whole world, it stands to reason that on the night preceding his death he would have been composed, and have experienced no mental suffering. But it appears that, on the contrary, the thought of death gave him great pain. He passed the night without sleeping, and even kept waking up his disciples, who were in attendance on him, to converse with them. Added to this there is the fact that Judas, coveting the sum of thirty rios, sold him, and thus he did not deliberately and of his own free will give himself up to be killed. Jesus, not knowing that he was to be betrayed, selected the very man who afterward betrayed him, and made him one of his twelve disciples.

"His ignorance in this respect is stupendous. And judging from this instance of his ignorance, how could he possibly know that his death would be an atonement for the sins of the whole world? It is impossible that he could have known. When he appeared to his disciples on his return to life after death, he taught them differently (to what he did before his death). What Jesus said about living forever without dying, he said with reference to the soul. Now if the body be once destroyed, it cannot be renovated. Jesus taught his disciples on this principle, and stated plainly that if the body be once destroyed it cannot be renovated. However, he nevertheless restored his own body to life again. In thus renovating his body did he not place a high value on it, to the neglect of his soul?

"Jesus intended to ascend into heaven. Now, the heaven is a void space. Even if he did raise his body again to life (and ascended into the void), he would have had nowhere to place his legs. There is no use for the body in heaven. This is clear; consequently Jesus, when he was dying, cried out in a loud voice: 'Father, to thee I render my body!' Supposing that Jesus had really returned to life and shown this miracle, he would have done well to have mixed with the people in the world, and made more of them believe in his religion. But he only spoke (after his return to life) to his disciples and some old women. It was this which made people in general doubt the truth of the affair.

"In leading men's minds astray by the display of supernatural things, in despising the Chiu and Ko doctrine, and exalting their own gods, in regarding the period of life as of little value, and looking to happiness after death as the all-important end, and in encouraging men by the hope of a residence in heaven, and frightening them at the same time by the prospect of hell, the teaching of Jesus is the same as that of Buddhism. The only difference between the two is the Buddhist principle of transmigration, which is not mentioned by Jesus. The practice of Buddhism in this country is of old date; and why should the latter oppose the teaching of Jesus (since the two are so similar)?

"The above is the opinion of ignorant people.

"Now there may be some resemblance between Buddhism and the teaching of Jesus; but on comparing the two (although they are both bad) we find this difference: that the evil of the first is slight, while that of the second is great; that the one is harmless, and the other injurious. The teachers of Buddhism say: 'Leave your parents' care, and lead a virtuous life away from the world.' But nevertheless parents' care is not despised, but repaid. Jesus, however, makes the master and parent only temporal. Buddhism enjoins men to pray for the future welfare of the master and parent. Thus the 'Tsui-yen' is found in Buddhism. In the teaching of Jesus everything finishes with death; no masses or prayers are said for the dead. If we look at this, it is like the conduct of dogs and horses. Buddhism has been practised for a long time in this country, and now it has learned to obey the country's laws. The teaching of Jesus is arrogant and boasting. It does not bow to the authority of the sovereign of any country. It is not for me to explain these things for the benefit of sovereigns in general; but what I fear (in the event of this religion being adopted) is lest the customs of the country should be abolished, and disturbance created. Jehovah called himself the jealous God, and did not permit his followers to worship any other God. Jesus strengthened this law more and more, and swore that he would destroy other gods. It was therefore that he said: 'I am not come to bring peace into the world, but to create strife.' Should then this religion be adopted, the shrines of Jimmu Tenno, and of the various emperors and nobles, and those dedicated to patriotic and illustrious men, will have to be destroyed, and the whole nation, down to the ordinary samurai and lower classes, will have to give up offering masses for the souls of their parents and ancestors. How could our customs, on which the Chiu doctrine exercises such a great influence, endure this?

"The arguments on which Christianity rests are very shallow, and the advantages to be gained by its practice are shown as the first consideration. People fear death; therefore, in teaching them, eternal life is held out as an inducement. People like wealth; they are therefore urged on and tempted by the promise of imperishable riches. Those who do not believe in this religion are frightened by the threat of unquenchable fire. Those people who love profit, if they be lead away, deceived by this religion, by encouraging one another will soon acquire numbers and strength, and joining issue with those who worship other gods will try and make them believe in their religion, and fighting to the death will combat them. And it is to be feared that their attack will be fiercer than the resistance offered to the teaching of Jesus by the followers of Buddhism. If Christianity be arrested midway in its progress, and prohibited, the followers of this religion will prove stubborn, and resisting the authorities, will stop only when they have got all that they wish for. The rebels of Amakusa who rose against the government, some time back, are a proof of this. If, therefore, this religion be once allowed to spread, afterwards, even if it wished to put a stop to it, this religion cannot be prohibited without putting to death its followers. If it be asked why, the reason is that the followers of this religion believe that if they die for Jesus their future bliss in heaven will be greater. Care must accordingly be taken.

"I have heard that the followers of this religion in Western countries have become divided into two parties, the old and the new; that in America they have become divided into twenty-five different sects, and that these are all at variance with each other, and will none of them give in on a single point. I have also been given to understand that when people quarrel on any other cause than religion, overtures for a reconciliation from one party to another are accepted; but that if armies are opposed in religious strife, no submission is accepted by either adversary from his opponent, and no quarter being given, one or the other is exterminated. Now religion secures the proper government of nations, and causes tranquillity to reign in the world; but now-a-days religion produces strife, and people fighting for their respective beliefs kill, and end by exterminating, one another. How can this be called religion? These twenty-five sects (which exist in America) all equally have Jesus as their basis. The differences on account of which they quarrel must be very slight; but still they kill each other, and give no quarter. Buddhism is what these Christians call a worship of images, and they wish to attack it and destroy it altogether. Again, there is the Shintô religion, the strength of which is small; but the sects of this religion are all founded on the worship of the gods. If these three religions be carried on together there will be no putting an end to the strife which will ensue."—N. Y. Sun, Nov. 6.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The assembling of Congress has been attended with more than usual bustle and excitement, owing largely to the change in the political complexion of the House, and an anticipation of a turn in the tide of politics. The prevailing impression is that the session will be considerably taken up by investigations into supposed peculations of office-holders of the dominant party; but this is merely surmise.

The event of events now is, of course, the President's message. The foremost measures urged in this remarkable paper are almost identical with those forming the declared political platform of THE INDEX. The maintenance of secular free schools; the prohibition of the granting of any public money to religious institutions, and the taxation of church property, are the key-notes of the message; and in his recapitulation of the questions deemed "of vital importance which may be legislated upon and settled at this session," the President devotes to these subjects three of the five points enumerated. The message has been generally received with surprise, notwithstanding that the now famous Des Moines speech called attention to the same topics. Those unaccustomed to reflection on the subjects presented, confine themselves to a discussion of the minor points touched upon, such as the Cuban question, and the Mexican border troubles; and you may, perhaps, have noticed a similar tendency on the part of some of the newspapers of the country, notably the New York Times, which, in resuming the message, skips over the vital issues treated of with an intellectual acrobacy wonderful to behold. The language of the message is clear and unmistakable, and the issues presented for consideration are precisely those, to which THE INDEX has been laboring to direct public attention. That attention is now compelled in a manner and from a source which cannot be treated with indifference.

That these questions will be settled, however, during the present session of Congress, there can be no hope; but that they must be settled at no very distant day, in some way (and "sequestration through blood" is not a scare-crow suggestion) cannot, in the light of history and reason, be doubted. This Congress, as a whole, knows far more of Bourbon whiskey than it does of political or social problems, and it seems strange that the President should expect it to legislate upon his suggestions, even if they are not presented as party measures. If they should be made such, as some suppose they will be, we shall at last have some definite political issues before the country. The present parties have whittled their differences down to the little end of nothing, and it is time either that both were decently buried, or that one or the other take up some living principles as a platform.

It is very doubtful whether President Grant is willing to assume the thorough and consistent advocacy of the total separation of Church and State, as demanded by THE INDEX; and it has been suggested that the attitude assumed by Harper's Weekly more nearly represents him. The Harpers attend the same denominational church that the President does, and the malignant cartoons appearing in their Weekly are dictated not by the spirit which seeks to keep Church and State separate, but by that of sectarian animosity. Methodism as a State religion might be as bad as Catholicism. However, the charge that the President is endeavoring, by the course he has taken on this subject, to secure popular favor for a renomination, is manifestly unjust, for he certainly could not imagine that this message would meet with general applause. If it is a "bid," it is a blunder; if it is an honest speech, it is a heroism.

I need hardly call your attention to ex-Speaker Blaine's proposed amendment to Article I. of the Amendments to the Constitution, touching on these same questions; but I would note that the amendment proposed is insufficient, as it does not by any means cover all the ground, and is badly worded. If the Constitution is to be amended in this respect, let the amendment be thorough, comprehensive, and unequivocal, so that no room can possibly be left for future clerical encroachments.

The demand for the disestablishment of the Church in America will receive a new impetus from this agitation; but it is vain to expect an immediate settlement of the question. The grasp of the Church party on the law, the custom, and the purse of the country is too strong and too profitable to be yielded up without a struggle. Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, of Brooklyn, who represents the average intelligence and spirit of the clerical faction, said last Sunday that "the Bible should not go out of the public schools while there was enough of Plymouth Rock left to make a flint to fire the hearts of the American people!" We shall see. Meanwhile, remember that "the harder the conflict the more glorious the victory."

VINDEX.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 11.

"IS LYING EVER JUSTIFIABLE?"

This question has been given to the Senior Class to discuss in their next Forensic, and is peculiarly pertinent just now. I wish to notice here a bearing of it, that may not be considered by those who are to discuss it,—to make a practical application of it to our every-day life at Harvard.

It is a regulation of college that every man, whether of age or not, whether willing or unwilling, shall attend church every Sunday during the year. I except from the above the Senior Class, whose members, by a regulation that lately went into operation, are exempted from church-going. To secure regular attendance, the student is required to sign, at the end of each year, a solemn affirmation that he has attended morning service every Sunday during the year, and has remained during the entire service. Five absences are sufficient for suspension.

Now, so long as this is a regulation of the college, it is undoubtedly the duty of each student to obey it. But I wish to question the wisdom of such a regulation, and to inquire whether, as an actual fact, it accomplishes the good that the Faculty have in view in enforcing it.

There can be only three reasons for endeavoring to compel students to be religious, as that term is commonly understood, whether or not they are willing; first, the influence of public opinion upon the Faculty; secondly, the desired obedience of the student; and, lastly, his moral welfare.

If the first of these be the predominating influence, and if the pressure of public opinion be what compels the student to attend forms of worship to which he is conscientiously opposed, then there can be no element of right or justice in such requirement; for, in that case, a large number of students from other States come here, not to subject themselves to the authority of the Faculty, but to the particular views of outside persons,—of those who have no right to authority over them. If I, for instance, were compelled to go to church and to prayers, when I believed in neither, primarily because some people in Massachusetts, outside of Harvard, willed that I should go, such compulsion would be worthy of the dark ages. I should simply be forced into a living falsehood to myself. For that falsehood, which half the students of Harvard to-day are actually living, those people whose pressure of opinion causes it will have the sin to bear.

If the regulations requiring attendance at church and prayers originated in the Faculty, uninfluenced by outside pressure, then either the obedience of the student or his moral welfare must have been in view in adopting these regulations. The first of these could not have had much influence, for no Faculty would pass regulations merely because it has the power to do so. In this case, therefore, the moral welfare of the student must be the end in view. Is this end attained? Let us see.

The history of all time shows us that no good ever comes of forcing a man to act contrary to his honest convictions. Now, it is safe to say that a large number of the students of Harvard are conscientiously opposed to the religious forms of to-day. I do not speak of those who object to church and prayers on account of laziness, or from stubbornness in regard to college regulations, but of those who have honestly and conscientiously studied the religions of to-day, and who are opposed to them from principle. The college recognizes the right of each student to attend the exercises of whatever form of worship he may have chosen; so that the Methodist is not compelled to attend religious service with the Baptist, nor the Unitarian with the Catholic, etc. Surely, that large body of students who conscientiously object to all these forms of worship should receive an equal share of consideration. To compel them to attend any of these forms of worship is as unjust as it would be to force a Catholic and a Jew to attend service together.

Such students will be loyal to themselves at any sacrifice. The result is, that at the end of the year they have to choose between expulsion from College and signing their names to an open falsehood. The time-worn maxim, that a forced oath is no oath, causes them to choose the latter. Nor can we blame them. The worst of infidels is he who is infidel to himself.

The fact (for it is a fact beyond denial) that this college regulation yearly requires the men who are noble enough to stand firmly by their convictions to subscribe to wilful falsehood is alarming. It is not too much to say that many men, who, from childhood up, have detested falsehood, have first, under this compulsion of their Alma Mater, subscribed their names to it, and thereby marred the beauty of the noblest element of their manhood,—truth, which when once marred is ruined forever. It is sad beyond expression that the finest institution in our land is, either under the influences of outside pressure or from a mistaken notion of the students' welfare, compelling her students to a life of falsehood here, and sending them forth to expand and develop that life in the world at large. The student never sees the bright side of religion; to him it is only a goad to drive him to acts revolting to his conscience. Can he be expected to reverence such religion hereafter?

In conclusion, if it be the pressure of public opinion that enforces regulations so dreadful in their effects, then, as a student who has earnestly studied these effects, I ask the public to consider that, in exerting the pressure of its opinion, it is digging the grave of our future welfare. If it be the honest convictions of the Faculty that enforce such regulations, I beg their earnest attention to a side of the question which has, perhaps, never presented itself to them.

—L. H. S., in the Harvard Advocate, Nov. 19, 1875.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

STONES FOR BREAD.

BY MRS. D. H. CLARK.

A street that is quaint and olden,
In a city old and quaint:
A gray cathedral frowning—
A niche—and a sculptured saint.

The beauty of solemn arches
Encompasseth it about:
The glory of sunset windows
Is trailing in and out.

Blind, and dumb, and unheeding,
Day after day it stands;
No quiver of white stone eyelids—
No flutter of marble hands!

A brown-haired peasant woman
Is kneeling, in tears and pain;—
For the life of her yearling baby
She prayeth—and all in vain!

"Holy, holy St. Catharine!
Pity a mother's woe!"
No stir of the carved vestments—
No pulsing heart below!

To all the mourning pilgrims
That press the knee-worn stone,
From the rigid lip of the statue
Falleth no healing tone.

Oh wayfarers, bruised and weary!
Oh pilgrims, praying for rest!
Is there life in a sealed fountain?
Is warmth in a marble breast?

Can the stone-set mouth of a statue
Breathe balm that will make you whole?
Or the vacant stare of 'St. Catharine
Shed light on a darkened soul?

FLORENCE, Mass.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 18.

Wm. Lloyd Garrison, $3.20; E. T. Billings, $3.20; John Wetherbee, $3.20; Chas. Graeter, $3.20; Mrs. C. B. Richmond, $3.20; Fred'k Looser, $3.20; Smith Wright, $3.20; M. M. Pratt, $3.20; E. L. Crane, $3.20; S. S. Pierce, $1.60; W. H. Crowell, 80 cents; W. E. Coleman, $1.60; Clark Jilson, $3.25; W. W. Grant, $3.25; J. K. Rose, $6.20; Carl Doeringer, $2; A. K. Barker, 20 cents; Nath. Little, Jr., $10; E. B. Wolcott, $10; Benj. E. Tucker, $66.69; T. W. Higginson, $10; Wm. Dudgeon, $9; S. R. Honey, $9.65; A. S. Brown, $3.40; Miss S. F. Earle, $3.20; Chas. H. Lunt, $3.20; Seth Hunt, $3.20; E. H. Brigham, $3.20; C. T. Simonds, $3.30; N. H. Webster, $4.40; D. B. Allen, $5; J. H. Mason, $3.20; J. W. Sullings, $3.20; M. Smith, $3.20; A. J. Moody, $3.20; J. F. Smith, $1; Nath. Holmes, $3.20; Mrs. W. A. Stebbins, $3.20; J. E. Sutton, $3.20; C. H. Church, $3.20; E. P. Hurlbut, $3.20; P. C. Howland, $3; J. W. Fowler, $5; R. Wilkin, $2; A. B. Bradford, $3.20; W. E. Lukens, $3.20; A. M. Lee, $3.20; J. N. Goodrich, $3.20; Martha White, $1.10; A. Salter, $3.20; J. Richmond, $3.20; J. W. Baillet, 50 cents; G. Mead, $1.60; J. B. Parker, $5; Wm. Smith, $1.60; J. E. Weeden, 50 cents; F. H. Giddings, $5; Mrs. Judson, $3.20; R. J. Wright, 20 cents; C. E. Davis, $1; Jos. Shippen, 10 cents; J. W. Butler, 25 cents; J. W. Chadwick, 25 cents; D. B. Morton, 20 cents; J. A. Calhoun, 10 cents; E. Line, 10 cents; L. D. Boise, $1.70; H. S. Mowry, 5 cents; J. T. Dickens, $3.30; Lizzie B. Attwill, $1.60; Claribel Gerrish, $3.40; S. R. Urbino, $3.20; C. W. Storey, $10; Jane E. Curtis, $1.60; Verein Vorwirts, $3.20; Kilian Bros., $3.20; M. Sanfield, $3.75; P. Plumb, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 23, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

WE ACKNOWLEDGE the receipt of one dollar for the "Holyoake Fund" from Mr. William Dudgeon, of New Hartford, N. Y.

WHEN SO MANY able writers generously coöperate to make THE INDEX what it is, it is no more than fair that we should now and then inform them how their efforts are appreciated by their readers. Hence we quote this passage from a private letter just received: "I and my family regard your paper as being the most readable and ablest journal in this country; and if our Orthodox friends would only read it, they would soon find themselves breathing an atmosphere which they now know nothing about, and one that would soon give them an insight into a higher and purer state of moral goodness."

REV. DAVID H. CLARK informs us that the Florence liberals have completed the organization of their Liberal League. "It is to be known," he says, "as the Northampton Liberal League, which is more comprehensive than if it had been organized in Florence, inasmuch as Florence is included in the town of Northampton. The aim has been to make it, so far as possible, a citizens' movement. It will give the chief prominence to the taxation of church property and the school question for the present, and to this end will endeavor to unite in its work all who favor reformation in those particulars, whether radicals or not. Its officers are E. E. Denniston, President; Col. J. L. Otis, Vice-President; M. L. Dewey, Secretary; Rev. C. B. Ferry (Unitarian), E. C. Davis, and Theodore Demand, Executive Committee."

STUDY WELL such utterances as this one of the Catholic-Bishop McQuaid: "I stand here and say that, unless we bring this thing of the school taxes to the ballot-box, we do not deserve the name of Catholics. It may not be necessary to bring it to the ballot-box; we may, by making a demand, effect a compromise; we may obtain a platform on which we can stand. Politicians will come to us. Irish, German, and American Catholics will not be so patient as their fathers have been. The platform of the schools is not now for us. It is for Jews, for Infidels, for Protestants, but we are under it. Suppose we get strong enough to rise up. Remember, the platform is on us; where will the platform be then? Men will learn that we have something more to do than praying; we must vote, and the laymen must work. There is a jealousy of the priests which will not have force against the earnest, persistent labor of the laymen."

THE FOLLOWING information as to the salaries received by Protestant missionaries may be of interest: "In India the American Board pay their missionaries $1000; the Presbyterian, $1000 to $1080; the Reformed (Dutch), $1100; the Methodist, $1200. In China the American Board pay $900, and in Southern China, $800; the Presbyterian Board $1000, except in Canton, $900; the Methodist, $950; the Baptist $900 and house; the Episcopal, $1000. In regard to single missionaries, the American and Presbyterian Boards each pay two-thirds the salary of a married missionary; the Methodists pay in China, $550, and in India, $1000; the Baptist, $800 and no house; the Episcopal, $600; the Reformed (Dutch), $600. For an unmarried female missionary the American Board pay one-half of the salary of a married man; the Presbyterian Board, from $280 to $600; the Methodist, to China, $475, and India, $600; the Baptist, $400 to $500; the Episcopal, $450; the Reformed (Dutch), $600; the Reformed Presbyterian, $400."

A CARD.

When I consented to become an editorial contributor to THE INDEX, I did so with the full understanding by all parties concerned, that editorial contributors were to be entitled to the freest utterance, and that they alone were to be responsible for whatever might be printed over their own signatures; and I supposed that in case I, in the capacity of editorial contributor, took occasion to criticise associations or persons, newspapers or editors, the parties or party criticised would be allowed free access to the columns of THE INDEX, in case they desired to reply. This was my understanding of the terms upon which I accepted the position of editorial contributor to this paper.

On three occasions (INDEX, Sept. 24, 1874, Oct. 22, 1874, Nov. 18, 1875,) I have referred to the Nation, mentioning its editor by name once or twice, and perhaps oftener. On Nov. 27 he wrote me a private letter, calling me to account for what I had published. I replied to him as follows: "I am glad to be able to guarantee to you free access to the columns of the same paper [INDEX] in case you wish to reply to or comment upon what I have said." Subsequently Mr. Abbot told me he approved this offer of mine, and that he himself had previously offered to Mr. Godkin (the editor of the Nation) to print anything on the subject he might send for publication. Availing himself of Mr. Abbot's offer, and it may be with my guarantee in mind, Mr. Godkin sent a communication to THE INDEX. I wrote a reply to it, and Mr. Abbot accepted both his article and my reply. They both were in type for last week's INDEX, and the forms were all ready for the printer, when, without notice to Mr. Godkin or to me, Mr. Abbot withdrew them. Having left the printing-office on Tuesday afternoon and seen the articles all ready for the forms of THE INDEX, my astonishment and mortification on opening my copy on Wednesday may well be imagined. Mr. Abbot subsequently explained to me that he must decline to publish either article; that at the last moment, on consultation with a friend, he had discovered he was both legally and morally responsible for my statements regarding the Nation and persons connected with it, hitherto published in THE INDEX, and for any statements either Mr. Godkin or I might hereafter make, if he consented to their publication.

Mr. Abbot's legal responsibility is a question upon which lawyers may differ, but it is a question Mr. Abbot should have answered at least to his own satisfaction before he undertook to edit THE INDEX, on the plan offered to and accepted by editorial contributors, and the plan he has followed until now without variation. I never have believed, nor do I now believe, he is legally responsible for the utterances of any one of us. I certainly never would have written a line for THE INDEX had I thought otherwise, and I now most cheerfully pledge myself to protect him to the extent of my ability from all legal consequences arising out of any word of mine printed in this paper. But Mr. Abbot declares with emphasis that he did not suppress the two articles last week in order to escape legal responsibility. On the contrary, he is ready to meet any legal consequences that might follow their publication; and for this most generous evidence of personal friendship I desire to express my hearty appreciation.

Mr. Abbot excluded the two articles, he assures me, solely on the ground that, by consenting to their publication in THE INDEX, he would become morally responsible for the statements they contain. This remarkably sudden and entirely unexpected discovery of his moral responsibility for statements made by editorial contributors (a responsibility repeatedly disavowed by him—see standing notice at head of editorial columns), compels Mr. Abbot to modify his understanding with editorial contributors, without a moment's warning to me, and places me in a painfully embarrassing position. It compels Mr. Abbot to repudiate my "guarantee" to Mr. Godkin, given by me in good faith, and subsequently approved by Mr. Abbot himself; and it compels him further, at a critical moment when my honor is at stake, to repudiate, without notice to me, his long-standing agreement with me as editorial contributor.

Could I have anticipated such a discovery as this one it was reserved for Mr. Abbot to make so hurriedly and unexpectedly, not a line or a word I have written about the Nation, or any association, person, or editor would ever have appeared in THE INDEX. It is neither my vocation nor my taste, nor is it consistent with my conception of moral responsibilities, to print adverse criticism in the columns of a paper where my criticism cannot be challenged with the same freedom with which it is offered.

Mr. Abbot's present understanding as to the rights and duties of editorial contributors to THE INDEX, and of his own obligations to them, is one I cannot accept, especially that part of it which allows him, at a critical moment and without notice, to establish a new one; and therefore my connection with THE INDEX ceases with the issue of this number.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL.

MR. HALLOWELL'S "CARD."

I am extremely sorry that Mr. Hallowell feels impelled by a sense of duty to sever his connection with THE INDEX as an editorial contributor, and above all for the reasons he alleges. Such a card as he now publishes leaves me no escape from the duty of showing how fallacious those reasons are, and how totally my good and true friend, in the excitement of a personal contest with another, misunderstands my relations to both parties, confuses very clear distinctions of right and wrong, and does me grievous injustice. I have no right to demur at his determination to withdraw his name as editorial contributor, though I deeply regret this step and believe it to be utterly unnecessary; but I also have no right to let the public suppose that I am capable of breaking faith with him, and I must therefore speak frankly.

It is perfectly true that, down to Tuesday night, December 14, I have edited THE INDEX on one unvarying plan; namely, to print whatever my editorial contributors sent for publication, and to print it just as they sent it. This I have done faithfully, as they will all bear me witness, no matter how much I may have differed from them in opinion. Mr. Hallowell correctly states the substance of the agreement under which this plan has been carried out; namely, "that editorial contributors were to be entitled to the freest utterance, and that they alone were to be responsible for whatever might be printed over their signatures." That was the agreement, and the whole of it; Mr. Hallowell's inference that this agreement included an absolute right of reply on the part of all third parties who might be criticised by him is an afterthought of his own, and wholly unwarranted by me. That is a matter for my own discretion and conscience. He had no power whatever to "guarantee" the publication of anything in THE INDEX except what he himself sent as an editorial contribution; and the only way he could have fulfilled his "guarantee" to Mr. Godkin was by receiving the manuscript directly from the latter, and transmitting it to me with an appropriate introduction, not to take the place of other articles, but to take the place of a regular contribution of his own. But this was not done; Mr. Hallowell's "guarantee" had not the least effect or influence in the matter; nor did I approve it at all as a guarantee. When he told me he had guaranteed Mr. Godkin "free access to the paper," I simply said I was "glad of it"; I had myself made an unsolicited oral and written offer of space in THE INDEX to Mr. Godkin four days before this "guarantee" was made, and I was merely "glad" that Mr. Hallowell had thus shown himself demonstrably of a fair spirit towards an opponent. That was the whole substance and reason of my "approval"; and Mr. Hallowell makes a very great mistake in supposing that his "guarantee" has had even a feeble influence either with Mr. Godkin or myself. I must deny absolutely and emphatically that it gives him the faintest shadow of right to interfere between Mr. Godkin and myself in the publication by me of an article sent to me by Mr. Godkin, in acceptance of a spontaneous offer made by me to him as an act of editorial courtesy and general regard for justice. Mr. Hallowell has magnified the importance of this "guarantee" in his own mind, till it has confused his view of the whole matter. The time to have made it of value was when he began to publish his articles about the Nation; it would have meant something if he had notified Mr. Godkin at the start that he should have a fair chance to be heard in reply, but it means nothing when delayed till after the editor has already done the same thing on his own account, and distinctly and repeatedly notified him (Mr. Hallowell) of the fact.

The agreement between my editorial contributors and myself implied a promise on both sides. I promised to surrender all rights as an editor over their productions, and to respect their absolute freedom of utterance on any and all subjects; they, in turn, promised to assume absolute responsibility for their own articles. This Mr. Hallowell himself expressly states to have been the substance of the agreement; and the promise he made to me is just as essential, and just as binding, as the promise I made to him. Now I had fulfilled my part of the compact by printing Mr. Hallowell's articles about the Nation and Mr. Godkin just as he wrote them; and I relied absolutely on Mr. Hallowell's promise to assume all responsibility for his own articles. Mr. Godkin sent a reply to his last article of Nov. 18, containing certain correspondence just had with Mr. Hallowell, and demanding satisfaction through arbitration of a kind unnecessary and improper for me to describe here. I had this reply and Mr. Hallowell's rejoinder set up in type, unrevised by me. Both articles, in my judgment, contained matter that would furnish grounds for an action for libel; but I supposed still that I was relieved of at least all moral responsibility for Mr. Hallowell's rejoinder by his promise to assume all responsibility for his own words, and also relieved of all moral responsibility for Mr. Godkin's article by Mr. Hallowell's expressed desire for its publication. But on December 11, Mr. Godkin notified me by letter that he should sue Mr. Hallowell for "any repetition of these attacks," and that it might be necessary to include me in the indictment as editor and publisher, though without any personal hostility to me. I replied that, whatever legal responsibility I might be held to, I had no moral responsibility at all for what Mr. Hallowell wrote; and that I must run all personal risks in order to respect the liberty I had guaranteed. I forbore even to mention to Mr. Hallowell that a fresh "attack" on Mr. Godkin would involve me as well as himself in a libel suit; I left him to act out his own convictions of right, undisturbed by any intimation that he was involving me, and probably the Index Association, in great embarrassment and perhaps fatal disaster. So long as the one essential condition on which I had pledged to him absolute liberty (namely, that he should be, and not merely promise to be, responsible for his own words) was supposed by me to be fulfilled, just so long did I run all personal risks to make good my pledge to him. But common sense teaches that, if this essential condition was not fulfilled in fact as well as in word, my pledge of absolutely unrestricted liberty was thereby made no longer binding.

With a resolution to accept without whimpering any personal loss that might be the consequence of fidelity to my promise of absolute liberty to Mr. Hallowell, and with implicit confidence in his ability, as well as his undoubtedly sincere intention, to assume at least all moral responsibility for his words, I went on, made up the "forms" of THE INDEX on Tuesday afternoon, December 14, with both Mr. Godkin's and Mr. Hallowell's articles in full, and went to my home, four miles from Boston. In the evening, a casual conversation with a legal friend, whom I visited socially without a remote idea of making any change in the week's issue of THE INDEX, led to my putting some questions I had never thought of before as to the possibility of separating legal and moral responsibility. I discovered, to my astonishment, that the agreement I had made with my contributors was no defence whatever, legal or moral, for any violation of "public decency or private rights" in articles written by them; that I was legally responsible just because I was morally responsible, for any such supposed offence on their part; that I should have no business to print an obscene article written by one of them, and had no more business to print a libellous article; that my contract with them could cover only literary responsibility, and would be neither legal nor moral excuse for a violation of the rights of third parties, whether of society or of individuals; that, beyond this limit, the contract was null and void in every aspect; that legal and moral responsibility were identical so far as this point was concerned; and that, so long as my printer took "copy" only from me or by my direction, it was absolutely impossible for me, by any sort of agreement or contract, to divest myself of my editorial responsibility, either legal or moral, so far as "public decency" or the "private rights" of other parties were involved.

I was naturally enough dismayed by this discovery that Mr. Hallowell's promise to assume all responsibility for his own words, though made with perfect honesty, was absolutely worthless in point of fact, and not even a moral defence on my part if his article really did injustice to Mr. Godkin. As to this I knew nothing, and could not without great wrong assume any responsibility. I now found myself practically left in the lurch, betrayed by my confidence in Mr. Hallowell's ability to make good his promise to me into a moral position demanding instant action. If I could stop the publication of those two (in my own judgment) actionable and indictable articles, I was bound in conscience to do so, since I could not possibly publish them without becoming a morally responsible party to the publication. I was very reluctant to come to this conclusion, but could not avoid it, or pretend not to have the knowledge I had actually gained. My resolution was taken at once; I rose at five o'clock next morning, and reached Boston just in season to prevent the printing. Both articles were taken out of the forms, and replaced by articles which had been crowded out. I immediately wrote to both parties, informing them of what I had done; and I offered to Mr. Godkin to print an article of his in which he might "defend his own character without impugning any other." He still has "free access to THE INDEX," to say anything he pleases which shall not give grounds for a libel suit; this restriction, of course, was as necessary in his case as in Mr. Hallowell's. But he has informed me he cannot defend his own character without impugning any other; and, as he cannot expect me to allow him a liberty of libelling which he holds me to account for having allowed to Mr. Hallowell, he is clear-headed enough to make no complaint of the non-publication of his article, further than to express regret (which I certainly share) that I did not sooner discover the true state of the case. Why Mr. Hallowell should feel aggrieved in this matter passes my comprehension: the only party who has the least right to complain of the non-publication of Mr. Godkin's letter is Mr. Godkin himself, and he does not complain. On the contrary, he has now formally withdrawn his article altogether, in a very considerate and gentlemanly manner; and he has thereby deprived Mr. Hallowell of every shadow of pretext for insisting on the publication of his (Mr. Godkin's) article.

The situation, then, is this. Mr. Hallowell promised to assume all responsibility, legal and moral alike, for his own articles. Relying on this promise alone, I published articles of his now declared to be libellous. I am held responsible for them, and threatened with prosecution on his account. I discover that his promises to assume all responsibility for his own words, though honestly made, are beyond his power to fulfil, either legally or morally; that he has promised more than he can perform, has for this reason alone failed to keep his promises, and thereby has himself first broken the contract he now declares me to have broken. So long as I supposed he could be responsible morally for his own words, I shrank from no legal penalty they might entail on me (from which he cannot possibly shield me now in any way); but I have discovered that, in leaning on his well-meant but valueless promises, I have been leaning on a broken reed, must now wake up to the fact, and must assume myself the moral responsibility which Mr. Hallowell has in vain promised and attempted to assume. Instead, however, of perceiving into what a sea of troubles he has plunged me, or trying to help me out, he now brings an unnecessary public indictment against me of broken faith, simply because I refuse to admit into THE INDEX any more actionable articles for which he may still promise to be, but for which in part I have got to be, both legally and morally responsible. I have kept my promise to him, to my own hurt, till I discover that he can not keep his promise to me; I have made no new agreement on my own capricious motion, but have only discovered that he and I both undertook to make an agreement which we are powerless to execute. The only sensible course now is to adapt ourselves to the situation; and it will henceforth be understood that the liberty both of editor and editorial contributors will be limited by the common obligation of respecting the laws of the land. It is no more a discredit to me than it is to Mr. Hallowell that our original agreement was made in terms broader than this legal limitation admits; we were equally ignorant then, and he remains so still. He too should have inquired whether he could perform his own promises. I have "repudiated" nothing. This is no case for mutual recrimination; I own that I have acted under a grave misapprehension,—and he should own the same. If any other of the writers who have honored me by associating their names with mine editorially wishes to withdraw his or her name because of the modification of our agreement now made necessary by the fact that, being myself legally and morally responsible, I must hereafter reserve the right to withhold any article which in my judgment is or may be a violation of public decency or private rights, I must regretfully submit; but as I am bound by the same law myself, we are all on the same equal plane as ever with respect to freedom of utterance in THE INDEX.

However much I regret Mr. Hallowell's hasty and (I must add) unjust and unreasonable action, and however glad I am to be able to bear honest testimony to the purity and uprightness of his intentions, the case stands thus. By promising to assume all responsibility for his articles when he is not able to do it, he has unwittingly involved me in both legal and moral responsibility for statements of his own affecting gravely the moral character of a third party—statements which I have no moral right to make or to be responsible for; and now, when I have discovered this fact, and refused to be compelled to print further statements of the same kind and thus be made responsible for them in direct violation of his agreement with me, he holds me accountable for breaking a contract with him which he has already (unintentionally, but in fact) broken beyond repair. By unnecessarily appealing to the general public for judgment against me on these astonishing grounds, he necessitates this explanation. His good intentions are no defence for me in my own conduct; and, though with deep sorrow, I must vindicate myself by this most reluctant statement to a public that need not and ought not to have been appealed to. But I do not fear the verdict which will be rendered by fair-minded and impartial judges.

Only one word more. I am bound by gratitude to Mr. Hallowell for his past most generous friendship, and by my hope that he will yet see and be sorry for the cruel wound he now deals to one who has done his very best to be faithful at once to friendship towards him and justice towards all, to say explicitly that I make not the slightest imputation on his motives. He has substantially charged me with bad faith: I charge him only with failure to perceive the now evident fact that I am necessarily in part responsible for whatever may be libellous in the columns of THE INDEX; and with unseemly haste in accusing me publicly of a grave fault which a very short time will convince him, in spite of himself, I have never committed.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

A CORRECTION.

[We are very glad to print the following correction by Col. Higginson of a little reference to himself in a communication last week.—Ed.]

I see that, through the letter of our good friend Dr. Horsch, THE INDEX prints for the second time Mr. Bradlaugh's version of my opening remarks at the last Free Religious Convention in Boston. Those who take the pains to compare this version with the official report will perceive that the word "possibly," which gives a rather patronizing tone to the phrase, "possibly elevating Atheism into a religion" is no word of mine, but was added by Mr. Bradlaugh, perhaps in the wish to make my meaning more clear. Unluckily, it has just the opposite effect, and gives an offensive tone to a very innocent remark. The Free Religious Association is no place for patronizing, nor even for toleration; it is a place of simple religious equality.

Reduced to its original proportions, my remark seems simple enough. No mere intellectual opinion, such as Theism or Atheism, is in itself a religion; for it may exist without being combined with any noble purpose or high emotion. When combined with these, it may be justly said to be "elevated into a religion." The same might be said of Calvinism or Unitarianism.

T. W. HIGGINSON.

THE BIBLE IN PHILADELPHIA SCHOOLS.

From the New York Daily Tribune of December 16, we extract the following:—

The following is the letter sent by the Liberal League of Philadelphia to the Board of Public Education of that city on Tuesday last, in relation to the use of the Bible in the schools, a reference to which was made in a despatch published in the Tribune yesterday:—

THE HON. M. HALL STANTON, PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF PUBLIC EDUCATION:

Sir,—I have the honor to transmit to the honorable body over which you preside the following resolution, which was considered for several weeks, and finally passed by the Philadelphia Liberal League:—

WHEREAS, The use of the Bible in the public schools is a violation of the recognized American principle that the Church and the State ought to be absolutely separate; and

WHEREAS, It is a practice which gives a distinctively Protestant character to the public school system, is grossly unjust to all non-Protestants taxed to support it, and thereby dangerously aids the Roman Catholic Church in its openly-avowed warfare upon it; therefore to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools of this city, and that the officers of the League are hereby instructed to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Liberal League of Philadelphia hereby respectfully petition the Board of Education

In compliance with this resolution, I respectfully petition the Board of Public Education to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools of this city. Herewith please find thirty copies of the very able and comprehensive address of Damon Y. Kilgore, Esq., delivered before and published by the League for the use of your Board. This address is a fair and just exponent of the views of the Liberal League of Philadelphia, and has already received the highest commendation of some of the ablest thinkers in our land. The question of secular education has already assumed such importance as to be felt at the ballot-box, and the President of the United States, with a keen foresight, has made it a prominent feature in his last annual message to Congress.

Let it be distinctly understood that, if the Protestant Bible were absolutely as faultless as the most ignorant and bigoted of those who indorse it believe, our objection would remain to its being made an instrument of religious oppression to those who do not so regard it. The equal rights of all citizens demand its exclusion from the public schools because the schools belong equally to all citizens, and no majority, whether Protestant or Catholic, has any right to oppress the religious conscience of the minority. In conclusion, gentlemen, allow me to add that the inexorable logic of events fast passing into history teaches the importance of your speedy and favorable consideration of the subject involved in this petition.

JOHN S. DYE,
Secretary of the Liberal League.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14, 1875.

This is very important action. In no other way can the paramount necessity of establishing the public school system on an absolutely secular basis be brought fully and fairly before the public mind, and made to receive the general attention which it deserves. We repeat what we said a fortnight ago, that the Philadelphia Liberal League are earning the gratitude of all true friends of the republic by their fearless and earnest movement; and, whatever the immediate result may be, we believe that the equal courage and wisdom of their course will abundantly prove itself in the end to the general satisfaction. The "City of Brotherly Love" is winning a new name—the City of Brotherly Justice.

Communications.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S PLATFORM AND THE GUIBORD CASE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Your successive remarks on the Guibord case, as it went on, have convinced me that you are one of the few men who do not take the superficial view of it. While I entirely agree with you in everything that you have said, allow me to put in relief the special importance which the recent solution of this case has, in my eyes, as the first practical application of the Fifth Article of my Platform.

This article, which your readers will excuse me for repeating, is as follows:—

"All clauses in private contracts, granting temporal advantages on sectarian conditions, to be null and void in the eyes of the law."

Your readers perhaps remember that I do not claim that a sectarian condition in a contract should necessarily invalidate it, but, as in the legislation of France, be "reputed not written," the rest of the contract remaining valid if, the sectarian condition struck out, there remain in it an adequate consideration on each side, and the other conditions of validity.

Now the Guibord case, when disentangled from the subtleties of Anglo-Norman law, can be very clearly stated in a few words. There was a contract wherein Guibord, by paying a sum of money (a civil stipulation) and dying a Catholic (a sectarian clause), became entitled to be buried in a certain plot of ground (a civil stipulation), the said plot being and remaining consecrated so as to be a part of the Catholic cemetery (a sectarian clause).

Striking off both sectarian clauses, according to the principles of my platform, there remains a contract wherein Guibord by paying a sum of money (a civil stipulation) became entitled to be buried in a certain plot of ground (another civil stipulation). These two civil stipulations, constituting each an adequate consideration to the other, and none of the other conditions of validity being on either side asserted to be absent from the contract, the contract, stripped of its sectarian clauses, had enough of itself remaining to constitute a valid contract. Guibord paid his money, and has been buried in his plot of ground. Each of the parties has every reason to be satisfied. It is true that they are not.

The bishops claimed that the non-performance by Guibord of the sectarian clause of the contract which concerned him, (that of dying a Catholic) annulled not only the sectarian stipulation which concerned the bishops (the consecration of the ground) but also the temporal stipulation, (his burial in the plot of ground) for which he had given a temporal equivalent (the money). But the civil courts have allowed no such nonsense, and, as the material force was on their side, have compelled the bishops to let Guibord be buried in the land which he had paid for.

Had the Privy Council limited itself to this, it would have shown great discretion, but it did not.

It decided that Guibord, the decision of the bishops notwithstanding, had died a Catholic, and ordered him to be buried, not only in his grave lot, but in that lot being "consecrated." With regard to this latter point, the Privy Council, whether it consisted of spurred colonels of cavalry or of wigged lawyers, showed that it had got badly beyond its depth by trying to wade into theology. The bishops simply set aside, as redundant verbiage, the part of the decree relating to the consecration; and, as this is a region in which he has the might, he, of course, as you said, carried his point, and the Privy Council, though it probably judged according to the law, remains stultified. This it sees, and is probably glad of it. It will not lose anything by it. The strength of Anglo-Saxon Institutions lies in this: that as the mightiest in the land, and the sovereign himself, is powerless against the law, so is the law itself powerless against the spirit of the age. Who in the nineteenth century would think of using force to compel a Roman Catholic bishop to consecrate a piece of ground?

Here, then, is a leading case in which the principles of my platform have been purely and simply applied, though none of the parties concerned contemplated this result. They have not been recognized: they have been applied, simply because we have reached a point at which, in this case at least, the nineteenth century did not contain the resources to violate them.

I am, sir, truly yours, JULIUS FERRETTE.
CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 30, 1875.

THOMAS PAINE AND THE CENTENNIAL.

EDITOR INDEX:—

During the coming year, this country will be resonant with the celebration of the centennial of American Independence. We shall delight to do honor to the memory of those who nursed and cradled the Republic. The names of Washington, Jefferson, Adams, and others, will be in the minds of all and upon the lips of every orator. Their praises will be sung loud on every side. But is it not possible, in the general rejoicing, that the patriot who struck the first great and direct blow for a Republican form of government, who gave to the country its first impulse for entire freedom and independence, whose utterances carried hope to the colonists and gave heart and purpose to their strokes for liberty, is it not possible, I ask, that the author hero of the Revolution may be almost forgotten by the public in general, because of the ostracism and calumny he incurred on turning his attention from monarchy to its twin despotism, superstition?

No man did more to cause the Declaration of Independence than Thomas Paine. He fanned the fire of liberty until it blazed on every hill from Hampshire to Georgia. While nineteen-twentieths of the colonists were, in the main, loyal in sentiment toward King George, and were sending their petitions to Great Britain only asking for a redress of their grievances and to be placed back where they had been before the tea and paper tax was imposed, Thomas Paine gave the country his Common Sense. Never did a political pamphlet have a greater influence. It was published on the 17th day of January, 1776. Filled with argument, reason, and invincible logic, it struck right to the hard pan. While others would be content with reconciliation, he stopped short of nothing but independence. Common Sense was at first received by the masses with indignation, but it soon found a place in the hearts of the people. Editions after editions were issued until it reached a circulation which to our population of to-day would be as a million copies, and their facilities for disseminating literature a hundred years ago were greatly inferior to our own. It completely turned public sentiment. The tide grew stronger and stronger, bearing down all opposition, until it culminated in the Declaration of Independence.

Lossing, in his Field Book of the Revolution, says: "Common Sense was the earliest and most powerful appeal in behalf of independence, and probably did more to fix that idea firmly in the public mind than any other instrumentality." All through the war he was a never-failing fountain of encouragement and hope. He followed the army through sunshine and storm. He sustained the spirits of the soldiery, and aptly suited his words of encouragement to the condition of the army and the aspect of political affairs. "These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now deserves the thanks of man and woman." How often during the late rebellion those thrilling words were repeated by hundreds ignorant of their authorship, who, had they been informed they were using the words of Thomas Paine, would have spewed them out of their mouths to make way for execrations upon his memory! Paine continued his great and noble services during the entire Revolution, and in his boundless philanthropy was not then content. To the patriot who said: "The country where liberty is, is the country for me,"—how grand his reply: "The country where liberty is not, is the country for me!" The world was his field of action. Tyranny in France was as obnoxious to him as tyranny in America. To France he went, and there in the service of freedom came near losing his life.

I have thus briefly recalled these events in the life of Thomas Paine, familiar to most radicals and to students of American history, that we may be reminded of the place which should be occupied by the memory of Paine and the recognition which, during the coming celebration of Independence, should be accorded to his noble services.

I suggest and urge that, on the centennial anniversary of the publication of Common Sense, the 17th of next month, January, or that of his birthday, January 20th (perhaps more appropriately the former), a celebration be gotten up in every community, and justice be done to his memory. As Common Sense was the forerunner of the Declaration of Independence, what more fitting than that the grand celebration of next July should be preluded with a tribute to the great champion of liberty? It seems to me that it would be particularly appropriate, and that such celebrations should be gotten up with especial reference to his political services, and the public be invited to join, so that even church people who despise his religious opinions might join (and why shouldn't they?) if there be any sufficiently liberal and honest.

It belongs to the radicals and freethinkers of this country to consider this matter, and see that some regard is paid next year to the memory and services of Paine, especially as without some such special action on their part he may be as unrecognized and unremembered as he is in most of the school histories. On the altar of freethought he laid his popularity and fame, a willing sacrifice, and received the obloquy of the Christian mob which cried, "Crucify him." At the close of the Revolutionary war no man stood higher in America than Thomas Paine. Had he been false to himself, he would to-day have been the best-praised man in the memory of the American people. When the selfish man would have rested upon his laurels, he, for truth's sake, accepted hatred and reproach for his portion, and gave the world the Age of Reason. Horace Greeley once said: "Charity is a virtue rarely exemplified in politics." After considering the treatment accorded Thomas Paine, with what truth could we say: Charity is a virtue rarely exemplified in religion. From being beloved and exalted, he became hated and infamous. His great services were forgotten or denied, and the grave did not stop the fury of his Christian calumniators.

Let freethinkers not be ungrateful, but let them appreciate and do justice to the memory of him whose every throb was for humanity, whose every effort was for justice and liberty, and who uttered that grandest, sublimest, and most comprehensive sentiment: "The world is my country, and to do good my religion." CHAS. H. TRUE.

PITTSFORD, Monroe Co., N. Y., Dec. 12, 1875.

[Mr. True's suggestion is one which we heartily appreciate and warmly second. Wherever a radical society exists, we recommend that an orator be at once appointed to give on January 17 a public address, accompanied with appropriate exercises, upon the special services of Thomas Paine and his Common Sense to the cause of national independence.—Ed.]

LIBERALISM IN NEW HAVEN.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Please allow me space in your excellent paper to say a few words about the progress of Liberalism in New Haven. Here, under the shadow of Yale, a free platform has been maintained for two years. The Free Religious platform is the ideal which the supporters of the Free Lecture Association strive to actualize. Rev. E. C. Towne sowed good seed in this city several years ago; but he was not sustained. He preached, I fear, over the heads of his hearers. Now, however, I think he would be better appreciated. He should revisit New Haven. The speakers (as nearly as I can recall them) from the free platform have been N. Frank White, Mrs. Middlebrook, E. Annie Hinman, Mrs. Burnham, Anthony Higgins, W. F. Jamieson, and J. J. Morse, of England. Owing to the fact that these lecturers are Spiritualists, the opinion prevails that the Free Lecture Association is a sectarian Spiritualist organization. Such, however, is not the case. Many of its adherents are Spiritualists. They are not ashamed of their belief. They always take pleasure in defending and expounding their special faith. But they do not imagine that the great reactionary movement against conservatism can be established on a doctrinal basis. They are Liberalists first—Spiritualists afterward. Special beliefs (as THE INDEX has so frequently affirmed) must act a subordinate part in the present work of mental and spiritual emancipation. The Evangelical Alliance aims to fraternize humanity with a dogma as the cohesive element. Some Liberalists and Spiritualists fall into the same channel, and yet talk loudly about the superiority of their work. It is a hard task to outgrow the partisan spirit of a new movement. Philosophers are scarce. I think I can discern signs of a growing fellowship among liberal Spiritualists and progressive Christians, Jews, and Secularists.

In New Haven this is the end for which the Free Lecture Association is working. The local press treats the Association with great courtesy. Yale students attend the lectures. In fact, the outlook is most promising. January 2d and 9th, 1876, William Brunton, of Cambridgeport, Mass., will address the friends; and on January 16th and 23d the editor of THE INDEX has promised to be the lecturer. Next September we hope to hear the voice of O. B. Frothingham in New Haven. At present Mrs. Emma Hardinge-Britten, the well-known and able Spiritualist, is speaking in our midst. Horace Seaver is in demand; but, unfortunately, he is, at present, otherwise engaged.

You will please accept our cordial good will in your work. We do not agree with you in all your notions; but that is so small a matter that it is hardly worth mentioning. Men to-day want to be something more than parrot echoes of each other. The people want to hear what you have to say. Come to us. You shall be monarch of the hour, on the rostrum. We shall reserve the same high prerogative for the Jews. By-and-by, when all clanishness shall have been outgrown in the varied schools of Liberalism and Spiritualism—when unnecessary and crude antagonisms are swallowed up in heavenly reciprocities,—we will have a unity worthy of our time, and, better still, of ourselves.

Yours with cordial regard,

CEPHAS B. LYNN.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Dec., 1875.

MOODY AND SANKEY AIDING FREETHOUGHT.

The Orthodox are congratulating themselves on the revival of the Evangelical faith under the vigorous efforts of these two modern apostles. But the thoughtful observer will not fail to discern, in the free discussions which these revivals are calling forth from the public, a spirit of independence and suppressed unbelief, which is ominous to that religion whose perpetuation depends on unreasoning credulity. It requires a courage bordering on rashness to attempt a revival of pure Orthodoxy in the wide-awake, practical cities of this republic; and freethought could not wish for a better opportunity to expose the absurdities of the Evangelical system of religion than these revivals afford.

All the able preachers of the Orthodox faith have been trying to hide the old, irrational dogmas of the Church, and adapt themselves to the progressive spirit of the age by teaching natural religion—that is, natural goodness,—as it exists in universal humanity, independent of any special religious belief. In this way much of the repulsiveness of Orthodoxy has been concealed, and the Church has assumed the patronage of progress. While the leading pulpits of the Evangelical churches ignored the dogmas of total depravity, eternal hell, salvation by faith alone, etc., the practical people were content that these ideas of the past should repose in undisturbed quiet, in unread "Confessions of Faith," and dusty theological libraries. But they must not be marched out into the light of the living present, and their acceptance urged on the practical world, or freethought will assert its right to deal with religion as it does with the questions of this life, by forcing it to pass the test of common sense and scientific criticism. And this is just what the public is now doing in discussing the Moody and Sankey revival. It is weighing the true doctrines of the Evangelical religion in the fearless balance of modern thought; and, if Orthodoxy, with all of its colossal support, passes through this stern examination without being shorn of much of its arrogance and authority, I am much deceived.

When such popular papers as the New York Sun and the Herald boldly attack the doctrines of these revivalists, we may know that the public is not without independence on the question of religion, as such severe criticism would be rebuked by a reduction of the subscription lists of these secular organs. Orthodoxy may successfully propagate its dogmas by revival meetings in the backwoods, where culture and freethought are unknown; but when it attempts to carry intelligent cities by assault under the free observation of newspaper reporters, who give the details of these religious exhibitions to a cool, practical public to be read and discussed at leisure, it is hazarding more than it is aware of, and must realize its rashness when it is too late to avert the danger.

Could the true results of this protracted revival be summed up, it would be found that what the Church calls "unbelief," had been more firmly established in the popular mind than the doctrines of the "saving faith."

KENTON, Mo.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

HAS INSPIRATION CEASED?

Why should God have blessed those that lived during the time of and before Christ with messages and communications, allow his angels to appear personally to some, and inspire others so that from their pens came forth the works that have done so much to revolutionize the world, and then entirely cease to do these things? According to the popular belief of the present time, all we know of an existence hereafter, of heaven, and of the manner in which we should live here, to insure happiness hereafter, has been revealed to us in the past by the Bible. This is the belief that has been set down, and which is generally believed by the people of the present day. I say generally, because there are some persons who have minds enough of their own not to receive and be satisfied with the conclusions and arguments of others, but who are themselves searching for the truth. They do not regard lightly the different "isms" and religious beliefs we hear so much about, but cull from all the good, and that which is the most beneficial, leaving the rest alone. That inspiration has ceased, I do not believe. I believe that every person is inspired, more or less, by a superior being; and that it is often to produce most beneficial results. Years ago a circumstance occurred in Virginia which shows plainly, to my mind at least, that we are watched over by heaven, and impressed to do many things. A religious sect, now well known as the Quakers, have shown a great many instances of divine impressions which have done much good. One Sabbath morning, at a town we will call M—, the usual Quakers' meeting was being held. In the midst of the deep silence an old man rapped heavily on the floor with his cane, then arose, and said: "Resist the devil this time, and he will never trouble thee again." And he sat down.

After meeting, many members came to this old man and asked him why he had struck the floor with his cane; he replied that he did not know, but that if he was ever divinely impressed he was then. Years after, when the circumstance had been forgotten, a gentleman came to this old man and told him that one Sabbath morning, several years ago, he had made up his mind to hang himself. His affairs were in a precarious condition, he was weighed down with mental troubles, and had at last become so despondent that he was firmly resolved to commit suicide. He had gone to a neighboring wood with this determination, when he saw the Quakers, not far distant, assembling in their meeting-house. Something impressed him to go, which he did. There the usual silence reigning, he was soon lost in reverie. He was brought to his senses by hearing a loud rap on the floor; nothing else would have disturbed him; and, looking up, he heard the words, "Resist the devil this time, and he will never trouble thee again." "I did," he said, "resist the devil, and he never has troubled me since."

ELBUR W. EASTMAN.

THE NEW YORK PRESS ON THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

NEW YORK, Dec. 8, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Let me express my satisfaction that President Grant so plainly and distinctly speaks truth regarding the evils of sectarian public schools and the non-taxation of church property. It is a hopeful sign when a President urges measures to remedy these evils, secure schools free to all, and compel every one desiring to vote to learn to read and write.

The morning papers here comment quite freely on the message. The Herald finds fault with the President. The Tribune thinks he merely reiterates truths often spoken by itself, but now "ill-timed," and mentioned "to make political capital." The Sun says: "This [the school question] is a congenial topic for him, and affords proof that this thorny subject will be incorporated into the next national Republican platform, and play a part in the coming Presidential campaign." The Times commences its article on the message by saying: "The message will be read by the country with general satisfaction,"—mentions the school question, and adds, regarding the principle of taxing church property as mentioned by the President, that it "is a sound one."

We may not for a certainty say what motives prompted the President; yet we can at least thank him for broaching the subject at such time and place. It must be generally considered; though I think he hardly realizes the radical extent of the changes he proposes.

As has been suggested before, the Protestants, fearing the Catholics, are beginning to realize the necessity of doing justice to all in this school question, yet from fear only have their eyes been opened.

Mentioning the subject to several to-day, I find many see the justice of the President's suggestions, and admit that they never before thought of these matters of school and church in such a light.

There can be no step backward in these matters, and now more than ever does the country need such papers as THE INDEX, which advocates thoroughness in dealing with the subject.

Not that the President may possibly gain capital for a third term movement, but because this is an important step toward the correct solution of this question, am I glad the President has done so well.

Yours truly,

"A."

DARWINISM AND REVELATION.

MR. EDITOR:—

In these days, when the theologians are just beginning to discover that the Bible and Christianity are in "complete harmony" with the facts of science regarding the antiquity of man and the Darwin theory of the manner of his origin, when such a man as the Roman Catholic St. George Mivart, even, says (speaking of evolution) that "it is without doubt perfectly consistent with the strictest and most Orthodox Christian theology," it is a little amusing to look back occasionally, and see what their predecessors have said in years gone by.

Albert Barnes said less than twenty-five years ago, that—

"Man according to the Bible is a recent visitant to the world, and the time is not remote in the past, when he was formed by his Creator to occupy a world made ready for his abode." [Evidences of Christianity, p. 376].

Again he says (the italics being mine) on page 377:—

"For the third of these points—the question whether the human race is derived from a single pair—it is manifest that the whole question of the truth of revelation turns on this. The Bible records the creation of a single pair and no other. . . . The entire doctrine of depravity and death, according to the Bible, is identified with the fact that there was a single pair at the head of the race. 'In Adam we all die' (I. Cor., xv., 22). The same is the Scripture doctrine in regard to redemption. The race according to that plan is one—one in origin, one in apostasy, one in guilt, one in death. 'As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive' (I. Cor., xv., 21)."

But the theologians of to-day are not willing to admit that the "whole question of the truth of revelation," so-called, "turns on this." Perhaps it may be that it does not turn the right way! At all events they are fast adopting that never-failing theological expedient, a "new interpretation."

And so they follow on in the wake of science, making "new interpretations" of "revealed truth," condemning science for exploding their old ones, and never knowing what ones it may be necessary for them to adopt in the future.

But all theologians, past, present, and to come, will agree that the Bible, with its ever-shifting interpretations, is a "safe and sufficient guide" for all mankind!

BOSTON.

HOLYOAKE'S HISTORY OF CO-OPERATION IN ENGLAND.

Coöperation, as Mr. Holyoake points out in his introductory chapter, is a term of very general and vague application, and in the volume before us is applied to quite a different set of operations from what we understand by the word now-a-days. The "Pioneer Period" was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. It is—for an American public—rather crowded with names and details, which no doubt call up associations, and possess interest in England; but, withal, the story is told in a very graphic style, and in such a manner as to make pretty clear the causes of the general want of success that characterized this period.

Mr. Holyoake is best known as an avowed atheist, as well as pronounced radical; and one is agreeably disappointed at not meeting the random sort of talk which might be expected from his antecedents, and from some words in the preface, as well as the rather gushing dedication to Wendell Phillips. Only from one or two incidental expressions could one guess at his religious views. He is, after all, a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought, and building without foundation, that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes. He has a good deal of humor, too, and in his pages we find many appreciative descriptions of queer reformers, just such as we are familiar with in this country; and keen but good-natured satire—for his criticisms are always those of a sympathizer. There is an account of the "First Concordian" Society at Ham Common, in Surrey:—

"The New Age [its organ] was very intelligently edited, but it was discontinued when it had existed little more than a year and a half, on the ground that 'no book could represent what was passing in that establishment. Even the proceedings of a single day were found to be of far greater moment than could be transcribed or recorded in any work whatever.' Those who visited the Concordian were certainly not of this opinion. The inmates were scrupulously clean, temperate, transcendental, offensive to any one who ate meat, attached to Quakers, especially white ones, repudiated even salt and tea, as stimulants, and thought most of those guests who ate their cabbage uncooked. They preached abstinence from marriage, and most things else. Their cardinal doctrine was that happiness was wrong. The managing director, Mr. William Oldham, was called Pater, and, like Howard, preferred damp sheets to dry ones." (p. 230.)

There are many interesting reminiscences, some of them valuable as experiments in social science. Such was Mr. Owen's device of "Labor Exchanges," the idea of which, it seems, originated with an American by the name of Josiah Warren (p. 158). "In May, 1833, the National Equitable Labor Exchange, London, was opened." The object of this was not, as might be inferred, to serve as an improved intelligence office, but as a medium for the exchange of the products of labor against one another—in other words, for a systematized and scientific barter. "Those who deposited goods were not paid in money, but received labor-exchange notes of the value of one hour's labor each" (the hour being reckoned at sixpence). Here was the vulnerable point in the experiment: "It does not appear how the depositors of goods at the Gothic Hall estimated the cost of the material they had worked up in hours of the value of sixpence; and persons naturally inquired how the quick workman and the slow one estimated their work on a uniform standard of sixpence for sixty minutes." This confused and inadequate standard muddled men's minds, and, besides, there was a lack of careful and sagacious business management. "The labor exchange needed the pawnbroker's faculty of quickly seeing what a thing was worth." Of course the enterprise speedily failed.

The author, in his preface, pays a handsome compliment to this "wide-awake land" for the prompt and satisfactory responses given to his letter of inquiry in the New York Tribune. "No case of any indecipherable caligraphy arose in American letters; they make things pretty plain out there." He does not say how soon the second volume may be expected. Meanwhile he has given the present volume two good indices, and—a valuable feature—has added a "Coöperative Advertisement Sheet," from which one can get a tolerable notion of the leading establishments of the present day in Great Britain—experiments, we will add, which represent the principle of coöperation in its present form, not in its earlier communistic one.—Nation.

AN OBLIGING gentleman, who thinks that personal favors do not cost much, while they make friends, was applied to by a "Nigger" for a certificate of character, by which he might get a situation. The testimonial proving to be more complimentary than Scipio himself had expected, that worthy, on recovering from his astonishment, exclaimed: "Say, Mr. —, won't you gib me something to do yerself on dat recommendation?"

"IF YOU DARE to play marbles for keeps again," said Mr. Hurtlecamp to his eldest boy, "I'll whip you within an inch of your life." And then Mr. Hurtlecamp went on 'Change, and lifted up his voice at the call board, and raised his hand and shook it in the air, and got red in the face as he cried: "Sixty-seven, sixty-seven, for fifty thousand cash or July. Put up or shut up. Sixty-seven cents a bushel, cash."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age," an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Golia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, R. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles," Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	1.50
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition	1.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life	2.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements
A Series of Addresses, By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: A Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts, Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede
Romola
The Mill on the Floss
Felix Holt
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portraits	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.90
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	5.00
Essays and Autobiography	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Hermann and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	5.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures
1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales
Mosses from an Old Manse
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image
The Marble Faun
The English Note-Books
The American Note-Books
The French and Italian Note-Books
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Consensus. By R. B. Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautes. By J. Bell Pettigrew	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English with Analysis and Introductions by R. Jowett, M. A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
Three Essays on Religion	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIYART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities	3.00
Three vols. Price per volume	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.50
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle	1.50
Ekkvos from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Unity: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Pretty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 18 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Class-Room Text-Book of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Piske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair
The Newcomes
Adventures of Philip Fendennis
The Virginians
England, and Lovel the Widower
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	2.00
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, and Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.00
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	3.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI., each	3.75
The Voysey Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life	.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.

Property is Impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition.

Property is Impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition.

Property is Impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.

Property is Impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.

Property is Impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.

Property is Impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.

Property is Impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

MONETARY LABOR REFORM.

AND THE

MECHANISM OF EXCHANGE.

BY

PROF. W. STANLEY JEVONS, M.A., F.R.S.

A new and thoroughly scientific treatise, giving a clear and simple exposition of the "past and present monetary systems of the world, the materials employed to make money, the natural laws which govern their circulation, the several modes in which they may be replaced by the use of paper documents, and, finally, the method in which the use of money is immensely economized by the cheque and clearing system now being extended and perfected."

CONTENTS.

- CHAPTER I.—Barter.
- 1.—Exchange.
 - 2.—The Functions of Money.
 - 3.—Early History of Money.
 - 4.—Qualities of the Material of Money.
 - 5.—The Metals as Money.
 - 6.—Coins.
 - 7.—The Principles of Circulation.
 - 8.—Systems of Metallic Money.
 - 9.—The English System of Metallic Currency.
 - 10.—Fractional Currency.
 - 11.—The Battle of the Standards.
 - 12.—Technical Matters relating to Coinage.
 - 13.—International Money.
 - 14.—The Mechanism of Exchange.
 - 15.—Representative Money.
 - 16.—The Nature and Varieties of Promissory Notes.
 - 17.—Methods of Regulating a Paper Currency.
 - 18.—Credit Documents.
 - 19.—Book Credit and the Banking System.
 - 20.—The Clearing House System.
 - 21.—The Cheque Bank.
 - 22.—Foreign Bills of Exchange.
 - 23.—The Bank of England and the Money Market.
 - 24.—A Tabular Standard of Value.
 - 25.—The Quantity of Money Needed by a Nation.

Sent post-paid on receipt of $1.50, by THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and Its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. . . . The story is told in a very graphic style. . . . Mr. Holyoake . . . is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

MUSICAL GIFTS FOR CHRISTMAS.

MUSICAL GIFTS FOR NEW YEAR'S.

Gems of English Song! 75 of the best songs extant, collected in a handsome volume of 232 (music size) pages. With elegant gilt binding, $4.00. In cloth, $3.00. In boards, $2.50.

Uniform in style, price, and binding with the above splendid book, we have other books of "Gems," German, Scottish, and Sacred; also, of best Irish melodies, and the choicest Operatic Songs.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS. By Howard. 38 cts. ANTHEM. There were Shepherds. Millard. 75 cts.

MERRY CHRISTMAS. Pianopiece. Wilson. 60 cts.

Rejoice the hearts of the Old Folks with Centennial Collection for Old Folk's Concerts. 40 cts. By E. Tourjee.

Gladden your Sabbath-school by introducing Shining River. One of the sweetest of song-books.

Order the above books of any of the principal music dealers, or by mail (enclosing retail price), of

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway, New York.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion. Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

BY J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

355 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance. Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested. The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance. On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1875.

WHOLE No. 314.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixt with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

THE RECEIPT OF $3.00 from Mr. Thomas Goddard, Du Quoin, Illinois, is hereby acknowledged as a contribution to the "Holyoake Fund."

THE HON. GEORGE BANCROFT told a reporter of the Philadelphia Item that the next Presidential campaign, in his opinion, will be the most exciting one of our history.

IN NEW YORK, there are a "Common School League" and an "Alpha Association," both organized to keep the Bible in the schools. If they will use only fair argument, they can do no harm.

THE NEW YORK Herald published a long account of a new secret anti-Catholic order (supposed to be the one referred to by John Y. Foster in his unlucky Blaine letter) which the Graphic declares to be a hoax.

THE WASHINGTON Star grumbles at the voluminous despatches from Philadelphia about the Moody and Sankey revival. It makes the cruel suggestion that the public would cheerfully dispense with the amplified accounts of trivial details, and be entirely satisfied with "the results, if any are obtained."

THOMAS CARLYLE's eightieth birthday was signalized by a universal tribute of gratitude and respect. With all his occasional extravagances and mistakes, no living man has done more than he to promote reverence for honesty and veracity, or to make literature a means of feeding the springs of moral earnestness in mankind. All honor to the aged prophet of truth and righteousness!

IF THE Democrats want to get ahead of the Republicans, and disprove all allegations of their own complicity in Catholic schemes, why do they not propose in the House a better Constitutional amendment than Mr. Blaine's? This is what the Washington Tribune of December 13 explicitly recommends. If the Democrats will adopt Judge Hurlbut's amendment, they will do a great public service.

THOSE who see little value or importance in the legal privileges arrogated by the churches of this country, contrary to the traditional American principle that Church and State ought to be separate, should ponder the statement of the Boston Advertiser that, since the first recognition in 1852 of Christmas as a legal holiday, "the progress of Episcopacy in this State is no doubt owing in no small measure to the change thus officially established."

MR. CONWAY recently delivered his lectures on "Demonology," "St. George and the Dragon," and "Oriental Religion" to very good audiences in the Masonic Hall at New York, now associated with the eloquence of Mr. Frothingham. Last Sunday he preached at Parker Memorial Hall, in this city, on "The Holy Family," and on Monday evening in the same place on "Science and Religion in England." In short, the Yankees want to make the most of him before his return to London.

THE Catholic World, in its January number, has proved itself to possess a throat which can only be compared to the Mammoth Cave for capacity: it has actually swallowed the President's Des Moines speech as "sound Catholic principle"! Now the nation must look for the February number with palpitating heart, to learn if this enterprising periodical is able to accomplish the same feat with the President's Message. Stories have been told of a boa constrictor that could comfortably take in a buffalo; but we never yet heard of one that could gulp down an elephant, tail, tusks, and all.

PROFESSOR MAX MUELLER's retirement from the chair of Comparative Philology at Oxford, recently announced, is an event of great interest in the world of letters. He went to England in 1846 in order to publish his "Editio Princeps of the text and commentary of the oldest of the Sacred Books of the Brahmans, the oldest book of the Aryan world." This immense undertaking he has just finished; and he now wishes to complete his translation of the Sacred Hymns of Brahma. Religious literature and religious science are under the profoundest obligation to this patient, large-minded, and large-hearted scholar, whose services have won for him a noble renown all over the globe.

By a singular coincidence, Mr. Conway was lately present in Cincinnati to preach the first sermon after the reunion of the First Congregational Church and the Church of the Redeemer, the latter having seceded from the former some fifteen years ago mainly on account of his sermons against supernaturalism. Preparations had been made for his preaching in the former, but the latter stepped forward and invited him to preach in their church. Both societies attended, and the occasion was celebrated by the local press as exceptionally important. It is understood that the two societies will be henceforth reunited under the ministry of Mr. Wendte, a radical Unitarian clergyman of fine character and abilities who is well known to hold views on supernaturalism very similar to those formerly taught by Mr. Conway. The "sacrament" is to be wholly omitted, and the united societies are to bear the old name, the "First Congregational Church." So fifteen years have been enough to bring the seceders up to the ground they once refused to take, even to the point of splitting off by themselves. "The world does move"—even if Galileo did not say so.

THE Catholic World says: "Our religion must, in some way or other, be dragged into politics. 'For shame!' we cry, with the President. In a country of such varied religious beliefs as ours, there is but one way to order and peace—'Keep the Church and the State forever separate.'" Now the Catholic World is Catholic enough to believe that the Pope is infallible; and it is Catholic enough to know that this infallible Pope has denounced as a damnable heresy, in the famous Syllabus Errorum, the doctrine that "the Church ought to be separated from the State, and the State from the Church [Ecclesia a Statu, Statusque ab Ecclesia sejungendus est]." That is what the Catholic World's infallible Pope teaches respecting its approved "one way to order and peace"—a way which the Pope expressly "wills and commands that all children of the Catholic Church hold in every respect as reprobated, proscribed, and condemned." Now of two things one: either the Catholic World is an open rebel to the Pope and a public repudiator of his infallibility, or else it is deliberately trying to deceive the American people with a public pretence of believing a speech of the President which it privately disbelieves. Which is it? Has the Catholic World moral courage enough to answer this question without evasion? It is not safe to trifle in this way with the people: they are not idiots.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAT CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERBURY, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Reconstruction of the Christian Creed.

BY PROFESSOR W. NEWMAN.

The Protestant Reformation, under Luther and Calvin, under Cranmer and John Knox, left the Apostles' Creed (so called) untouched, and with little exception maintained even the Nicene and the pseudo-Athanasian Creeds. But in the two last centuries science and literature have opened new fountains of thought: science, by developing the vastness, antiquity, and stableness of Nature; literature, by exhibiting the contradictions and weakness of the narratives called sacred, and in the case of very important books, the extreme uncertainty who wrote them, when, and where. In consequence, numbers of thoughtful and pious persons, warmly attached by sentiment and reason to the spiritual side of Christianity, are unable to hold to the creed of the reformers. The first effort of such naturally is to throw off all that seems to them as the dross of Christianity, and retain its pure gold. The process appears to the present writer to be undeniably right; and the difficulty of it such, that no wise man will wish to hurry it. To speak scoffingly or lightly of the struggle in which the hearts of others are strained is to him impossible, and is painful when it meets him from opponents of Christianity. But the questions remain, How much is to be rejected as dross? What can be separated without fundamental overthrow of the religion?

Those reformers who first moved against the ecclesiastical Trinity rejected it as unsupported by the Christian Scriptures, in which they found nothing that could be plausibly alleged as going beyond the doctrine of Arius. That the origin and nature of Jesus was superhuman, perhaps all the first impugnors of the Trinity acknowledged,—on the European Continent equally as in England; and even in the beginning of this century the followers of Dr. Priestley, who maintained a purely human Christ, and rejected the devil, demons, and the eternal hell, very seldom ventured to appeal against the Scriptures to nature and reason. But the abundant proof which has been adduced of the fallibility and errors of the sacred narratives and of the writings attributed to the Apostles has changed all this, first in Germany, next among Protestant Unitarians everywhere. Dr. Lant Carpenter, the pupil of Priestley, was grieved to see his pupil James Martineau plunging into a wide sea of incredulity. Since the days of Channing, Unitarians have largely abated their hard and dry polemics against the Orthodox, and have largely increased the spiritual, tender, and elevating side of their creed. Channing, I suppose, was earliest to look away from the letter, and to seize the spiritual and imitable lineaments of the picture drawn for Jesus as the true creed of Christianity. No one has been more eminent than James Martineau in following up this idea. Coming later than Channing, with a far profounder knowledge of the history of the documents called Scripture, and of their scientific weaknesses—besides the intrinsic power of his mind, acute and widely learned in logic and psychology,—James Martineau now stands in a position which was inconceivable and unintelligible to his revered preceptor, Lant Carpenter, and has widely affected the judgment of all English-speaking Unitarians.

Another man may be mentioned for honor, though (if I may be allowed to say it) immeasurably inferior to James Martineau in force and clearness of mind,—the late Frederick Denison Maurice. Reared as a Unitarian, he abandoned his father's creed for its dryness and lack of spiritual warmth, and entered the Anglican Church, where at first he was supposed to be trying to "spiritualize Puseyism into a transcendental philosophy." In fact he soon fell into open conflict with Dr. Pusey about "sin after baptism," from which time he began gradually to assume an original and independent position, which made him the virtual centre of a new school within the Anglican Church. To expound his creed would be indeed an arduous undertaking; some have said that he could not do it himself intelligibly. He seemed to labor under a singular inability to discern things which to most minds are obvious. Thus he wrote a paradoxical pamphlet, entitled Subscription no Bondage, in defence of exacting subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles from the boys at King's College School,—a pamphlet which brought on him undeserved imputations of insincerity. His first considerable work was a book in three volumes on the Church, addressed to a Quaker, of which the avowed purpose was to debate the questions, Is there, Shall there be, Ought there to be, a Christian Church? An ordinary man might reply, "That depends on your definition of the word. Define the word Church, and we can answer your questions in a very few lines." So simple a mode of solution did not suit his temperament. But, however we may complain of his vagueness, of his obtuseness, contrasted with superfluous subtlety, yet his real goodness, his active benevolence, and charity of judgment, made him to be a power, and a salutary power, in the Anglican Church, great as was the offence given by some of his defections from Orthodoxy. Of these the most prominent was his utter renunciation of eternal punishment. The terror to the Orthodox from the renunciation does not arise from any intrinsic love of the doctrine (at which all but a very few shudder themselves), but from a belief, not at all groundless, that many other cardinal doctrines will have to be abandoned with it. The Rev. Charles Voysey hardly overstates, when he says that primitive Christianity was founded on the doctrine of hell as its basis ("fee ye from the wrath to come"); but Mr. Maurice's mind was not of such a character as to see logical conclusions, and after it had appeared that he remained on the whole within Orthodox limits, the jealousy against him rapidly subsided. He had been ejected from a Professorship at King's College by Principal Jelf, indignant at his heterodoxy concerning the hell; but ere long he was freely elected to be Professor of Morals at Cambridge. His heterodoxy was accompanied with an earnest desire to see and extol all that is best in Oriental religions, as well as in every form of Christianity; but he remained to the last an avowed Trinitarian, and had his own subtle ways, learned perhaps from Samuel Taylor Coleridge, of reconciling difficulties. Contemporaneously, the charity of the Anglican clergy towards all eccentric and heterodox thinkers whom they see to hold a spiritual morality has been ever on the increase; and no small part of this result may be imputed to F. D. Maurice among the more Orthodox.

Forty years ago, the Anglican clergy were divided into two classes, called High and Low; which meant simply that they held high or low views of Church authority. When Puseyism arose, the High Church soon split into two, and Maurice was among the earliest who visibly diverged from Pusey. Before long, the phrase Broad Church was heard, which was supposed to include Maurice and his friends. But it gradually appeared that a vast chasm separated him from those who were emphatically the Broad Church. For a while, one man in Oxford, the Rev. Baden Powell, had started the academicians by his freedom of thought; but his culture was that of physical science, not of literature and history. Professor Jowett and Dean Stanley have now long been discerned as the eminent and plain-speaking leaders of this section, though with marked diversities between them. How difficult is the position of Broad Church clergymen when they hold parochial appointments, the career of Charles Voysey sufficiently indicates. This class in general consists of men whose minds have opened since they made the legal subscriptions; and few are willing to eject themselves, though each consciously takes on himself the arduous and painful task of reconstructing Christianity.

When the problem is put before the mind, as an effort to recover the doctrine actually preached by the apostles of Jesus, there is no a priori objection of reason to such an inquiry. But new difficulty arises when it has to be admitted that the apostles were at variance among themselves, and that concerning their main gospel, the speedy return of Christ in the clouds of heaven (which was their chief point of agreement), they were victims of common delusion. That Paul was an essential innovator, and differed widely from James, "the Lord's brother," is confessed by the most clear-sighted. When miracle is further exploded, the narratives of the New Testament become gross misrepresentations; yet out of them, it seems, we are to extract "the essence of Christianity." If it be said (as it is said) that the apostles failed of understanding the mind of Jesus, which was greater, purer, and simpler than them all, one has to ask, Did the evangelists understand it any better? This is not imagined. Nay, to get rid of grave weaknesses and errors in the teaching attributed to Jesus, it is conceded and maintained that the narratives are sadly erroneous, and impute to him what he cannot have taught. Two inferences then follow: first, that with documents so imperfect we have no trustworthy and sufficient basis, if even the rejection of sayings as not genuine because they displease us were a sound procedure of criticism; secondly, that to publish an expurgated New Testament which shall contain only the genuine religion, is a prerequisite, that the reconstructed Christianity may be intelligible to the popular mind. No step has hitherto been made to that effect. The moment it is attempted, the thinness and rottenness of the material becomes to me undeniable. And after all, is any thing more certain concerning Jesus, than that he claimed to be the Hebrew Messiah, and as such, a dictator to every disciple? "Be not ye called guides; for one is your guide, the Christ," Matt. xxiii. 10. Now if it be found impossible to admit that he was the Hebrew Messiah, and co-sessor of the Supreme God, are we not in fundamental conflict with him, as much as were the unbelieving Jews, whose pitiable state at "the day of judgment" he dogmatically announces? If we (aided by eighteen centuries' experience) find ourselves to be wiser than Jesus, how can we be really his disciples? When we cut out of the narrative whatever offends our judgment, the pretended "re-construction of Christianity" is simply the construction of a new religion, which may, no doubt, take up some elements from Jesus (probably mere Hebrew doctrine), but only as it takes up other elements from Greek or Latin moralists.

To me, therefore, it seems that under the light of the nineteenth century (which explodes miracles, and dreams, and authoritative dictation of truth, and exposes variance and weakness in the apostles and in Jesus) all pretence of recovering or reconstructing the primitive Christianity is logically futile. Nevertheless, I think it unjust, unkind, and unwise, to indulge in petty attacks against those who are moving in our direction. To despise their intellect is a pernicious and groundless conceit. Also I regard it as a very grave error to overvalue logical consistency. Entire consistency is possible only to entire truth. Our imperfection will always entail partial error; and it is better to have many points of contact with truth, though on none of them we are so exact as to attain perfect internal coherence, than to keep greater self-consistency by exploding one or more sides of truth. Consistency in error, in so far as this is possible, is the most lamentable of all states, and most tends to obstinate self-conceit. Such is Roman Catholic consistency; such is that of materialistic fatalism. The minds which seem to us to be illogical in clinging to a Christian profession may do so from a more intense and a wiser appreciation than we have of some moral excellences in the system. Moreover, masses of men cannot give up a national religion, entirely and suddenly, without great numbers of them being demoralized. Surely, then, it is a happy circumstance, if a number of good and intelligent men can remain inside the churches, and continue to teach and minister, while gradually leading towards fuller light. We, by running too fast, leave the millions behind, and are incapacitated for teaching them. To bring them onward into a generous Unitarian Christianity, instead of leaving them to Calvinism, or driving them back into Catholicism, seems to me a great and noble achievement.

[For THE INDEX.]

WHO WAS INTENDED?

BY CHARLES K. WHIPPLE.

According to the narrative in the Pentateuch, the Hebrew people had followed the leadership of Moses from their departure from Egypt until they reached the border of that Canaan which had long been promised them as an inheritance and a possession. It appears by that narrative (Deut. iii., 28-29) that Moses had known, long before reaching this land of promise, that he would not be allowed to enter it, and that his leadership and his life must there cease. Moses had plainly and repeatedly declared these things to the people, who were of course anxious to know under whose guidance they should be in the bold enterprise of assailing and destroying the numerous and warlike tribes then in possession of Palestine. Under these circumstances, in the course of his parting instructions to the people, Moses gave them the following assurance:—

"The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee; of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken."—Deut. xviii., 15.

Looking at the continuation of Hebrew history in the book of Joshua, after the death and burial of Moses, we see that the comforting prediction above quoted was actually fulfilled in the leadership of Joshua, who at once took the post of command, was immediately accepted by the people as their rightful and satisfactory ruler, and continued to hold that position with their full approval to the end of a life nearly as long as that of Moses.

I propose now to inquire if, in the books popularly ascribed to Moses, there is evidence that he expected and intended his prediction above quoted to be fulfilled in Joshua.

There is abundant evidence that Joshua had been, through all the years of Hebrew history between Egypt and Palestine, the trusted friend and associate of Moses. The very first mention of the former records an important commission for the public benefit entrusted to him by the latter. When Amalek came, and fought with Israel in Rephidim,—

"Moses said unto Joshua, choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek. . . . So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek."—Ex. xvii., 9-10.

It is a noteworthy circumstance that, at this first public act of Joshua, "the Lord" also distinguished him by special approving mention. The narrative proceeds—

"And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword. And the Lord said unto Moses, write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua."—verses 13-14.

I will now quote further testimony that Joshua was a trusted friend and associate of Moses.

When the Lord called Moses to come up to him unto Mount Sinai (where he is said to have remained forty days and forty nights), the narrative tells us—

"And Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua: and Moses went up into the mount of God."—Ex. xxiv., 13.

When Moses came down from this long stay in the mount, it appears that Joshua was with him before his return to the people. For we are told—

"When Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp."—Ex. xxxii., 17.

When the people, journeying, reached the wilderness of Paran, Moses selected twelve heads of tribes to explore the land of Canaan, and report in regard to it. The ruler chosen from the tribe of Ephraim was "Oshea the son of Nun." (Numbers, xiii., 8.) And the narrative proceeds—

"These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called Oshea the son of Nun Jehoshua."—v. 16.

After making certain special arrangements with the tribes of Gad and Reuben, Moses again singles out Joshua for particular mention, as follows:—

"So concerning them Moses commanded Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel."—Numb. xxxii., 28.

And when, just before his death, Moses wrote a song of praise to the Lord for his wonderful works towards the children of Israel, Joshua is again mentioned in special connection with him, thus:—

"And Moses came and spake all the words of this song in the ears of the people, he and Hoshea the son of Nun."—Numb. xxxii., 44.

But there are also very significant passages in which Moses speaks to and of Joshua as his successor in the leadership. Thus, in the course of a rehearsal of past national triumphs, particularly over Sihon, king of Heshbon, and Og, king of Bashan, Moses says—

"And I commanded Joshua at that time, saying, Thine eyes have seen all that the Lord your God hath done unto these two kings: so shall the Lord do unto all the kingdoms whither thou passest. Ye shall not fear them; for the Lord your God he shall fight for you."—Deut. iii., 21-22.

Also in chapter xxxi., speaking "unto all Israel," Moses said—

"The Lord thy God, he will go over before thee, and he will destroy these nations before thee, and thou shalt possess them: and Joshua he shall go over before thee, as the Lord hath said."—v. 3.

"And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, Be strong and of a good courage: for thou must go with this people unto the land which the Lord hath sworn unto their fathers to give them, and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. And the Lord, he it is that doth go before thee; he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forsake thee; fear not, neither be dismayed."—vs. 7-8.

In the end of Deuteronomy, after the death of Moses, the writer of that portion of the book tells us—

"And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him; and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses."—xxxiv., 9.

There is other testimony, still stronger if possible, showing that "the Lord" selected and commissioned Joshua as the successor of Moses. After the latter had been plainly told that his death was near at hand—

"Moses spake unto the Lord, saying, Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd. And the Lord said unto Moses, Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, a man in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him; and set him before Eleazar the priest and before all the congregation, and give him a charge in their sight. And thou shalt put some of thine honor upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may be obedient. And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim before the Lord. At his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation. And Moses did as the Lord commanded him. And he took Joshua and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation: and he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses."—Numb. xxvii., 15-23.

Again, in what appears to have been an earlier period, though in a later book of the narrative, when Moses was rehearsing to the people their faithlessness in regard to the promised land, and the Lord's anger on account of it, he said—

"Also the Lord was angry with me for your sakes, saying, Thou also shalt not go in thither. But Joshua the son of Nun, which standeth before thee, he shall go in thither. Encourage him: for he shall cause Israel to inherit it."—Deut. i., 37-38.

A little later, Moses represents the Lord as having directed him thus:—

"Charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him: for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt see."—iii., 28.

And finally—

"The Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thy days approach that thou must die. Call Joshua, and present yourself in the tabernacle of the congregation, that I may give him a charge. And Moses and Joshua went and presented themselves in the tabernacle of the congregation. . . . And he gave Joshua the son of Nun a charge, and said, Be strong and of a good courage: for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I swear unto them: and I will be with thee."—Deut. xxxi., 14, 23.

After the death of Moses, this commission and these promises were renewed, as follows:—

"Now after the death of Moses, the servant of the Lord, it came to pass that the Lord spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, Moses my servant is dead: now, therefore, arise, go over this Jordan, thou and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. . . . There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not fail thee nor forsake thee. Be strong, and of a good courage: for unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance the land which I swear unto their fathers to give them."—Josh. i., 1, 2, 5, 6.

In accordance with the above, throughout this book, Joshua is represented as receiving his instructions directly from the Lord, as Moses did, faithfully fulfilling these instructions, as Moses did, and accepted by the people as their rightful leader, as Moses was.

From these details it clearly appears, I think, that the promise given by Moses to the people (quoted in the beginning of this article) was completely fulfilled in Joshua, in all its four specifications. It was "the Lord" who raised him up, who directed and sustained him. He was, "like Moses," one of the Hebrew people. He was also, "like Moses," an authorized and accepted interpreter of the Lord's will, a successful leader of the nation, holding it together as a nation, and sustaining it against all hostile action of foreign powers. And finally, unto him that people did "hearken," accepting him from first to last as their rightful ruler.

The close alliance between Moses and Joshua apparent throughout this narrative, the satisfactory execution of various important trusts committed by the former to the latter, and the fact that, when murmurings and divisions took place among the people, Joshua stood always on the right side, these things seem to make it probable that Moses expected and intended that Joshua should succeed him, ever after the approaching close of his own leadership was made known to him. But this seeming becomes certainty when we read (as in so many places above quoted) that "the Lord" had made this appointment, and that Moses followed Divine direction in announcing it to the people.

If we further notice that the promise of a leader and director to be divinely raised up from among them (declared by Moses, Deut. xviii., 15, and repeated by "the Lord," verses seventeen to nineteen) came immediately after directions to Israel what to do, and what not to do "when thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," it seems natural to suppose that this referred, and was intended to refer, to the immediate successor of Moses, who should lead the people there addressed to possess the inheritance in question.

Yet, strange to say, this promise, fitting Joshua so perfectly in all the particulars both of its announcement and its fulfillment, is assumed, by a large proportion of the Christian world, not to refer to Joshua, but to have been spoken of a person belonging to a far later stage of history; a person who was not born until centuries after, and who of course, far from leading, guiding, and protecting the people to whom Moses spoke, would never be seen or known by them; a person to whom that people could not "hearken" (an essential condition of the prediction), and who could serve in no manner or degree whatever the exigency then before them, in regard to which, by all ordinary rules of interpretation, the prophecy must have been spoken.

How comes such a misinterpretation to have been made? How comes it to have been popularly accepted?

It is the NECESSITIES OF THE ORTHODOX CREED which have caused the clergy to make, and the people to accept, this misinterpretation.

That creed must assume (not only without evidence but against evidence) that the various books now bound together under the title of the "New Testament" were so inspired by God as to be infallibly correct in doctrine and in fact. Whatever is stated in any of those writings must be believed, irrespective of evidence.

So when the unknown author of "the gospel according to Luke" (a book supposed to have been written somewhere between thirty and eighty years after the death of Jesus) represents Jesus (xxiv., 27) to have expounded to his disciples things in the writings of Moses concerning himself, it must be believed that Moses actually wrote about Jesus.

So, again, when the unknown author of "the Acts of the Apostles" (a book supposed to have been written somewhere between thirty and ninety years after the death of Jesus) represents Peter (iii., 22), and Stephen (vii., 37), and Paul (xxviii., 23) as assuming that Jesus was intended by that prediction of Moses about which I have been writing, it must be believed both that they said so, and that they were right in saying it.

So, again, when the unknown author of "the gospel according to John" (a book supposed to have been written somewhere between sixty-three and one hundred and twenty years after the death of Jesus) represents Jesus as telling his disciples that Moses wrote of him (John v., 46), it must be believed both that Jesus said so, and that Moses did so write.

The reason why these things must be believed is that the Orthodox creed requires it; just as the Romish creed, with far better scriptural authority, requires belief in "transubstantiation."

Let us now look on the other side, and see if any solid reasons exist for not believing the assumptions above mentioned.

In the first place we have all the writings which have ever been attributed to Moses, just as Jesus and his disciples had them; if the claim be true that the purport of Scripture is so plain that a man of but ordinary instruction and understanding need not err therein, we, you and I, reader, are perfectly competent to judge whether the terms and the circumstances of the prediction uttered by Moses require an application of it to Joshua, who fulfilled the conditions there expressed and implied, or to Jesus, who did not fulfil them.

We see, everybody can see, that these conditions were not fulfilled in Jesus.

The assemblage of Hebrews to whom Moses spoke were to "hearken to," that is, to follow and obey as well as to hear, the predicted helper. They actually held this relation to Joshua, but of course did not hold it to Jesus, since they all died centuries before he was born.

The circumstances under which the promise was uttered show that it contemplated these two things: a leader to supply the place of Moses immediately after his death, then impending; and a leader so conversant with warlike operations as to drive out before that people the various nations then inhabiting the land promised to them as an inheritance. Joshua did these things, and no one else did them. It would be impossible to surpass in absurdity the pretence that a promise including such meanings could have, or be intended to have, its fulfilment in a non-resistant, a Prince of Peace, one who ruled only by serving, one whose kingdom was not of this world, one whose subjects were forbidden to fight, because his kingdom was not of this world—even supposing that such a person had been living at that period.

As there is no passage in the writings attributed to Moses, other than that which we have been considering, which is even pretended to bear reference to Jesus, we have now only to glance at the preposterous pretence that a spiritual reference to Jesus, an announcement of far distant spiritual leadership, was intended by Moses in the promise in question. A little examination will show that this pretence has no better foundation than the other.

Putting aside the absurdity of supposing that Moses (while enjoining an assembly of Hebrews before him personally to "hearken" to one whom the Lord should raise up to be his own immediate successor) really intended to enjoin their successors, fourteen hundred years after, to "hearken" to the spiritual teaching of Jesus—putting aside, I say, this absurdity—we must notice that the "hearkening," an essential constituent of the prophecy, fails as thoroughly in the latter case as in the former. The Jewish people have never hearkened to Jesus in any sense. His doctrine has been rejected by them, alike during the short period when he preached among them, and through all the centuries since, while Christian missionaries have been laboring for their conversion. Only an insignificant minority of any one generation of Jews has accepted Jesus. The "hearkening" to him has been almost exclusively on the part of the Gentiles; and among those Gentiles whose various alien forms of faith have been supplanted by Christianity, none have made so determined, so persistent, and so embittered a stand against the claims of Jesus as the Jews.

I have shown, I think, that it is grossly erroneous to assume, either that Moses intended to refer to Jesus in his prediction quoted at the opening of this article, or that the terms of this prediction will warrant its application to Jesus. Whether Jesus himself ever made such an application of it—that is to say, whether the blunder of so making it is due to him or to his biographers—cannot now be known. But to me it seems very much the more probable as well as more satisfactory supposition, that these biographers made the mistake in question. If any apostle undertook to write down what he had heard Jesus say, it must be remembered that all the apostles misunderstood their master through his whole life, often misinterpreted his words, and utterly failed to appreciate the elevation of his views and the scope of his mission. But if, as the critical research of the last twenty years has made much more probable, the gospel narratives are the work of later writers, who had to depend upon current rumor and tradition for the words of Jesus, and yet who, being of Jewish origin, and specially desirous to convert their Hebrew brethren, sought as much as possible to show Hebrew Scripture favorable to the claims of Jesus, this may be the true explanation of so great an error as an attempt to transfer the meaning of Moses from the appropriate circumstances of his own time to the inappropriate circumstances of the time of Jesus.

REV. ROBERT COLLYER, of Chicago, told this story in a recent lecture: He was at a children's party one Christmas eve, and seeing a little boy sitting in one corner who was not dancing, he approached him, and asked why he did not join the others and dance. "I'm not danthing," said the boy solemnly, "beca'ushe I don't think danthing ith the great end of life." "Now, you know," added Mr. Collyer, "if that was my boy, I should think he was meant for a minister, but I should be sorry for the church that had to take him."—N. Y. Tribune.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The attention of the world of politics here has lately been chiefly concentrated on the House of Representatives. The changes in the organization of that body have been sweeping; and nearly all its new appointees are from the South and South-west. The proceedings of the House have thus far been of a rather general nature; but the adoption on the 15th, by a vote of 232 to 18 of the resolution presented by Mr. Springer, of Illinois, declaring that "the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States, in retiring from the Presidential office after a second term, has become a part of our republican government," etc., is considered a severe blow to "third term" intentions.

Mr. Blaine presented, on the 13th, his proposed amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting the donation of public moneys to sectarian schools, and it was at once referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, where it will probably remain "pigeon-holed" until the popular voice demands a settlement of the matter. The Church and State question, broached in Mr. Blaine's amendment and in the President's message, is still the subject of much discussion, but the Democrats refuse to be forced into an attitude of opposition to the position assumed by the President; and, indeed, the Democratic organ here, the Tribune, even suggests that that party "can anticipate the Republicans with a school amendment of their own, more comprehensive in character, and broader and more complete in its provision and scope." Many prominent Democrats are as fully alive to these issues as any of their political opponents, and a prominent politician of that party was heard to remark, the other day, that a political policy which ignores the question of the relation of the Church to the State is woefully short-sighted. That is the question which Gladstone, and Bismarck, and Victor Emanuel have been required to consider, and that is the question which may yet be the chief issue in American politics.

One of the daily papers here printed the President's message and Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman's Thanksgiving sermon in the same issue, and the topics being somewhat similar, the general correspondence of ideas has given rise to hints of a conference on the questions treated of, between the President and his "spiritual adviser." The Rev. Dr. is the pastor of the "National Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church" (at which the President is an attendant), and was formerly chaplain of the Senate. He relinquished the chaplaincy of the Senate and the charge of his flock to go on an official pleasure-trip as "inspector of consulates," tarrying long in the Holy Land. This move was necessitated by a regulation of the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, which prohibits a minister from remaining longer than three years consecutively in any one charge, Mr. Newman's time having expired. Since his return he has resumed this pulpit of the National Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, and frequently entertains audiences in various other churches in the city by a recital of his experiences in Palestine while on his official tour. The present chaplain of the Senate is Rev. Byron Sunderland, a strict, small, squeaky Presbyterian.

The newly elected chaplain of the House, Rev. I. Leander Townsend, made his advent in gown and bands, and kneeling on a footstool offered prayer from the Episcopal Prayer-book, which is a new departure in the way of official prayer. This performance, by the way, is no longer regarded or spoken of either by the public, the press, or the members themselves with any show of veneration; sometimes not even with respect; and a recent partisan prayer in the Senate was the subject of severe and general public criticism. Why does not Mr. Blaine, or some other lately-arisen Church and State separator in the House, begin by moving to abolish this chaplaincy farce? That would be beginning at home, and would look like business. Query: Does Grant or Blaine mean business?

VINCEX.

IS THERE TO BE A RELIGIOUS WAR AMONG PROTESTANTS?

BY THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.

What Henry Heine says of the Germans is apparently true of religious radicals: you seldom find one so crazy but he has some disciple crazier yet, who assumes to interpret him to the public. This is Nature's kind provision to guard the most daring heretic from the dangers of absolute solitude. Doubtless there is an ascetic charm in this comradeship of outlawry, this fellowship of the last crust. Yet I have always maintained, through a tolerably long experience of radicalism, that the wider our sympathies the better, so long as we concede no principle; and that the radical of all men should be eagerly on the watch for every olive-branch from the other side. Now I honestly believe, for one, that this is a time of growing peace, not of growing discord; and, if so, I wish to do justice to the fact, and bear a part in any improved good feeling. Dulce bellum inexpertis—war is sweet to those who have never tried it.

It is generally admitted that almost every Protestant sect in America shows a disposition to harmonize internal dissensions, and keep itself united. And even in those bodies which seem exceptions—as the Episcopalians and Baptists—the incipient schism is due in each case to a desire for a wider sympathy with the Christian world at large. And, as between the different sects, there is certainly an increased spirit of coöperation, at least for practical ends. The wide spread of "Young Men's Christian Associations" is a striking instance of this, and marks a great change from the time when Finney wrote that no doubt there was "a jubilee in hell every year, about the time of the meeting of the [Presbyterian] General Assembly" (Finney on Revivals, ed. 1835, p. 269). Yet all this might exist, and might be only a coalition against a common enemy, did not the relation of the members of these sects to more radical bodies and men show something of the same genial tendency.

To those who remember the manner in which Evangelical believers habitually allowed themselves to speak of the Universalists twenty five years ago, it will seem a sufficient proof of this changed attitude to say that there are now many such men who would gladly have received Universalists into the great Christian Alliance meeting in New York, and would welcome their coöperation in the present revivals. It may be said that the Universalist body has itself come half way, or more than half; so that this concession does not count for much. But the Unitarian body does not seem to me to have greatly changed within that time. It still holds in solution the same extremes of theology; and it is noticeable that the representative Unitarians, who are now most cordially treated by the Evangelical press and clergy, are not always the most conservative, but quite as often the most liberal men—liberal in their sympathies at least, if not radical in their theology. Consider, for instance, the position of such men as James Freeman Clarke and Edward Everett Hale. The former is a member of the "Free Religious Association," and the latter has presented himself as a guest at one of its social festivals, and exchanged cordial greetings. If, now, these men are sufficiently Evangelical for the informal fellowship of conservatives on the one side, and radical enough to strike hands with heretics on the other, where does the antagonism come in, and where shall the internecine war commence?

But, apart from such reconciling influences as these, it is plain that among American Protestants radical men have ceased to be, in any reasonable sense, the object of persecution, though they may often be still the subjects of avoidance. They are rather apt to complain of a deficiency of open attack, and certainly cannot apply to themselves the word "martyrdom" without laughing in one another's faces, like Cicero's augurs. Perhaps my own testimony on this subject would not have much weight; for as an avowed theist and believer in personal immortality I may not be an extreme test. But Mr. B. F. Underwood, the most eminent materialist lecturer in the United States, in speaking at the dedication of the "Paine Memorial Hall," last January, gave it as his experience that a man might now travel through the country expressing atheistical views, and receive only courteous treatment from the Christian clergy, so long as he himself showed a courteous and serious spirit.

I was present, a year ago, at a marriage ceremony, conducted jointly by the president of the Free Religious Association and by an Episcopalian doctor of divinity of excellent standing. When I expressed to the Churchman some pleasure at his liberality, he waived all thanks, saying that he was glad to do it—glad to show Mr. Frothingham that there was no real antagonism between their positions. There were important differences, of course, he said; but no antagonism. Now I cannot think we radicals are so in love with antagonism, "so spoiling for a fight," that we insist on thrusting weapons into the hands of our opponents and compelling them to controversy, even against their wills.

But it may be said that it is the duty of the radicals thus to compel them, so long as substantial points of difference remain. Yet where are the substantial points of difference? As I read the religious newspapers, I find doctrines which I was once accustomed to hold in horror—the very five points of Calvinism even—so stated as to deprive them of all that seriously repels the liberal mind. Whether these modern statements are consistent with the original confessions or not is no affair of mine; but it is an affair that concerns me very much to discover that I am less alienated from the Christian people around me than I had supposed. What candid radical does not now hear the doctrines of the trinity and the atonement, of original sin, of depravity, of future punishment so stated that he can either accept them, or can admit that but a thin barrier now separates them from those who hold them? Even the question that, in one sense, lies below all these—the question of final authority—is more and more frequently stated in such form as to leave between radicals and conservatives no such formidable difference. When Bishop Clark, in the Episcopal Church Congress, disavows for his whole denomination the theory of the verbal infallibility of the Scriptures; when Professor E. P. Gould, of Newton, speaks in the Bibliotheca Sacra (of January last) of "the probably allegorical account of the Fall of Man,"—these eminent theologians immediately disarm me in disarming themselves. For they have abandoned the position which the pious Neander regretfully attributed to American theologians, in the preface to the American version of his Life of Jesus Christ, nearly thirty years ago,—that of not being accustomed "to distinguish what is divine from what is human in the Gospel record." As soon as this is abandoned, the difference between these theologians and the heretics becomes a merely subordinate one: as my Episcopal friend said, a difference, not an antagonism.

The Independent of January 21st, 1875, contained these words:—

"That which to all Protestants is really the last resort is the human reason, enlightened by the Word of God. It was reason which first decided upon the canon of the Scriptures. Nobody disputes that. And the reason which once sat in judgment on the Bible may do it again."

I remember that once, after hearing a sermon from that able and excellent man, the late Horace James, I alarmed him a little by telling him that I could heartily indorse every word of it. Reviewing mentally what he had said, he replied, after a pause: "No matter! It was true, and I will stand by it, even if you do agree with it." Probably the Independent will be equally hard to frighten. And if it represents, as I think it does, a vast body of Evangelical men, then I do not believe that Mr. Abbot, of THE INDEX, on the one side, or the "Christian Amendment Association" on the other, can bring about another religious war within the limits of Protestantism.—N. Y. Independent, Dec. 16.

HUMAN NATURE IN FINANCE.

Everybody now admits that we have not seen the end of the contest over the currency. The result in Ohio has probably put an end to attempts to inflate; but in order to get back to specie payments, it is necessary to do a great deal more than refrain from inflating. We must both contract, and accumulate gold, and sell bonds in exchange for greenbacks to be destroyed; and this is sure to be a process to which there will be, as there has been, much opposition; so that the State of the popular mind about financial questions is, and will continue to be, of great moment, until all United States paper is redeemable in coin on demand. This leads us to say a word once more to those who are engaged in the work of informing the popular judgment as to the extreme importance of the mode of presenting the economical problems now before the country. It cannot be too constantly kept in mind that the phraseology used in discussing these problems and indeed, generally, in teaching political economy, is apt to be misleading when addressed to persons unfamiliar with processes of abstract reasoning. For instance, when we say that political economy treats of the laws which regulate the phenomena of wealth, we convey to nine out of ten "plain men" an incorrect impression about it, and one which seriously influences their opinions on such questions as the currency. They come to think of the "phenomena of wealth," of the flux and reflux of coin, of credit, of imports and exports, of demand and supply, of price and value, and so on, as if they were physical phenomena with the production of which human action had little to do, but which might, nevertheless, be regulated by legislation or administration. They therefore do not see why the supply of money cannot be regulated as we regulate the supply of water for a city, or hew stone for a building. When you talk of the value of a thing to them, they fancy that it lies either in some inherent quality of the thing itself, or in some quality which can be communicated to it by the sovereign power.

What is needed to correct all this—and it is especially needed in a democracy in which some of the nicest economical questions have now and then to be submitted to the popular vote—is the diligent preaching of the fact that political economy has really to do, not with things external to man, but with man himself; not with goods, or money, but with states of the human mind with regard to goods and money. When a lecturer on finance, or any other department of political economy is examining the question of value, for instance, he is probably, in form, talking about gold, or silver, or checks, or bills of exchange, but he is in reality talking about the condition of men's minds in the presence of certain phenomena; that is to say, about the way they will feel, or think, or calculate, when they are brought face to face with certain external facts. When I ask the value of a thing, I really ask, How do men in civilized countries feel about it? How much do they desire to get it? When I seek a measure of this desire, I have to take not an arbitrary thing of my own invention to which I give a name, but something for which I already know their desire to be also strong, tolerably permanent, and universal. My own notions, therefore, about measures of value, or how they might be made, such as Kelley, and Butler, and Phillips, preach on the stump, are of no sort of consequence. It might be well if we could make a standard of value out of paper, leather, ox bones, or sausages; but the fact is that the matter lies not in the hands of the legislature, but entirely in the mind of the exchanging portion of the human race. The only permanent standard there can ever be is one to which they will attach value on its own account, without reference to what this or that government can or will do to it. What this standard is can only be learnt, not by the rapid speculations of metaphysicians, but by actual experience, or in other words, by financial history. Interrogating this, we find that all civilized men prefer gold to any other substance as a measure of value, and if you ask them why, they will answer, because they know when they have got gold that they are independent of Kelley, and Butler, and all thrones, and principalities, and powers, and are secure against all revolutions, and wars, and panics, and can go to any part of the world and carry their fortune with them without loss or waste. This state of mind, whether wise or foolish, is the ultimate fact of all finance. There is no use in fretting over it, or declaiming against it, any more than against the inability of water to run up hill. It cannot be overcome; a man in our day who is engaged in trying to overcome it, is a person more or less demented. He belongs to the small body of the unsound, who are trying to discover perpetual motion, and the elixir of life. There are such persons, and there will always be such persons; but the press of civilized countries ought to be by this time delivered from the necessity of arguing with them.

If it be said, as it is said constantly, that this view of the mental attitude of civilized men towards the precious metals is contradicted by the extent to which business is carried on through paper, in the form of bank-bills, checks, drafts, promissory notes and book-accounts—or, in other words, through "credit," the answer is that credit, also, is a state of mind, and not simply a set of physical phenomena. It is the state of mind which, with regard to other matters than trade, is called mutual confidence, and means simply the disposition of men in society to believe the promises of their neighbors. They believe them when they say they will at a certain date give them so much coin, just as they believe them when they say they will at a certain hour meet them in a particular place, or give them so many bales of cotton. When a man takes the note of a bank, he does simply what a great wholesale house does when it parts with its goods for a three-months' bill. He says he is satisfied that he can have coin for the note when he pleases, just as the wholesale house says it feels sure it will have the money for the goods when the bill falls due. The bank-bill, or the retailer's draft, therefore, could not serve the purpose of money unless it had a certain state of mind behind it; and what has led the crazy fellows astray who want to do away with a metallic currency altogether, is that as they see the notes and bills, and do not see the state of mind, they think that all that is needed to make paper good money is the paper. "As you never draw your gold," they say to the trader, "you do not need it; banish it from your mind, and all will be well." To which the trader replies, that the paper is but a sign of his belief in certain facts; if this belief be destroyed, using the paper as money would be as foolish as trying to move a locomotive by making a puffing noise in the smoke-stack.

We have no doubt that if the part played by the human will in the production of economical phenomena were thus put forward more prominently in lectures, articles, and speeches on economical questions, a far clearer impression of their real nature would be made on a portion of the community which discussions on these topics do not now reach. If it could be got into people's heads that custom-house returns, bank statements, exchange quotations, price-lists, are all records, not simply of commercial transactions, but of the state of mind of some thousands of human beings at various times about various matters to which they are paying the closest attention, as deeply affecting their own welfare, we should assuredly see removed a great deal of the mystery which now surrounds "finance" in the eyes not only of ungrammatical plain men, but even of lawyers, clergymen, and women of education and thoughtfulness, and the rapid disappearance from the public view of the soft-money blatherskite. The wisecracks who are now sitting up at night devising schemes to enable the country to get rid of its debts without paying them, and at the same time do nobody any harm, would also rapidly rest from their labors; peace would at the same time enter into the souls of the publicists, who are possessed with the idea that foreign commodities are imported by a few persons who are living beyond their means, and need the warning voice and restraining hand of a Boutwell, or a Richardson, to check them in their mad career.

There are some words of deep wisdom on this subject in the late report of M. Wolowski to the French Assembly, on the monetary convention of the government with the Bank of France. After admitting that a certain amount of irredeemable paper might be kept afloat at par with gold—about $80,000,000—without working any apparent mischief, he draws attention, in pointed language, to the fact that the dangers or advantages of any system of currency do not appear on the surface, but are to be found in the state of mind which lies behind the currency; and goes on to explain that the whole of the legal-tender bank issues ought to be withdrawn without any similar substitute "on the part of the government, because it would be dangerous for the State to begin the issue of paper money; the ease with which such money can be created, even within narrow limits, might carry us further, and in order to reap a small advantage in the present, we should run the risk of a serious danger in the future, for the appearance of success already obtained might lead to an exaggeration of the system. It is better in a country as impressionable as ours is, and as ready to rush down the incline of bold enterprises, to give up an easy means of lightening the budget, than to encounter the risks of a seductive abuse. We must not tolerate even the harmless use of paper money to a very limited amount, for the limit is too weak to resist the pressure of growing demands. . . . Paper money is, as Napoleon I. said, the curse of nations; it is to the malade what the plague is to the physique. Let us take care not to let ourselves be assailed by such a peril."—New York Nation, Oct. 28.

A CLERGYMAN FREES HIS MIND.

THE WHITTLE AND BLISS, AND MOODY AND SANKEY EVANGELISM—DISASTROUS EFFECTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN:

Sir,—During the height of the Whittle and Bliss revival in this city last winter I addressed them a note, begging them, in the name of pure religion, to pack up their traps and go home. I intimated to these gentlemen that their meetings were only calculated to advance their own personal reputation, and to bring their own precious names before the public. I endeavored to convince them that the end would show that nineteen out of twenty of their converts would eventually become ten times more the children of hell than before.

Now, it was proclaimed at the end of this machinery evangelism that the best part of the young men of Louisville were renewed in the spirit of their minds, and would turn out a blessing to society. But, alas! what is the actual experience? Just what I predicted. It is acknowledged that this city was never in a more demoralized and corrupt condition. The columns of the Courier-Journal for the last month tell the story. There are over seventy-five indictments now pending against parties for gambling, and it is declared by those who know that this vice is practised by all classes of society, and to an extent which is simply appalling. Whittle and Bliss depart, and a multitude of professional gamblers take possession of the city. One excitement succeeds another. Religious excitement itself is the very best cloak a reprobate can put on, and Whittle and Bliss furnished the article in enormous quantities.

If Brooklyn can be made worse than it is, the means are now being supplied it at wholesale prices. Any reflecting person can see at a glance that religion is a life, and not an emotion, and that the effort to make Christians in the ready-made style, and with artfully-planned human machinery, will only result disastrously to the interests of Christ's religion.

I am a minister of the gospel of over thirty years' hard labor, and claim not only to have a correct view of that gospel, but also of poor human nature in its profoundest depths. Hence there is nothing I more deprecate than this Moody and Sankey sensationalism. "Beware of them that come to you in sheep's clothing, for inwardly they are ravening wolves." "By their fruits shall ye know them."

A CHRISTIAN.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 2.

—N. Y. Sun.

THE PHILADELPHIA Press says that many clergymen are making themselves needlessly "unhappy" over the centennial Sabbath, as the preliminary regulations of the exhibition, adopted nearly two years ago, provided that it should "be open to the public daily except on Sundays." The Christian Intelligencer, however, while admitting the existence of the regulation thus referred to, says a serious effort has been made and is still actively pursued by individuals and corporations who are peculiarly interested, to commit the Centennial Commissioners to the opening of the Centennial Grounds and Exhibition to the public on Sunday. It is the knowledge of this comparatively recent effort that has excited the grave apprehensions of the friends of the Sabbath; and these apprehensions will not be set at rest save by some definite assurance from the Commissioners that the question has been finally decided in favor of Sabbath observance.—Christian Union.

"MY DEAR FRIENDS, there are three things I very much wonder at. The first is, that children should be so foolish as to throw stones, clubs, and bricks up into fruit trees to knock down fruit; if they would let it alone, it would fall itself. The second is, that men should be so foolish and even so wicked as to go to war and kill each other; if let alone, they would die themselves. And the third and last thing that I wonder at is that young men should be so unwise as to go after the young women; if they would stay at home, the young women would come after them."

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 25.

A. Setliff, $2.20; John Peck, $3.20; A. L. Clark, $1.60; G. C. Glatte, $3.20; Mrs. J. W. Bigelow, $8.70; Miss L. M. Thurston, $3.20; G. E. Upton, $1.55; John Gillies, $2; J. S. Gilbert, $8.34; Jas. Purinton, $3.20; E. Schroeter, $3.20; Cash, $3.65; S. A. Tyrrell, 10 cents; J. T. Sunderland, 60 cents; J. Buffum, 10 cents; G. A. Walker, 25 cents; J. S. Palmer, $13.20; J. M. Holland, $1.60; J. D. Welby, $6.95; J. J. Dunlop, $6.40; H. E. Parsons, $3.20; R. P. Thompson, $3; D. B. Hale, $3.20; T. H. Knowles, $3.20; A. M. Knapp, $3.20; Jerome Biss, 50 cents; L. E. Baber, $1; Faltin Olsen, 20 cents; L. G. Jones, 25 cents; American News Co., $2.65; C. Folsom, $13.20; S. L. Hill, $6.20; F. A. Angell, $3.80; Miss H. Putnam, $5; S. P. Train, $4.20; G. G. Haynes, $3.20; E. Abbot, $3.40; J. L. Cutter, $3.20; J. D. Zimmerman, $3; Emma Herzog, $3.20; Arthur Bate, $7; Edward Allen, $6.20; C. W. Estabrook, $6.40; Miss S. E. Mulliken, $3.20; T. McWhorter, $3.20; T. P. Wilson, $3.20; Israel Betz, $5.40; J. F. Chandler, $3.20; M. P. Hayward, $3.20; E. R. Harris, $3.30; F. Hinckley, $3.20; Franklin King, $6.40; J. P. Hanson, $3.20; P. H. Magill, $3.75; Miss K. R. Shailer, $2; J. M. Hawks, $2.70; B. M. Smith, $1; C. H. True, $1; L. Halsey, 10 cents; N. S. Townsend, 50 cents; C. S. Murdock, 35 cents; Chas. Richardson, $3.20; J. P. Quincy, $3.20; R. P. Hollowell, $7.80; Wm. Archibald, $6.40; E. Chapman, $4.40; G. W. Kirk, $3.20; A. Pope, 50 cents; S. W. Coburn, $1.40; Mrs. S. R. Morgan, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

THE LAWS CONCERNING NEWSPAPERS.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, considered as wishing to continue the subscription.
2. If subscribers wish their papers discontinued, publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible. Notice should always be given of the removal.
4. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office or place to which they are sent, they are held responsible until they settle bills and give notice to discontinue.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a paper from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, will be held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers pay in advance, they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to continue to send it, and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

OCTOBER.

A FRAGMENT.

Those days were sunny, sweet, and beautiful,
For then it was October, month of months,
The Queen-month chosen out from all the twelve;
When all the gold and scarlet Nature owns
Shed down, as suited well to royal guest.
And in those days I found the most delight,
In taking rambles long about the grounds;
Sometimes through garden paths I took my way,
To which late flowers their brilliant beauties lent;
Sometimes along the quiet road I strayed,
Noting with lowered eyes the many prints
Left by the feet of those who earlier there
Had walked before me in the selfsame dust,
And often stopping by the way to cull,
With eager hand, some stem of golden-rod
That poised itself so lightly in the air,
Or its companion swinging by its side,
Some spray of feathery aster, purple-deep;
Nor could I leave alone, ungathered there,
The sumach's long, illuminated leaf,
But plucked and plucked, thinking I saw in each
A warmer scarlet than the last had shown,
A spot of brighter green or yellower gold,
Or deeper tint of crimson, rich and warm,
Than in all others I had gathered burned:
Taking them all, a bunch of splendors rare,
To gladder make the aspect of the home.

And now and then I'd choose for longer walk,
To wander far along the river's banks,—
The river that in summer time did tempt
Me many an hour to spend in idle guise,
Watching its current as it glided calm
Away out of my sight among the hills.
But it had taken on a different look,
A look that seemed to chill me as I gazed;
Could it the same stream be? I asked myself;
Were those dark places underneath the trees
That grew along its edge, so dark and cold,
Were those the restful shadows that had seemed
So pleasant in the sultry July days?
Its summer loveliness had passed away,
Not e'en a lingering lily to be seen;
Its banks that erst had been so beautiful,
Whose robes had "brodered been with sweet, wild-flowers,
Now stretched themselves along in threadbare garb.
I used to hurry on with feet that trod
Unheeding where the blossoms all lay dead:
The violets, fleur-de-lys, forget-me-nots,
The flowers called cardinal and the wake-robins.

But I loved best to be among the trees,
The friendly, old, companionable trees;
And so the spot to which I oftener went
Was the large park that lay before the house;
Whose ground here swelled to many a rounded knoll
Thick to the top with lofty che-tnut trees,
Or there sank gently to some curved hollow
Lovely in verdure and soft lined with moss.
Oh! how I used to sit and gaze and gaze,
With eyes that never satisfied could be,
That oft were full of tears, I know not why—
For joy, I think, for truly I was glad.
The brook that flowed there, singing at my feet,
Was not more free from care or pain than I;
I used to watch it as it hurried on,
Slipping so deftly over the small stones,
And hastening round the large ones in its path
It heeded not, shone sun or moon in sky,
Were the woods mute or vocal with birds' song,
Whether fair flowers did use it as a glass
Or only withered boughs looked down at it,
And somewhat so it was then with myself—
I cared not how went on the outside world,
Not questioning a single how or why,
And so my life passed onward pleasantly,
Yielding to every change as easily
As in the summer air sways upland wheat.

But oft my eyes would wander from the brook,
Through some rare opening in among the trees,
O'er the large, verdant stretch of grass that led
To other hills and other dells beyond.
Before me lay a belt of forest trees,
That formed a glorious boundary to the view,
An arc of beauty of a thousand hues.
Low down, close to the ground, grew the scrub-oak,
Whose color of the deepest claret shade
Showed clear against the light green fringe of leaf
That clothed with beauty slender birchen trees,
Growing the next in order, upward looking
That in their turn displayed themselves full well
In contrast with some sombre shades behind.
And here and there, from out some darkest clump,
Of pines that in the fading light looked gray
And rough as some stone-built pile of old,
Shot up a vivid maple, all a-flame,
That seemed like to a gorgeous banner flung
To the brisk breeze from some high castle wall.
Forming the background to this wonder-view,
Were ranks of chestnuts, pressed against the sky,
Whose indistinct, dun-colored foliage served
To show to better vantage all the rest.
It had but little beauty there so far,
When taken as a whole, and yet I knew
That in a single leaf was often seen
The richest shades of brown that could be found,
Blended together with gradations nice,
And through them all a network of gold veins,
Strung with bead-spots of perfect rust color;
And over all the distant heaven spread,
With opal tints the whole earth compassing;
What wonder that I used to gaze so long,
Watching the sun set and the night come on?
Watching the light that lay at first so strong
And clear upon the grass at the tree roots;
See it move slowly upwards towards the trunks,
Hasting so warmly and in such bright spots,
Upon the underbrush that grew around;
Then shining full upon the myriad leaves,
That crowd the middle branches of the trees,
Shedding transparent, emerald, brightness down;
Reaching at last the topmost boughs of all,
Where lovingly it lingers for a while
As if 'twere loth to leave the earth so fair.
Slowly at last it fades; a shadow dark
Has risen from below to take its place;
A chill breeze rustles through the branches then,
That sway and bend as if they said "good-night,"
And evening's blessed resting-time had come.

Then in the purple haze of evening-tide
The homeward pathway was I wont to take,
All soul-expanded with the beautiful;
I went as one transported by the air,
With feet that seemed on moving clouds to rest,
And eyes that saw not any earthly sight.

CARROLL GODFREY.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 30, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer. The editor is obliged to reserve the right of withholding from publication any article of a libellous or immoral character.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England),
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK,
Editorial Contributors.

A MINNESOTA correspondent has just informed us of the existence of a Liberal League at Medina, eighteen miles west of Minneapolis—Mr. Allen Grave, President, and Mr. Taylor Archibald, Secretary. Our informant kindly adds: "I have taken THE INDEX ever since its first issue, and cannot do without it. I wish every voter in our country could read it, for then it would be a beacon light to warn the nation of hidden rocks, shoals, and currents, towards which I fear we are tending. I hopefully hail the Liberal League movement; it is the only organized movement in our country that will check the encroachments of the church-power, and preserve the rights and the liberty of the whole nation."

THIS COMMUNICATION has been received since our last issue:—

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 20, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—At a meeting held lately by the "Madison Association of Liberal Thought," a resolution was introduced and passed, directing me, as the Secretary of said society, to forward to you a copy of our Constitution, and request you, if you thought best, to enroll us in your list of Liberal Leagues, as published in your paper. We desire to be so enrolled, if our Constitution meets with your views.

Yours very respectfully,

W. LA FAYETTE SMITH, Sec'y.

We shall be very happy to obey the above vote, if the Secretary will be so kind as to forward us a list of the officers, without which we are unable to comply fully with the request of the society. But we hasten to disclaim any possible pretension of a right to exercise discretion as to the insertion or omission of names in that list. It is a list published as a matter of journalistic news, not of official responsibility. We regard it as an act of courtesy and kindness to be informed of the organization of new leagues, which we are happy to reciprocate by publishing the fact at once; but each society must decide for itself whether it chooses to belong in that list. We shall never dream of assuming any jurisdiction or official right not expressly conferred upon us; and the reported wish of any organization to be enrolled in the list is absolutely decisive as to its right to be there.

NOT A FEW of our readers, in renewing their subscriptions to THE INDEX, take occasion to congratulate us on the President's Message—sometimes in terms we have not deserved. It is certainly a fair subject for mutual congratulation by all friends of impartial justice, that the great principles for which THE INDEX contends have won at least a very important, though partial, recognition by their own intrinsic truth. It is well to point out here, that the phrase "sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas," in the Des Moines speech, became "religious, atheistic, or pagan tenets," in the Annual Message. This is a change in the precise direction suggested by the "Open Letter to President Grant," which was mailed with a private letter to the President's personal address before the Message was sent to Congress. We should, of course, like to think that the "Open Letter" had a little influence in producing this change of the word "sectarian" to the broader word "religious," for then we should feel certain that the President really intended to recommend the total exclusion of the Bible from the schools, as we notice very many papers understand him now to do; but we have no evidence of any such influence beyond the bare fact of the change. That the effect of the Message has been most salutary becomes more evident every day; for the daily press now teems with so many articles on the relations of Church and State that the public mind can hardly escape getting healthily educated on this subject.

GRADES OF RELIGIOUSNESS.

There are different grades or degrees of physical strength, of health, of intelligence, of conscientiousness, of will-power, of affectionateness,—in short, of every quality or attribute of human nature. Why should it be a difficultly intelligible position to hold that there are different grades or degrees of religiousness, regarded as an essential and universal element of human nature?

From the very beginning of our thinking on the modern religious problem, it has seemed to us indispensable to find some clear conception of religion which shall be, in every point of view, consistent with the acknowledged right of the intellect to pursue truth in absolute independence of all foregone conclusions. If religion stands for anything necessarily permanent in human life, it must be able to reconcile itself to any possible result, in any possible direction, of the activity of human thought. To lay down any opinion whatever as a limit which must never be overpassed or removed is a violation of mental liberty sure to defeat its own object in the end; for the history of the human mind, if it proves anything, proves the absolute incapacity of thought to set a limit to itself which cannot be removed by the same authority which originally established it. No opinion whatever can be held as a positive finality, if thought has really a right to be free from the arbitrary interference of the will; the attempt to establish such a finality, and to command veneration for it by appeals to conscience, or affection, or anything that is not reason, has always signally failed, and must fail forever. In fact, every attempt of this nature always excites a reaction, which for a time tends to carry thought to the very opposite extreme of the opinion in whose behalf the futile tyranny is essayed. It is the vital interest of truth that no such unnatural deflection of thought shall ever be caused by unwise acts of interference with the natural and orderly processes of the intellect.

Conceding, therefore, the right of the intellect to act in obedience to its own inherent laws, untrammelled and unbiased by any pretence of dictating the terminus at which its search for truth must end, we very early sought to discover a conception of religion which should be perfectly harmonious with this other conception of the rights of intellect. The result of this search was embodied in the very first sentence of the very first number of THE INDEX: "Religion is the effort of Man to perfect himself." This definition was avowedly framed with a wish to make it compatible with any possible conclusion on any possible religious question. Two special essays on "Human Ideals" and "The Essence of Religion" [THE INDEX, April 2 and 9, 1870] were devoted to this subject, which has occupied no small space in these columns from the start, and is treated at great length in the Index Tract No. 14, "A Study of Religion; the Name and the Thing." To these careful statements we must refer our kind and faithful friend, Professor R., who in another column of this issue puts questions which we are unable to answer satisfactorily in a brief editorial article.

But perhaps the essence of Professor R.'s objection to a recent re-statement of our original conception of religion may be found in his supposition that, in holding up the "pursuit of all ideal excellence" as the central object of religion, we would arbitrarily limit the sphere of religion to the world of humanity, including self; that, therefore, no scope is left for the play of religious emotions which have no discernible relation to ethical improvement, either of self or of others; that duty, however largely construed, can never take the place of love, aspiration, trust in and soul-communing with an unseen spiritual power; in fine, that no conception of religion can be adequate which omits an affirmation of this higher power. This, if we mistake not, is the gist of his objection.

The proper answer would seem to lie in pointing out that any conception of religion which includes an affirmation of a superior spiritual power is too narrow to embrace all the phenomena of religious life in the world, as made known by history, literature, art, and indeed personal observation. Our express object has been to find an idea of religion large and comprehensive enough to include all such phenomena, both theistic and atheistic. To our mind, religion is essentially living upwards, and irreligion is living downwards. Whoever is struggling to reach a higher good than he has yet attained, however dimly it may be conceived, however crude and relatively low it may be, seems to us to be living in the same direction with the purest saints; and the saints are no saints, if they cannot sympathize with every soul that is groping to realize in its own life what it imagines, even erroneously, to be better than that which it has actually reached. Who has absolutely attained? Who is not a groper, judged by a higher insight? On the long slope to perfection whose top is lost in the clouds of heaven, who cannot see others above as well as below, yet all striving to win the same serene height? The theist and the atheist whose lives are directed upwards, and not downwards, will each suppose the other to be a believer in error; yet the secret inspiration of their lives may still be the same, and in our thought they may be equally religious. Surely, the theist who imagines himself to have surpassed George Jacob Holyoake in fundamental religiousness of spirit or of life seems to us to be the victim of a pitiable pharisaism and conceit. The special type of thought and feeling with which we are internally familiar is no fit standard for the measurement of other lives; justice demands that, so far as his character is the subject of censure or admiration, every man shall be judged by his own ideal, not ours. Ignorant ideals which lead to acts hurtful to the general good may be as religiously obeyed as those which promote the general welfare; and society has no right to do more than to restrain the hurtful acts themselves. The religious impulse cannot take the place of intellectual enlightenment; it is necessarily an unsafe director of conduct, if not instructed and guided by a well-educated intellect. Recognition of the fact that religiousness is of infinite grades of actual elevation and usefulness, of infinite variety as to form and beauty of manifestation, is now superlatively important. The highest known types of religion include everything that is sweet and lovely, noble and expansive and uplifting, in human life; and yet they are of the earth, and may not innocently look down with superciliousness on types as honestly religious, yet inferior in mode of expression or actual degree of attainment. Certainly, the conception of religion which we have (not very successfully, it seems) tried to unfold sets a limit nowhere to the preaching and outreaching powers of the human soul; it would only render impossible henceforth the conceit that our own intellectual conclusions about religion give us a shadow of right to misjudge our brothers, or to pronounce them less religious than ourselves.

FREE FREEDOM.

The largest words never define themselves. It takes generations to define them. They are defined by the exigencies of the occasions that make them emphatic. The words free and freedom are just now undergoing this analytical process. Some seem to think it is enough to shout the word as if it carried with it a magical effect to enlighten and stimulate, sanctifying the lips that speak it, and blessing the ears that hear. Others regard the word "as mere sound and fury, signifying nothing," hold freedom itself to be only a condition, bringing with it disadvantages as well as advantages, and are inclined to look with special suspicion on the professions of freedom made by liberals, who use freedom, if not as "a cloak for licentiousness," as a disguise to cover bigotry of a new sort. Thus far men have been occupied in claiming and securing liberty for themselves. They are still busy with that task, a task of analysis and decomposition, which aims at reducing the homogeneous to its elements. Sect after sect, party after party, man after man, asserts the right to be independent, free in thought, speech, and action. Protestantism makes the first assertion, then the divisions of Protestants appeal, one by one,—the Universalists, the Unitarians, the Radical Unitarians; then the non-Christians, the anti-Christians, the Free Religionists, the Tom Paine infidels, the materialists, the scoffers, take their turn, in claiming liberty to write and speak their peculiar opinions, unchallenged and unmolested. This freedom, with us, has been fairly won. Neither platform nor press suffers from legal constraint, or from any other that can be removed. Such impediments as ignorance, prejudice, unsympathetic feelings thrown in the way can be displaced only by time and the knowledge that time brings. Of those none have a right to complain. As far as society can do it, the most entire freedom is conferred on thinkers, speakers, and writers. The most obnoxious opinion, regarded simply as opinion, may be uttered without fear of penalty other than that of criticism, disapproval, and angry expressions on the part of those who think it absurd or dangerous. This penalty no honest man shrinks from, nor murmurs at; it defines and deepens his sense of responsibility.

The lesson in freedom that is as yet unlearned, and seems to be very hard to master, is that others have the same freedom that we have. In the effort to secure freedom, those from whom it must be extorted seem to be more tyrannical and oppressive than at heart they are; their unwillingness to extend their lines, their inability to over-pass their boundaries or enlarge their definitions is construed as a sign that they are in bondage themselves, and determined to subject others to bondage if they can. The asserter of his own liberty forgets that his opponents have the same right to controvert and denounce his opinions that he has to avow them, and in so doing is exercising precisely the same liberty he exercises himself; he forgets that there is no more bigotry in holding one set of beliefs than in holding another; no more intolerance in clinging tenaciously to Orthodox views than in clinging to radical; he forgets that the opposition of his adversary is as much the result of his liberty as the proclamation he makes is of his; having gained freedom for himself after years of painful effort, he falls into the notion that he is the only really emancipated person in the world, and resents as a sort of personal affront his neighbor's pretension to integrity of mind in maintaining what he has abandoned, and believing what he has discarded.

Hence the peculiar form of intolerance that we have called "radical bigotry"; the intolerance of the emancipated towards those who are not emancipated to the same degree, or whose emancipation is in another direction, or under a different form. Theirs is not free freedom, but restricted freedom; antipathetic not sympathetic freedom; selfish not humane freedom; freedom as a private profession, not freedom as a rational principle; freedom got, not freedom given. The Free Religious Association makes a point of asserting and vindicating freedom for all, on the ground that freedom is the prerogative of the human mind, belonging to it by virtue of its essential characteristic as mind; no one mood or set of mind having a monopoly of rationality, but all intelligence being equally and alike privileged. This is free freedom, liberal liberty. In this liberty, and in this alone, we have hope for the future.

O. B. F.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—By the time this letter reaches you the Guibord burial case will be pretty stale; but I hope it is not too late to make some remarks on the collateral subjects of "consecration" and "cursing," which unhappily still occupy the interest of childish men.

It passes my understanding that here, in the nineteenth century, it can be possible for any one to hold a superstitious regard for what is called "Christian burial," and for "consecrated" ground. I lay emphasis on the word superstitious, because it is both natural and right to treat with becoming reverence the bodies of the dead; to set apart for their reception ground that shall not be trampled over, or made the wild scenes of mirth or strife; and lastly, to bury them with such adjuncts of religious rites as may best tend to soothe the grief and to raise the hopes of the mourners.

In so far as consecration secures the burial ground from unseemly occupation and outrage, there can be no harm in it; and in so far as Christian burial meets the wishes and tastes of the survivors, we have no word to say against it. Understood as only designed to comfort and cheer the living, and as having no effect whatever on the condition of the dead, we cannot rightly call the service superstitious. The superstition lies wholly in the latent feeling that the words of the priest or minister over the corpse have some undefined charm which will favorably affect the departed spirit. In like manner, the superstition associated with consecration does not lie in the decent act of setting apart a building or a piece of ground for special uses, but in the utterly foolish notion that a consecrated spot is made more holy than any other spot not consecrated.

There is reason and a sense of congruity in setting apart a building for religious uses alone (in which of course I include all kinds of instruction in natural science as well as in ethics), and in prohibiting from it theatrical performances, or dancing, or banqueting.

Quite as obvious is the reasonableness of enclosing a piece of ground for the burial of the dead in such a manner as to protect it from disorderly conduct or boisterous play.

But no reason whatever can be found for the superstitious reverence usually accorded to churchyards and consecrated ground, as if not to be buried within their precincts were a dire calamity or grave peril to the souls of the dead.

Let people rub their eyes and wake up a moment or two to ask themselves why on earth they care so much about Christian burial, and resting in consecrated ground.

At the root of it lies a childish fear of some undefined evil, and a childish belief in some magic charm conferred by consecration and Christian burial.

Even Roman Catholics may well inquire what danger there can possibly be in being buried anywhere on God's earth, if without any risk to the soul the body may be lost at sea, devoured by fishes, or scattered into a thousand fragments by an explosion? No true Catholic would have any fear for the eternal safety of his friend who should thus be left without a grave in consecrated ground, and the rites of Christian burial. Then why should he hesitate to deposit the beloved remains anywhere so long as they were screened from molestation; or feel the least anxiety about burying them with his own hands in solemn silence, or with what prayers he might choose to offer himself?

I much fear that the friends of Guibord will not only feel wounded and insulted by the Bishop of Montreal's ugly curse, but that they will suffer the far deeper pang of believing that the soul of Guibord himself will be tormented by it. And if this be in truth what they feel, if it be typical of Roman Catholic or semi-Protestant feeling all over Christendom, what a ghastly revelation it is to you and me of the low state of intelligence around us! What a disclosure of the dark horrors of superstition, worse by far than the infantile follies of fetishism—more oppressive, indeed, than any life-long fears of bodily harm! Have we not said, over and over again, "Fear is the deadly foe to human freedom and progress"? Fear puts a weapon into the hands of ecclesiastics which all our batteries cannot blow out of their grasp. Fear is the chain by which the poor slaves of priestcraft bind themselves in miserable bondage. Fear is the prolific parent of the separations, exclusions, and strifes between man and man,—the secret of the selfish luxury of consecration, the venom in the sting of Episcopal cursing.

I almost wish I could gather round me half a score of indignant Catholics, and face that cursing bishop with a cool defiance.

I would say, "Here we are for your malignant pleasure. Now take your bell, book, and candle, go through the abracadabra of your senseless rites, and, muttering all your darkest incantations, curse us now with all your heart, in the name of Church, of Heaven, and of Christ. Pour forth your worst, your most withering, malediction, and see if it will hurt even a hair of our heads. The only harm it can do is to your own foolish, arrogant, and deluded soul; for the curse shall return to your own bosom, feeding your hatred and malice, and devouring all the better feelings of your natural heart, withering up in you all that makes life worth living for, all that lends grace and beauty to the exercise of power."

Heavens! Are we going to endure much longer these impudent and impious assumptions? Will our deluded fellow-creatures still crawl and shiver at the feet of these proud priests? Have they no manliness left in them to shake off their childish fears, and to strike the blow for their own freedom? Have they no faith in the living God that they must cringe and crouch before the threats and curses of mortal men?

Believe me, it is not atheism but rational faith that can cure these deadly maladies. Atheism plays into the priests' hands, and drives many a trembling but honest inquirer back into the narcotic slumber which awaits him in the weird embraces of Rome.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., Dec. 4, 1875.

THE PHILADELPHIA PETITION.

Last week we published the excellent letter of Mr. Dye, Secretary of the Philadelphia Liberal League, to the Board of Public Education; and we here reproduce it, to make the subsequent extracts more easily intelligible:—

THE HON. M. HALL STANTON, PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF PUBLIC EDUCATION:

Sir,—I have the honor to transmit to the honorable body over which you preside the following resolution, which was considered for several weeks, and finally passed by the Philadelphia Liberal League:—

WHEREAS, The use of the Bible in the public schools is a violation of the recognized American principle that the Church and the State ought to be absolutely separate; and

WHEREAS, It is a practice which gives a distinctively Protestant character to the public school system, is grossly unjust to all non-Protestants taxed to support it, and thereby dangerously aids the Roman Catholic Church in its openly-avowed warfare upon it; therefore

Resolved, That the Liberal League of Philadelphia hereby respectfully petition the Board of Education to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools of this city, and that the officers of the League are hereby instructed to carry this resolution into effect.

In compliance with this resolution, I respectfully petition the Board of Public Education to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools of this city. Herewith please find thirty copies of the very able and comprehensive address of Damon Y. Kilgore, Esq., delivered before and published by the League for the use of your Board. This address is a fair and just exponent of the views of the Liberal League of Philadelphia, and has already received the highest commendation of some of the ablest thinkers in our land. The question of secular education has already assumed such importance as to be felt at the ballot-box, and the President of the United States, with a keen foresight, has made it a prominent feature in his last annual message to Congress.

Let it be distinctly understood that, if the Protestant Bible were absolutely as faultless as the most ignorant and bigoted of those who indorse it believe, our objection would remain to its being made an instrument of religious oppression to those who do not so regard it. The equal rights of all citizens demand its exclusion from the public schools because the schools belong equally to all citizens, and no majority, whether Protestant or Catholic, has any right to oppress the religious conscience of the minority. In conclusion, gentlemen, allow me to add that the inexorable logic of events fast passing into history teaches the importance of your speedy and favorable consideration of the subject involved in this petition.

JOHN S. DYE,

Secretary of the Liberal League.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14, 1875.

The same subject, as we learn by the Philadelphia Inquirer of December 16, was discussed at a meeting of the Radical Club:—

The regular stated meeting of the Radical Club of Philadelphia was held yesterday afternoon, at No. 333 Walnut Street. Mr. E. M. Davis occupied the chair. Dr. John M. Spear offered the following:—

Resolved, That the Radical Club finds encouragement to continue its reformatory work in the views expressed by the President of the United States in his recent message to Congress, with regard to the unsectarian character which the public schools ought to maintain, and the equitable taxation of church with other property, and agree with him that now, the beginning of the second centennial of our national existence, is a most fitting time for these reforms.

Remarks were made by Messrs. Ruby, Jacob Byrnes, and Dr. Spear, Mrs. Spear, and Mr. Hughes. The latter did not think that the action of General Grant was intended as an appeal to the Protestants in order to secure his reelection for a third term. He considered, however, that national interference in State affairs was dangerous.

Mrs. Dr. Pratt thought the President foresaw that the time was coming when the negative bearing of the Constitution relative to religion would be overcome.

Lucretia Mott was much pleased with anything she saw that looked to the taking up of great subjects. She marvelled that any one should say it was an interference with State rights that the children should be so educated as to vote intelligently.

After a few remarks by Mr. Marvis, of Illinois, Dr. Spear's resolution was adopted.

The following resolution was then discussed:—

Resolved, That we demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished, and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

Remarks were made by Mrs. Bladen and Rev. W. J. Potter, a Unitarian minister from New Bedford, and others, after which the further consideration of the resolution was postponed. Adjourned.

The action taken by the Board of Education on the League's petition was thus reported by the Press of December 15:—

The following was received from John S. Dye, secretary of the Liberal League:—

WHEREAS, The use of the Bible in the public schools is a violation of the recognized American principle that the Church and State ought to be absolutely separate; and whereas, it is a practice which gives a distinctly Protestant character to the public school system, is grossly unjust to all non-Protestants taxed to support it, and thereby dangerously aids the Roman Catholic Church in its openly avowed warfare upon it; therefore

Resolved, That the Liberal League of Philadelphia hereby respectfully petition the Board of Education to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools of this city, and that the officers of the League are hereby instructed to carry this resolution into effect.

The matter led to debate.

Dr. Nebinger thought it but a political trick, and urged that it be sent back to the people who sent it.

General Wagner deprecated any disrespectful treatment of what was a respectful document.

Mr. Steinmetz didn't think it was respectful. He believed it should be laid on the table, or returned to those who sent it.

Mr. Green viewed it as an insult.

General Wagner denied that it was an insult. He believed it brought up an important question, and one that must soon be met all over the country. He believed the board should meet it now.

Mr. Gratz said the question had attracted much attention everywhere. For himself he wanted no change, but still he believed all should have a hearing, for he knew many who are opposed to reading the Bible in the schools. It was better, in his opinion, to meet the matter at once, and he was willing to vote that the board deem it inexpedient to take any action in the matter.

Mr. Elkins favored laying the communication on the table.

It was laid on the table by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Abbott, Campbell, Davis, Elkins, Fagen, Green, Hoffman, Hutchinson, Jackson, Jenks, Jones, Lehman, MacAvoy, McBride, Milligan, Nebinger, Nichol, Steinmetz, Stewart, Wright, and Stanton, president—total, 21. Nays—Messrs. Freeborn, Gratz, Shedd, and Wagner—total, 4.

We would respectfully suggest to the brave Philadelphia League that the rejection of their petition in this summary and unintelligent manner is no cause for surprise or discouragement. Defeat after defeat must be expected before the victory can be won; and, in a high sense, such a defeat as this is a partial victory, after all. Truth, justice, righteousness, and the purest benevolence, are on our side in this movement, and ultimate triumph is certain if we persevere. Let the Liberal League rise, like Antæus, with fresh strength after every fall; if its own pluck and self-devotion fail not, succeed it must and will. It has made itself heard by vast multitudes already. The people do not yet understand the invincible moral strength of its cause; but they will find this out in time, and learn that a little squad of moral heroes, armed with intelligence and persistent will, are more than a match for millions that rely on nothing but their numbers. This demand for justice will yet be heard respectfully. Now is the time for petitions with numerous signatures, for public meetings advertised to discuss the question, for articles in the papers, for all the means used by those who trust to reason and right and the conscience of mankind. Let it be known that the Liberal League will put a Secular School Ticket in nomination for a new School Board, and there will be no lack of interest. Only steer clear of every mean device and doubtful expedient, and our noble end will yet be achieved.

Communications.

THE TRUE CONCEPTION OF RELIGION.

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1875.

MY DEAR INDEX:—

In your issue of Nov. 25, you make a statement which suggests to me that I am perhaps on the wrong train, and (premising that I do not mean to get out—because I do not believe that any excursion in your company can be bad) I would like to ask how the fact is. You say: "The inward self-consecration of our entire being to the pursuit of all ideal excellence is religion."

"The pursuit of excellence" refers, as the context shows, to ourselves and to humanity. We are to consecrate our entire being to attain ourselves, and help humanity to attain, the highest excellence which we can conceive; and that will be religion. In other words, if I understand you, religion is the effort to improve ourselves and society to the utmost, the object of our desire being in one case ourselves and in the other mankind.

Is this perfectly correct? Cannot a man do his utmost to realize his very limited idea of human nature, and yet, from the lowliness of that ideal, fail to be religious? It may be that his aiming at your ideal, after making it his own, would carry him into the sphere of religion; but it is not perfectly clear that mere fidelity to every ideal would do so.

The effort to perfect one's self must have its root in self. It is noble, manly, shows proper respect for his nature. It leads him to keep his body healthy and pure, to strengthen his intellect, expand his heart, and keep every faculty in working order. It commands him to be true to all visible relations, and to be alive to all that may be possible. It is, however, an effort for self, and, though it may embrace humanity as a sphere of exercise, still self-improvement is the object.

The effort to perfect mankind has a wider range and springs from a nobler source. The man who can forget his own perfection in his effort to raise his fellow-beings has risen to a very high stature. He is the true hero; but, wide as his sphere is, it is bounded by humanity. When he knows that he has done everything possible for him to do for the world, he can only feel that he has done his duty to it.

Such a man may find it a part of his work of perfection to remember his relations to the Infinite, and to make known the relations of mankind to the source of being; and virtue may detect no act omitted, no thought suppressed, no aspiration disregarded, which mere desire for self-improvement or the improvement of others suggested. Still that man's whole nature is not satisfied.

In the very outset he may have been all that I have supposed, and yet have been defective in the element of love. All that he has done may have been from different motives than losing himself in others. Giving himself away may have been the last mode of his activity. His self-consecration may have come from the "I ought" rather than the "I must." His sense of duty may be satisfied, but not his affections.

In the next place, is it cynical to say that, after all, our nature cannot be satisfied with either self or mankind? Is it true that the conviction that we have done all we could for ourselves, and men and women like us, will give us the peace that asks no more? Is duty so entirely sufficient? No; when all has been done, and the faithful worker looks over the field with the certainty that he has omitted no effort for himself or for mankind, his nature turns upwards. There is in him a wish for something greater than himself, a hope for a love larger than all human love, a beauty brighter than any human beauty, an energy more efficient than any of man or nature. He hopes, because he must hope, that there is a higher condition of being than this, and he rises toward it by an irresistible trust. Now this yearning and this trust do not necessarily enter into the effort of the man to perfect himself or elevate mankind to his ideal. They are of another class of emotions. They may possibly prove baseless, but we believe that they are based on reality, and are the foundation of thoughts, hopes, efforts, consolations, peace, that nothing else gives. They fill a world of their own, and are felt to be treasures not exchangeable for any other.

Is this distinction unreal? Is it unreasonable to class these feelings, aspirations, heart-promises, soul-communings, this trust in an unseen, spiritual, higher power, under the name of Religion, as distinguished from virtue on the one side and benevolence on the other?

For my purpose it is immaterial what men call this highest aim of love and intelligence; nor, if it can be accounted for, would that change my position. I only claim that, to satisfy our human nature, we must suppose something related to us higher than we, and that it is perfectly legitimate to separate the emotions which grow out of our faith in that supposed fact from our efforts to perfect ourselves or mankind.

If you think that I am rather late in asking these questions, I would say that I never had any difficulty in accepting your original definition with the liberty to construe it as I please, and that I have always made it include the aspiration to union with a higher nature. The words "pursuit of excellence," in the sentence quoted at the beginning of these remarks, seemed to preclude the aspiration of the emotions. Excuse length.

Yours very truly,

W. C. R.

MORE ABOUT THE CATHOLICS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Notwithstanding your strictures on my last article concerning "sectarian appropriations," I am convinced that our differences are more apparent than real, and arise in part from misunderstandings. Let us see if we cannot remove some of these misconceptions, and if we do not stand essentially on common ground.

In the first place, I think we are both convinced now that Republicans as well as Democrats have been guilty, in some localities, of consenting to sectarian appropriations; and that Democrats as well as Republicans are entitled to some credit for resisting such appropriations. As my object originally was to protest against an indiscriminate assault upon the Democratic party, as I thought, unjustly singled out for attack, it is so far accomplished.

I am ready to unite with the editor of THE INDEX, and all others, in attacking and defeating all men of whatever party or sect who favor an assault upon the integrity of our public school system. But I do not see the justice of holding either party, as a whole, responsible for the acts of a small minority of its members, which act it has since overwhelmingly repudiated at the polls.

The history of sectarian appropriations in this State does not seem to me to be a "secret history" at all, but a very plain and open history, known of all men. These appropriations were made by open vote and consent of representatives of both parties. There were years, during the reign of the infamous Tweed régime, when I believe no voice was raised in protest from either party in our State legislature. It may not be inappropriate to call attention here to the fact that Republicans as well as Democrats were participants in the spoils of the Ring, and Republicans as well as Democrats are now outlawed in foreign lands, where they have fled to escape the indignation of an outraged and aroused people.

The only "secret" about this whole matter of "sectarian appropriations," here or elsewhere, I opine, if rightly discovered, lies in the willingness of unscrupulous politicians of both parties to barter principles and public moneys for Catholic votes in localities where the Catholic element was powerful. But the people of both parties, when fairly aroused to their danger, have everywhere hurled these politicians from power, and trampled upon their evil deeds, and will continue to do so. Is it worth while to discuss which party was "ahead" in the race after Catholic votes, when they are now running a different race in the opposite direction? I think not.

I did not intend to be unfair in imputing to the editor of THE INDEX what I thought to be an unauthorized attempt to read Senator Kernan out of the Catholic Church. I coupled the editor's assertion that Mr. Kernan was not a "representative Catholic," with his other dictum that "whatever Catholics refuse to follow the lead of the Catholic clergy in the school question will simply be forced out of the Church." The readers of THE INDEX can best judge whether my reply was warranted by these assertions.

With Mr. Wasson's admirable essay, in the main, I heartily agree. I concur with him in the belief that the pretensions of the Catholic Church, "in anything like their full extent, neither are, nor in any proximate future, are likely to be, brought to the front in America"; and that "for excited alarm there seems to be no occasion."

Nor do I need all the documents to which the editor refers me, to prove what I have repeatedly admitted during this discussion, that the leaders in the Catholic Church, controlling probably a majority of its members in this country, would favor a division of the school fund, which is the practical destruction of the school system. The "imaginary onslaught" to which I referred was the supposed onslaught of the Democratic party,—which has never been made, and is never likely to be.

If THE INDEX will follow the excellent example of Mr. Wasson, and confine its attacks to those Catholic powers who are inclined to seek the destruction of our public school system, it will remove at once the cause of all my criticisms.

It is true that I am, as the editor of THE INDEX says, "living in the midst" of a Catholic community, the most powerful in this country. But I am living with my eyes and ears wide open, and my senses as alert for danger, I believe, as those of Mr. Wasson or the editor. Is it not possible that a closer contact with intelligent Catholic laymen than either Mr. Wasson or the editor probably enjoys, and a personal acquaintance with some of them, may render me better qualified to speak for them? I unhesitatingly reassert that there is a minority of Catholics, not insignificant in numbers, and most respectable in intelligence, who in any conflict between the authority of their priests and the integrity of our public school system will be found, as they have been when tested, patriotic enough to cast their influence and votes in our favor. Let us do these men no injustice.

In conclusion, I have to thank the editor of THE INDEX for the candid and amicable spirit in which he has treated my criticisms. Our aims seem to me to be essentially the same. Let us prosecute them earnestly, by all honorable means in our power. But let us confine our assaults to the real enemy, and stand by our friends, by whatever names they choose to call themselves.

Still believing that past experience renders it certain that any attack by the Catholics on our public schools would meet everywhere, as it always has met, the most overwhelming defeat, it seems to me that we would do best to bend all our energies to the more difficult task of placing our schools and entire governmental machinery upon a strictly secular basis. To this end let us labor, fairly and honestly.

Yours faithfully, LEWIS G. JANES.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18, 1875.

[The only point to which we need refer in the foregoing article is that concerning Senator Kernan. We made no "attempt to read Senator Kernan out of the Catholic Church." But we did mean (what we still mean) that he is not a representative Catholic in any sense; that he belongs to a class of semi-liberalized Catholics who are now tolerated for a purpose by the real masters of the Church, but who, as history proves, have not the least influence in modifying the inexorable policy of Rome; and that, when the time comes, Senator Kernan and all his liberal sympathizers will be either whipped into submission or excommunicated. But we have never assumed to excommunicate him.—ED.]

PEACE OR WAR.

TIPPECANOE CITY, Miami Co., Ohio, }
Dec. 2, 1875. }

All wars originate from differences of opinion. Among men, if we had no difference in opinion, the clash of war would never be heard. If we would look for the elements of war, we must look for them in differences of opinion on subjects for which, as history shows us, men will fight. Religion and politics are the two subjects which have been at the foundation of more wars than all others combined.

Is there no clashing of opinions on these subjects among us a nation? Hear what the Pope says: "There are those who do not hesitate, against the doctrines of the sacred Scriptures, of the Church, and holy fathers, to assert that that condition of society is best in which the civil power does not recognize the obligation to coerce by enacted penalties the violators of the Catholic religion, except so far as the public peace may require it. Proceeding from this totally false idea of social government, they do not fear to fasten that erroneous opinion, most fatal to the Catholic Church and to the salvation of souls, which was designated by our predecessor, Gregory XVI., of recent memory, as insane nonsense; namely, that liberty of conscience and worship is the personal right of every man, which ought to be protected by law, and asserted in every rightly constituted society."

I hope your correspondent, Mr. Janes, will notice that what the Pope here calls "insane nonsense" is to be found among what our Declaration of Independence calls self-evident truths, on which our government was founded, but which, it is to be regretted, has not been entirely administered. But will Catholics forget to maintain the above expressed opinions? Hear the Pope again: "But while they have the temerity to affirm this, they do not think and consider that they are preaching the liberty of perdition, and that, if it be always allowed to debate with human persuasions, there can never be wanting men who dare to resist the truth and put faith in the loquacity of human wisdom; whereas we know from the very institution of our Lord Jesus Christ how faith and Christian wisdom must avoid this most hurtful vanity." What is it the Pope here calls a most "hurtful vanity"? Simply, always trying to bring men into obedience to the Church by "persuasion." Persuasion alone won't do; for, if we depend on persuasion alone, "there will never be men wanting who will dare to resist the truth, and put faith in the loquacity of human wisdom,"—such loquacity as Tyndall, Darwin, and others, are now making use of!

We see that the Pope claims for the Catholic Church something stronger than "persuasion." We all know what comes next—war, prisons, fire and fagot, etc. "We have," says the Pope, "the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, the right to use them." Will they not use them when they think a favorable time presents? All history says they will. I would ask your correspondents: If you were the Pope, believing (as he professes to believe) that he is God's representative on earth, and to "save souls" is his divine mission, and, if not the only means, the only sure one is to propagate the Catholic faith and make men obey its dictates, would you not do so by all the means God had put in your power? Would you not be unfaithful to your trust if you did not? If the heads of the Catholic Church are honest, conscientious men, of course they will fight when a favorable opportunity presents; but, if they are scoundrels and hypocrites, they will fight for their ill-gotten power and position. Before fighting, however, they will use fraud, circumvention, and seduction; they will say to themselves, If the glory of God abounds through their lies, they should not be counted as sinners; and so they will become all things to all men, that they might save some.

It is said that Senator Kernan, of New York, is a very amiable and conscientious man, a true citizen, and devoted Catholic. I confess I can't see how any man can be a true believer in and supporter of the principles of our government, and a true believer in, and supporter of, the Catholic faith. Hear the Pope again: "These false and perverse opinions are the more to be detested because they chiefly tend to impede and remove that salutary power which the Catholic Church, according to the institution and commission of her Divine Master, should freely exercise to the end of time, not only over individual men, but over nations, peoples, and their sovereign rulers." Now add to this this other saying of the Pope: "It is insane nonsense to say that liberty of conscience and worship is the personal right of every man." Now I ask how any man can believe and practice all this, and at the same time believe and practice the doctrine (which is the doctrine our government is founded on) that liberty of conscience and worship is the personal right of every man, and that the Catholic Church has no right to exercise any power whatever over nations, peoples, and their sovereign rulers? These two positions are incompatible, so far as I can see; and how Senator Kernan can consistently hold both is quite too enigmatical for me to solve. But I can see how a fanatic and enthusiast, one who believes that he is God's special representative on earth, and that his chief business is to save souls, and that the way to do it is to make all men adopt and practice a particular faith,—I say I can see how such a person would use cunning, fraud, deception, circumvention, fire, fagot, gibbet, war, and all the atrocities of the Spanish Inquisition, to save souls from such a hell as we are told of. For what are all the above torments in comparison to endless burnings? I can also see how an adroit politician might set his sails so as to catch Democratic and Catholic breezes enough to waft his bark into a port of some fat office, and then very innocently ignore all the machinery at work in doing it. But how a man can serve God and mammon, I can't see. I think all who reflect will see, in looking over the whole ground, antagonistical ideas enough to breed a war. That the Catholics, in seeking to destroy our common schools, or break them up into sectarian schools, and uniting with any party which will help them do it, and give ninety-one per cent. of public money raised for churches and schools to the Catholic schools in which is taught the doctrine that "to say liberty of conscience and worship is the personal right of every man is insane nonsense,"—I say any one, in looking over all this, will see that the Catholics are getting greatly the advantage, in this war of ideas, over all others. They are making us all pay the expense of teaching all our children that our government is founded on "insane nonsense"; and in this way, when it comes to actual war, they hope to have the majority, and they will too, if we are all lulled to sleep by such speeches as that of Senator Kernan. I see the speech is acting strongly on some very good minds.

Here, to do the Catholics justice, we must say they make a very plain issue. They declare that "to say that liberty of conscience and worship is the personal right of every man is insane nonsense," and that "their Church has power, not only over the consciences of individual men, but over nations, peoples, and their sovereign rulers, which, by their Lord Jesus Christ, they have power to freely exercise to the end of time." We, as a nation, deny the whole of this, and have placed the very foundations of our government on such denial. They wish to destroy our foundation, and place our government on theirs. The Catholics begin very ingeniously to do this, and they are deserving of all praise for their ingenuity. In the first place they get church property exempt from taxation, and, Catholics being comparatively poor in property that can be taxed, but rich in church and school property which is not taxed, they are immensely the gainers in this transaction. I have made the estimate, as compared with other denominations, and the result, as a whole, is about this: on a supposition that there are ten dollars to be raised for churches, Catholics would pay two of the ten when raised, and on its distribution would get eight of the ten.

Again, Catholics have a control over their voting population which no other denomination has, and this vote they always keep in the market ready to be given to the party which will give most for it. Democrats have generally been the buyers; and the price paid is seen in the distribution of public funds raised some years ago in the city of New York, for church and school purposes,—Catholics getting ninety-one per cent. of all such funds, all other denominations and outsiders getting what was left! If there is a word said against such transactions, it is denounced as an effort to "stir up sectarian hate." Although we (Democrats and Catholics combined) did so once, we will do so no more; "we are all right now; and we will only ask that the school fund be divided, and that we have our share by ourselves." Any party that will do this for them will get their vote. We know the school fund is raised by tax on property, of which Catholics have comparatively but little to be taxed, but is to be divided according to the number of children, in which they are very rich. I don't blame them for this, for I consider it legitimate warfare; yet still it is a fact, if there were ten dollars to be raised for school purposes, what they would pay and receive would be for church purposes. All patriots want our common schools to which all children may be sent, that they may exchange salutations early, imbibe sentiments of respect for each other founded on moral worth and excellence, and exchange thoughts on any subjects that may come up in their plays and intercourse with each other; that we may become a fraternal, homogeneous people, and the bitterness of sectarian prejudice may be allayed. For such a purpose all patriots, as I think, are willing to be taxed. In the forcible and concise language of Gen. Grant, I say: "Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated for the support of sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State nor nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and State forever separate." Amen and amen—in which I think all patriots will join. But will Catholics? I don't mean "Catholic" politicians (for they will do anything), but the Pope, cardinals, bishops, priests, and people. E. L. CRANE.

PARAGRAPHS FROM A NOTE-BOOK.

Mere precedence may be of much account. No man shall ever have as many children as Adam. The important things of life are most apparent, and the earliest thinkers saw them and stated them, while now they may independently occur to every cultivated mind. The first poets made nearly all the most striking comparisons, and the first law-givers plainly knew the main-springs of the human heart. No axioms have been left for our modern mathematicians to tell, and much work original to the modern author or inventor he finds worthless, as having been done before by some one else.

The conservative admiration of the past is partly due to the fact that only the best of the past has survived, and is compared with the average present. The old cathedral remains, but the hovels that were beside it have gone.

A rolling stone gathers no moss; but how about a snow-ball?

How little charity is pure! Who takes any interest in a poor orphan child, if it has red hair and a squint?

Neighbor Hunks is divided in two parts: nine-tenths money and one-tenth Hunks. Friend Chippen has the same total, but nine-tenths is Chippen; he has invested most of his capital in human nature, in a kind heart, good temper, and joyous soul.

Some men are limestone men, and the wear and tear of life only reduces them; others are granite men and become polished, so that the arrows of outrageous fortune glance off from them.

In springtime, on Mount Royal, the wild lilies have to grow through the heavy layer of leaves strewn the autumn before. It is a lovely sight to see a tender green shoot separating a skeleton maple leaf, and lifting it as it unfolds. Fit emblem of the old, and the new gently replacing it.

Weeds after all are plants whose uses we do not yet know.

The lazy Mussulmans believe they have to see fate; the sturdy Calvinists that they have to make fate.

There may be compliment even in an unfavorable comparison. Tennyson's critics never praised him so much as when they said his Queen Mary was weak beside Shakespeare.

The moon can eclipse the sun; but it is only the moon after all, and it cannot do it very often.

Evil is a relative term, so is plague. I like to see a housefly in January; his impudence is then amusing, and quite harmless.

The notion that the end justifies the means was a mistake that arose from supposing anything to be an end. Average total effects are usually very different from a first immediate effect, and evil is apt to produce its like in the long run.

In this complex world, with its most intricate, moral questions, conscience cannot exist without intellect to solve its difficulties. Hence the supreme importance of education.

Art should not be unduly assisted by Nature. We do not want to see a real hunchback play Richard Third, nor a worn-out old man take King Lear's part. We want to see art exercised in assuming these characters, without detriment to their completeness and perfection.

Supernatural is an unmeaning word, as we find by replacing it with either equivalent,—super-usual or super-universal.

It may be that many a worthless fellow was born simply to be grandfather to somebody.

Small forces are unduly slighted. Lowering the vitality of a hundred people one per cent. is the same as killing a man; but the former crime is unnoticed in our cities, while the latter excites horror.

There can be a cant against cant. Some not over good men have made more by it than any hypocrite ever did by hypocrisy. The brazen fronts of some modern sinners suggest that hypocrisy may at times be even a virtue.

Considering the countless numbers that should in undisturbed geometrical ratio have been now alive of the human race, if of millions of possible men I am the only actual one, I think I should try to be somebody. Many of these possible men doubtless would, if they had my chance.

The warm, sudden kind of man turns cool soonest when hard work has to be done, just as boiled water freezes sooner than other.

A sanguine man sees the flowers in a field, a despondent man the weeds; both are there.

This hope, so great a mover of human hearts, has a sad history. It has usually been groundless and unsatisfied. It is painful to think that in the natural order it has been necessary to use phantoms to induce men to live and work. In these days as man copes more successfully with Nature, the dominion of hope is passing away.

Progress in one direction is limited by progress in others. Chemists are trying to build up compounds synthetically; they shall succeed when the masses of men are moral enough to be able to make alcohol and nitro-glycerine from their elements as easily as bread is made now, and yet not abuse them.

Mere segregation is often mistaken for evolution. The radicals, or reformers, or water-drinkers, scattered throughout a community, gather themselves together and imagine that as they see more of each other and hear more pleasant doctrine than they used to, radicalism, or what not, is growing in the community! Diffusion even may help evolution. The radicals of America do more work now, distributed as they are over the whole continent, than if they all lived, say in Boston, where they should radiate chiefly on each other.

The cross-currents retarding the progress of evolution are many and important. A kind of natural selection very unfavorable to evolution has been that by animals who have always taken the best attainable grasses and plants for food, and left only the poor sorts to propagate themselves. Similarly all beasts and birds of prey who capture by surprise, would select the sleekest and best of a group for a meal, leaving the sickly and thin alone. So on battle-fields the marks are chiefly the officers and generals who would be the severest loss. As societies evolve in mutual trust and confidence, they are liable to inevitable subtraction as the rewards of the liar and thief temptingly increase. There is sub-evolution in disease, burglary, and all crime and evil.

The imitation by young animals of the tricks and devices acquired by old ones is a kind of education which reinforces heredity and helps evolution.

The wonderful effects claimed by Spencer for use and disuse in parts of an organism may be verified by looking at our lengthened fingers and shortened toes. J. G. H.

MONTREAL, Dec. 20, 1875.

A MAN who lisped having bought some pigs, asked a neighbor for the use of a pen for a few days. Said he, "I have jutht been purchathing thome thwine—two thowth and pigth. I want to put them in your pen till I can fix a plaih for them." "Two thousand pigs!" exclaimed the astonished neighbor; "why, my pen will hardly hold a dozen!" "You don't understand me, Mr. Bent. I don't thay two thouthand pigth, but two thowth and pigth!" "I hear you," said Mr. Bent, "two thousand pigs! why, you must be crazy." "I tell you again," exclaimed the man angrily, "I mean not two thouthand pigth, but two thowth and two pigth!" "Oh, that is what you mean, eh? Well, the pen is at your service."

A WORN-OUT parent in Chicago has named his baby Macbeth, because he hath murdered sleep.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age," an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogmas	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	1.50
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Mental Science: A Compendium of Ethics	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition	1.00
1 vol	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKET (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Volumes. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects, Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses, By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts, Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition, 5 vols., each	1.00
Compromising	1.00
Adam Bede	1.00
Romola	1.00
The Mill on the Floss	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation	3.40
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMBERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image	2.00
The Marble Faun	2.00
The English Note-Books	2.00
The American Note-Books	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Portentous Essays	1.50
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Christianity on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Mornings of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Glorified Intellect	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection, and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Amos and Hosea	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace	3.00
By this Way	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government	2.25
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
Three Essays on Religion	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities	2.50
Three vols. 300 pages per volume. Antiquities	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASHY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle	1.50
Eckoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith, or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations	3.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theological and Practical Christianity	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Masters Pleading to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans—Washington, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite	1.90
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trolly Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged in	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Coloured Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	$1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair	1.25
The Newcomes	1.25
Adventures of Philip	1.25
Pendennis	1.25
The Virginians	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, and adds much making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Noels, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.00
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI., each	.75
The Voyage Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Sauterlings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Wives and Daughters	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I. METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II. PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

§ 1. Property as a Natural Right.
§ 2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
§ 3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III. LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

§ 1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
§ 2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.

§ 3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
§ 4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.

§ 5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.

§ 6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
§ 7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.

§ 8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV. THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I. § 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II. § 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3 50

Price in Full Calif. blue, gift edge.....6 50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

MONETARY LABOR REFORM.

AND THE

MECHANISM OF EXCHANGE.

BY

PROF. W. STANLEY JEVONS, M.A., F.R.S.

A new and thoroughly scientific treatise, giving a clear and simple exposition of the "past and present monetary systems of the world," the materials employed to make money, the natural laws which govern their circulation, the several modes in which they may be replaced by the use of paper documents, and, finally, the method in which the use of money is immensely economized by the cheque and clearing system now being extended and perfected.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.—Barter.
" 2.—Exchange.
" 3.—The Functions of Money.
" 4.—Early History of Money.
" 5.—Qualities of the Material of Money.

" 6.—The Metals as Money.
" 7.—Coins.
" 8.—The Principles of Circulation.
" 9.—Systems of Metallic Money.
" 10.—The English System of Metallic Currency.

" 11.—Fractional Currency.
" 12.—The Battle of the Standards.
" 13.—Technical Matters relating to Coinage.

" 14.—International Money.
" 15.—The Mechanism of Exchange.
" 16.—Representative Money.
" 17.—The Nature and Varieties of Promissory Notes.

" 18.—Methods of Regulating a Paper Currency.
" 19.—Credit Documents.
" 20.—Book Credit and the Banking System.

" 21.—The Clearing House System.
" 22.—The Cheque Bank.
" 23.—Foreign Bills of Exchange.
" 24.—The Bank of England and the Money Market.

" 25.—A Tabular Standard of Value.
" 26.—The Quantity of Money Needed by a Nation.

Sent post-paid on receipt of $1.50, by THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading.... The story is told in a very graphic style.... Mr. Holyoake... is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PAINE HALL ASSEMBLIES.

EVERY WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The course of Social Parties, under the direction of the Managers of the PAINE MEMORIAL BUILDING, for the benefit of that edifice, will be continued every Wednesday evening till further notice.

Good Music has been engaged, and attentive Aids and Floor Managers have charge of the Assemblies, and no pains will be spared to make them attractive.

Tickets 50 cents each, admitting Gentleman and Ladies.

All Liberal friends are invited to give the enterprise their patronage and encouragement.

J. P. MENDUM,
HORACE SEAVEY, } Directors.
T. L. SAVAGE,

BOSTON, Dec. 22, 1875.

MUSICAL GIFTS FOR CHRISTMAS.

MUSICAL GIFTS FOR NEW YEAR'S.

Gems of English Song! 75 of the best songs extant, collected in a handsome volume of 232 (music size) pages. With elegant gilt binding, $4.00. In cloth, $3.00. In boards, $2.50.

Uniform in style, price, and binding with the above splendid book, we have other books of "Gems," German, Scottish, and Sacred; also, of best Irish melodies, and the choicest Operatic Songs.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS. By Howard. 38 cts.
ANTHEM. There were Shepherds. Millard. 75 cts.

MERRY CHRISTMAS. Piano piece. Wilson. 60 cts.

Rejoice the hearts of the Old Folks with Centennial Collection for Old Folk's Concerts. 40 cts. By E. Tourjee.

Gladden your Sabbath-school by introducing Shining River. One of the sweetest of song-books.

Order the above books of any of the principal music dealers, or by mail (enclosing retail price), of

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets to Course, One Dollar.

Jan. 2. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The Soul of Transcendentalism."

Jan. 9. M. D. CONWAY.

"The Natural History of the Devil."

Jan. 16. J. W. CHADWICK.

"Thomas Paine."

Jan. 23. D. A. WASSON.

"Radical Formalism."

Jan. 30. T. W. HIGGINSON.

"The Meeting of Extremes."

Feb. 6. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"Modern Scientific Materialism: its Meaning and Tendency."

Feb. 13. BISHOP MCQUAID.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Catholic American Citizen."

Feb. 20. F. E. ABBOT.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."

Feb. 27. Prof. FELIX ADLER.

"The Old Testament in the Light of Modern Criticism."

Mar. 5. Mrs. E. D. CHENEY.

"The Religious Life of Michael Angelo."

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, H. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.
Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

THREE DAY
CIRCULATION

578

GTU Library
2400 Ridge Road
Berkeley, CA 94709
For renewals call (510) 649-2500
All items are subject to recall.

